It is when we think of you in such circumstances — when you wouldn't be allowed the privilege of final exams—that our sympathies come to fore. How thankful must you be that here at UNC you are not discriminated against, you are treated equally with the freshmen, sophomores and juniors of the University. With you, we bow our heads in gratitude.

FOR THE OTHERS—You, the disheartened, the we-know-not-where-we-stand group, need not worry. You are tempered in the test which faces you once again. Yours is the best of all positions on campus, for you have everything to lose and nothing to gain. If you pass the test, your status as sophomore, junior or senior is affirmed. If you fail, the draft has recently been increased.

Above all, work hard and apply yourselves these next 10 days. And don't become depressed when camera bugs start snapping your picture in front of South Building—though some of you have been here a long time, the Old Well still is the historic attraction of the campus.

Dixie, Education Revere Gen. Lee

Dixie and education join hands today in celebrating the birthday of a never-to-be-forgotten friend and leader—Gen. Robert E. Lee.

The man as legend has been purveyed in hundreds of novels, histories and biographies. His memory still is cherished by those who know him as the real American he was.

Gen. Lee was a respected man, a man who had the deepest compassion for those who served under him. With Dixie his name is synonymous—all that is and all that was the South and its heritage is Gen. Lee.

And it is well to remember in these trying times that Gen. Lee was a brave American whose life was strength to American education and a buttress to that democracy which we sometimes possess without respect.

He shall not soon be forgotten.

She'll Have Time

Miss Elsie May Peters is a teacher who has taught in Knoxville's schools for 24 years. That is a long time and Miss Peters apparently has learned a number of cunning tricks. It may be, too, that Miss Peters is a teacher who has begun to worry about security.

At any rate, she is accused by the parents of one pupil of "swapping good grades for green trading stamps and selling vitamin pills to children at lunchtime." Perhaps the vitamin pills are just what the growing pupil needs but she also is charged, before the school board, with maritime language and with warping, to suit herself, the system of measuring IQ's.

Miss Peters, thus far, has refused to comment other than to say, "I am to busy carrying out my teaching assignments."

She obviously is busy at something, anyway; but, soon, she may have more time on her hands. — The Durham Sun

Jackie Paris Does His Best In New Record

The release of Columbia's Modern Jazz Perspective, by the Gigi Gryce - Don Byrd Jazz Lab is significant in many ways. The music, while not the best, is an interesting attempt by a group of modern jazzmen to deliniate and pay tribute to the roots which spawned them, although it is less successful than the Bob Brookmeyer - Jimmy Giuffre Pacific Jazz release, Traditionalism Revisited.

Most significant, however, is the debut of Jackie Paris on his first major label. While he has made two recordings for lesser companies, he has never been given more than token recognition by the public. This record could be his biggest break to date.

I am not entirely sure that I approve of the manner in which the Jazz Lab has utilized his talents. He sings on three of the eight numbers recorded, but does not vocalize in the accepted way. All of his vocals are wordless. The only one that seems to me really successful is "Early Morning Blues," a tribute to the basic blues that fostered jazz. The others are in the Dave Lambert, Slam Stewart tradition of frantic bop vocalizing and do not seem to fit the Paris tenor.

My interest in the record, however, is not purely musical. For some unexplainable reason I have long felt an emotional tie with Paris which cries for his acceptance as a popular jazz singer. This is actually rather easy to understand, since his talents are almost limitless. Besides being an excellent singer, he is a good enough hoofer to have danced with Bojangles Bill Robinson at the tender age of six, was one of the leading bop guitarists until he gave up the instrument, and to boot is an extremely handsome person. In other words, the perfect leading man for someone's musical comedy.

His singing style leans toward ballads, as is shown by the acceptance of his "Skylark" as a jazz standard. He is a tenor, with excellent tone and phrasing. All the materials for a top-flight popular vocalist are present; it is only publicity that is lacking. At present he is in such hard straits that he is working as a messenger boy for a New York brokerage.

Happily, he has signed a contract with Atlantic records, perhaps the best jazz recording company, and is working on an album with a trio. If this is anything like his top work it should sell very well and make a lot of friends for a singer who needs friends.

The paradoxical thing about Paris is that most jazzmen consider him a better singer than Sinatra and would do anything they could to help him along. But Paris refuses to sing commercial stuff; he loves jazz and wants to sing it. And to be stamped a jazz singer by Madison Avenue is sure death and damnation.

VIEW FROM THE HILL

The Time Of Crisis Is Present

If people bothered to open the pages of this week's Newsweek, one would find a fairly complete report on the U.S. status in the world as opposed to Russia. In the field of defense, this report is a shocker.

The magazine released certain statistics in diagrammatic form which showed the United States behind Russia in manpower, submarines, missile development, and missiles bases. The U.S. was ahead by a scant 1000 planes in aircraft development, when total aircraft development runs to over 25,000 planes. The U. S. also runs ahead in surface sea craft, which are rapidly becoming obsolete.

What is more important is the commentary to go along with the diagram. Candid comments indicate that the U. S. could very well lose a limited war, and that the sole balance of power that the U. S. has over the Russians in the event of an all-out war, is the retaliatory power of the Strategic Air Command. What was further pointed out in the article was that at the time that Russia develops an effective anti-aircraft missile, the retaliatory power of the U. S. is neutralized, and the ability of Russia to control the contest in the event of a total war is almost assured.

If this account makes one stop and wonder, the account of one western observer at the November 7, Moscow parade is even more devastating. He said that even if the U. S. defense establishment received all that it asked, it would not be able to stage such a demonstration within five years. This means, in that observer's view, that the U .S. will be unable to catch up with the Russians in all probability, let alone regain the balance of power.

The net impression of the article seems to be that with all the constructive methods that the US is now trying to establish within its defense establishment and within the realm of added appropriation, the Russian aggressiveness and alertness, as Newsweek put it, would keep the U. S. from being in a commanding lead.

Couple this fact with the fact that the Russians are graduating twice as many scientists from schools of higher learning than the U. S. is, and there remains a picture that is quite bleak for the U. S.

The point is that the U. S. must now cut the red tape that causes so much delay and costs so much money. The U. S. must to a great degree centralize its defense establishment.

Moreover, it must press harder than ever on missile and submarine development, and renew interest in such projects as weather control.

Then general problems of U. S. control of space should be attacked with vigor, since it is generally conceded now that he who controls space can undoubtedly control the world.

The underlying problem of American education must be attacked, since this is the source of the majority of troubles, due to the fact that what America is breeding now is a race of group centered individuals, who are afraid to take one constructive step on the possibility that their foot will get chopped off. The U. S. needs scientists, engineers, mathematicians, public servants, educators, and people of creative talent in every field. One billion dollars spread over four years will not bring this into reality.

Out of all this comes the singular fact that it is indeed unfortunate that at this time of stress, there is a Republican administration. For attached to the label Republican is the idea of conservativism, which is that facet of public life that is needed least at this point. Radical changes in outlook are necessary. Taxes must go up. Restrictive trade barriers must fall, and centralization is at this point imperative. These things a Republican administration is as a matter of policy opposed to.

It has often been said that democracy reacts well to crises; the problem is now to show that crises are not necessarily started by wars and depression. The cold hard fact is that now is a time of extreme crisis.

South Africa Has Her Integration Problems

MARY MOORE MASON

"You think you have integration problems! You should visit the Union of South Africa."

The short, intense boy looked across the Grail Room table at the three Negro students, the girl from Sweetbriar and the three UNC students.

"At least your constitution has a Bill of Rights in it," he continued, "Ours is a negative constitution, containing no Bill of Rights and rather debarring certain rights. You have to live up to your constitution: we feel rather like we have to live ours down."

This was Neville Rubin, white president of the student body of Capetown University, vice president in charge of international relations of the National Student Union, and representative to America for the World University Service.

"What type of work are you now doing in the United States," he was asked.

"The South African Parliament is on the verge of passing a law completely segregating the four remaining segregated universities in the country," he explained. "The African government, of Dutch origin, which is now in power, plans to set up completely segregated schools for the colored Africans.

"These schools will be based on tribal distinctions with the staff and administration appointed by the government which will also have the power to dismiss students on any charge of a misdemeanor.

"This means that colored Africans who want to go into medicine will have to go to these newly formed, segregated schools. I am now in the United States as an agent of the Medical Scholarship Trust Fund, a fund to give African natives, as some people call them, who want to study medicine scholarships to the Universities before this rule is passed."

"What does the term, 'African native' mean?" said one of the Negro boys.

"We have five different categories of people in South Africa: English speaking whites, African speaking whites, Indians, colored people (products of mixed birth), and Africans who are members of the indigenous African tribes. These last the white people call natives. So you are, in the government's terms, 'a foreign native.'

I asked Neville if there is much of a need for African doctors in his country.

"A need," he said, with his eyes blazing. "We now have only 60 Negro doctors for nine million people. There are 1,500 white doctors, but they usually serve the Africans only half time if at all. The average life expectancy is 36.4 years, and 15,000 people die of tuberculosis every year."

I wondered why the government was considering such legislation until Neville explained to me the basic philosophy of the white minority of 30% of the total population. It seems that they have not a Separate-But-Equal doctrine but rather a Separate Development doctrine. Under this doctrine the ultimate goal is for complete separation of races into territories according to race with internal self government. The reasoning for this is supposedly as each culture will develop its culture to the fullest extent. If there is integration, the feeling is that each race couldn't develop its own culture. Consequently, each race comes under separate rules and laws.

"My father is one of the four Senate representatives who represent the African people. They can have no Negro representatives. "However," he said somewhat bitterly, "the Negroes are allowed to elect 4 out of 89 Senators to represent nine million Negroes. The 12¼ million are represented by the other 85 representatives."

The other students, both Negro and white, and I began to wonder immediately what the South Africans thought of the racial conflict in the United States.

We discovered, much to our surprise, that America is best known by its jazz. "The papers tell of America, but of course many of the Negroes can't read, the government controls the broadcasting system and also bans many books and refuses passports to great American Negroes like Ralph Bunche, but they can't put a ban on jazz. The Negro Africans are extremely impressed that colored entertainers in your country can sing in white night clubs."

Of course, the questions of Communism arose eventually, and Neville explained to us that it was not too strong now, but that if the government continued to pass legislation like that about the segregated, government-controlled schools that the people might turn to organizations that offered them an equal chance in life, that promised to give their country back to them.

"Lately we have been having a government purge against all those suspected of treason against the government. Among the 156 people of all nations arrested are ministers, the President of the African National Congress and people suspected of being Communists. There is little evidence against them. One man was arrested for being a Communist for saying to a friend, 'Pass the tea, comrade.'"

I was impressed that men like Neville and his father were fighting against this government for reforms for the African people, but I also wondered about what positive action they were taking.

"It is slow," Neville said softly, "but then the Liberal Party, the inter-racial party which we belong to, is yet small. However, it is growing, and does afford an opportunity for Africans to see that there is a group where they can associate and talk with interested and dedicated whites."

As he got up to leave for a talk with Mrs. Roosevelt about the United Nations, he told us excitedly that there was something definite that his party had done. "We got the school segregation legislation postponed for 18 months," he proclaimed, "which was no minor achievement. And now we will have time to raise scholarships for these Negro medical students and get them in school before the bill is passed. They can stay in school then till they finish in six years."

"We are going to be able to do this because of the aid of American and other interested students. Many of our white students at home want multi-racial schools and have paid themselves for scholarships for Negroes in the past. However, what South Africa needs most is a Bill of Rights and constitutional reforms. This is what we are working toward slowly and we hope surely. Maybe someday the South Africans will be able to have their own government and a multi-racial democracy. Otherwise, will Communism be what the people will choose as the solution to their misery and inequality in their own country? I hope not."

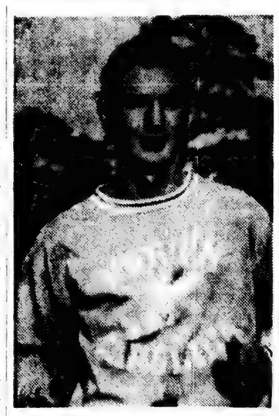
Tar Heels Hit Comeback Trail Against Clemson Today At 2

Bishop Competes In Boston Tonight



By CHARLIE HOWSON

Carolina's own Wayne Bishop, undefeated in cross-country competion this year, will be running with the best of them tonight in the Knights of Columbus indoor track meet at Boston.

Bishop will be competing in the two-mile distance category on the indoor boards. One of his competitors may be Ron Stieglitz of Connecticut, who beat Carolina's Jim Beatty last year in the Penn Relays.

Among his many honors, Bishop set a track record at Clemson this season and was leading the ACC championships at Wake Forest before having to drop out because of a bad knee. The knee has plagued the smooth striding Bishop most of his career. It was the reason that he couldn't compete his sophomore year, and it prevented him from winning several races this year as he was forced to drop out while holding the lead.

The Carolina track team will conclude a week of time trials this afternoon in the haurdles and dashes at 2:00.

ACC Contest To Be On Regional TV

By DAVE WIBLE

With a two game losing streak hanging over their heads the Carolina Tar Heels will invade Clemson College this afternoon at 2 o'clock to do battle with the up and coming Clemson Tigers in a regionally televised contest.

It will be the second and final scheduled meeting between two clubs this season. The first game was way back in December when they met in Woollen Gym to open the season. The Tar Heels, whose last opponent then was Kansas, were all set for another undefeated season and gave the Tigers a sound 79-55 licking without much trouble.

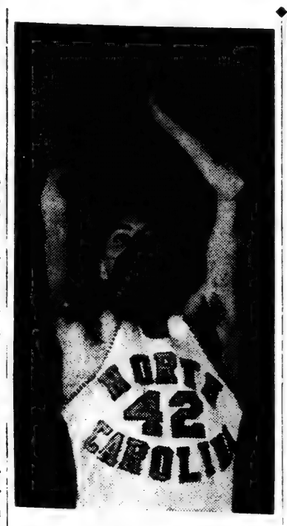
Things Are Different

A lot has happened since that Clemson meeting and Tar Heel fans well know it. An Irishman with a crystal ball, Frank McGuire, predicted before that game that this would not be another spotless year for the Heels and, in fact, a 9-5 record would be enough to win the conference title.

So the Irishman predicted and so it came (or is coming) about. The Tar Heels have lost and now stand 8-3. The Tigers have lost also, but on the win side of their 6-7 record is a victory over Maryland the present conference leader and a Carolina killer.

Tigers Are Ready

The hot and cold Tigers will be gunning for the National Champs tomorrow and their coach, Press Maravich, believes his charges can do the trick. "We have to be right mentally for this game," Maravich said "But I firmly believe that we can beat this North Carolina team."



Maravich has plenty of reason to believe as he does for besides the vast improvement of his club and especially his big guns, forward Vince Yockle and guard Ed Brinkley, he will have the home court advantage which in Clemson's cracker-box means a great deal. They are undefeated at home this year and dropped only one home game last season.

Tar Heels Need Range

The Tar Heels are due to find the range to the bucket this afternoon, something they have been unable to calculate in their past two starts. Against State Wednesday night they hit only 16 of 48 shots for a .33 per cent and at the foul line they were especially off making 25 of 42.

McGuire will probably use five of his top six to start today's game but whether he will start Dick Kepley or Harvey Salz is anyone's guess. Kepley will join Pete Brennan, Lee Shaffer, Tommy Kearns and Bob Cunningham if he wants height, but Salz will replace Kepley if he needs speed.

After today's game, the Tar Heels will take 13 days off for exams and will not see action until Feb. 1, when they will meet the Gamecocks of South Carolina at Columbia.

Grapplers Topped By VMI Teams

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Oscar Gupton's Keydets from Virginia Military Institute showed the crowd at Woollen Gym last night why they are the Southern Conference wrestling champions as they took the varsity and freshman meets by scores of 26-6 and 23-15.

In the varsity contest only two Tar Heels were able to overcome their visiting opponents. Carolina's Perrin Henderson added another victory to his string by scoring a 9-1 decision over Larry Wood in the 137 pound event. The other Tar Heel win was picked up by J W. Welborn in the 147 bout where he shut out Bryne Kane 3-0.

In three other varsity events Tar Heel wrestlers were leading before they were flipped and eventually pinned. Hal Sprinkle came from behind to pin Jack Gray in the final period. Carolina captain Kenny Hoke was leading Gene King 3-0 in their 167 bout before being reversed and pinned. Rob Boyette was ahead of Don Basham, Southern Conference heavyweight champ, 6-2 before he too fell victim to a fall.

In the preliminary contest the VMI Rats edged the Tar Heel frosh 23-15 by taking three falls, one decision and a forfeit. Chip Woodrum, John Matney, and Gordon Hurley had pins for the Tar Babies.

VARSITY SUMMARY

123—White (VMI) decisioned Champlin (8-0); 130—Walker (VMI) pinned Rhyne (6:45); 137—Henderson (C) decisioned Wood (9-1); 147—Welborn (C) decisioned Kane (3-0); 157—Sprinkle (VMI) pinned Gray (3:37); 167—King (VMI) pinned Hoke (2:23); 177—Baker (VMI) decisioned Atkinson (6-3); Heavyweight—Basham (VMI) pinned Boyette (3:27)

Med School Is Campus Champ

Medical School took the Zeta Psi fraternity in two straight games yesterday afternoon to emerge as the campus volleyball champions.

Paced by Frank White, the med boys racked up scores of 15-10 and 15-12 to take the hard-fought victory. The Medical School won the right to compete in the championships by winning a close contest from the Peacocks in the grad division.

Zeta Psi defeated the champions of last year, ATO, for the championship in the Fraternity division. In the campus playoffs, Zeta Psi defeated the Sigma Nu team, winners of the Fraternity White division, to win the right to play med school who defeated Victory Village, winners of the dormitory division.

Classic Makes Record Profit

Raleigh, (AP) — Teams which participated in the Ninth Annual Dixie Basketball Classic received a record payoff this week, Roy B. Clogston, State College Athletic Director, reported yesterday.

Clogston said that including their travel and expense allowances athletic departments of the eight schools received the following amounts for the three-day holiday event:

St. Louis University, $9,953.81; Northwestern, $9,453.81; Seton Hall, $8,859.27; Duquesne, $8,820.77; Wake Forest College $8,090.13 with Duke, Carolina and State receiving $8,013.81 each.

Attendance at the Classic, which Carolina won by defeating State 39-30 in the finals, totaled 69,200.

Next year's 10TH Annual Classic will be played Dec. 29-31, and Yale, Michigan State, Cincinnati and Louisville have accepted invitations to participate. They will be matched against North Carolina's big four State, Carolina, Wake Forest and Duke.

Foxx Gets Help

NEW YORK, (AP) — Jimmy Foxx, jobless and destitute after dissipating his quarter of a million dollar baseball earnings, is looking forward to what he terms "the start of a new life" at the age of 50.

The former American League home run and batting king, brought here for a television show after it had been revealed he was broke and unable to pay his rent, told The Associated Press that offers of jobs and financial help had come after news of his plight had been made public.

"My wife just called me from Miami," Foxx said, as tears came to his eyes, "and she informed me of the many telegrams that arrived this morning. A number of them contain offers of jobs. I can't tell you how overjoyed I am . . . and how grateful.

JOB FACTS FROM DU PONT
DU PONT
BETTER THINGS FOR BETTER LIVING

ROOM TO GROW

by R. G. Alleman, Du Pont Representative

There's plenty of room to grow at Du Pont. One reason is that the very diversity of our products and processes requires specialists in almost every area of science and engineering. Another reason is that Du Pont continues to expand in many new directions.

For example, in 1957 sales reached $2 billion. Four new plants were being built. New research projects were launched, new products marketed.

In 1957, too, new technical men joined Du Pont in chemical, civil, mechanical, metallurgical, electrical, industrial, petroleum and many engineering fields, in atomic energy, instrumentation, chemistry, physics, mathematics and many other fields.

All this activity points to as bright a future today as ever before in our long history. There's a place for the good graduate in this picture. If you would like more specific information on opportunities at Du Pont, we invite you to sign up for a Du Pont interview with your placement director.

Personalized Training Relates to Policy of Promotion from Within

Where do your interests lie? What courses have you taken? What are your special abilities? Du Pont tries to match these factors with available jobs to determine your first job assignment within the Company.

Once the assignment is made, the Company helps you apply your knowledge to a problem right away. You learn by doing—in consultation with your supervisor and others working on various phases of the same project. Your performance on the job is evaluated periodically, so you always know where you stand in the eyes of your management.

As you might guess, Du Pont's personalized training is closely related to its promotion policy. Almost all advancement is made from within the Company, so if your supervision has indicated that you are ready for promotion, and an opening occurs for which your training has prepared you, you are sure to be considered.

Although Du Pont employs about 90,000 people, management authority is decentralized through many departments into small groups—small enough so that the new man's capabilities can be recognized quickly. This type of organization, plus the Company's steady growth, produces many opportunities for the new man.

Du Pont, over the past 25 years, has spent $1 on research for every $3 on production facilities.

DU PONT SUMMER JOB GIVES YOU A CHANCE TO EARN AND LEARN

Du Pont offers college juniors and qualified sophomores in technical fields the opportunity to earn college expense money this summer while they learn more about the kind of work that will be open to them when they graduate.

The Company has 75 plants and 93 laboratories located across 26 states—a spread that often gives the student a chance to work in or near his own section of the country. Some of these locations have openings for summer employment in 1958.

Students work side by side with practicing engineers and scientists. In this way they gain valuable experience to supplement classroom theory.

Last year, 107 students from 113 colleges took advantage of this program. Du Pont pays round-trip transportation expenses from home or school to place of employment. Students are not obligated to continue with the Company after graduation.

Booklets on jobs at Du Pont are yours for the asking. Tar Heels Return To Basketball Wars: Will Face South Carolina Gamecocks

Bumpy Road Is Ahead For Talented Champs

By BILL KING

COLUMBIA, S. C. North Carolina's national cage champs return to the basketball wars against South Carolina here tonight in their first action since Jan. 18 at Clemson. Tipoff time is 8 o'clock.

The Tar Heels, now 12-3 on the season, closed the first semester with a 90-81 victory over the Tigers then settled down for a ten-day battle with the blue books. But now Carolina is back on the trail and it could be a bumpy trek as Frank McGuire's talented club drives down the home stretch in defense of its NCAA title.

Second Meeting

This is the second meeting between these two clubs this season. The Tar Heels bowled over South Carolina 70-58 in Chapel Hill, Dec. 14.

● The Gamecocks have had a tough go of it this season, compiling a 4-10 overall record to date. Frank Johnson's young club has been able to gain but two victories in ACC competition while losing six. The Tar Heels have a 5-2 conference mark, having lost to Maryland and N. C. State. South Carolina has beaten Clemson and Duke.

Tonight's game, like all the rest of the Tar Heel's ACC tilts the rest of the way, is of vital importance as the Chapel Hillians battle to gain the top spot in the ACC going into the conference tournament March 6-8. This would put the Tar Heels in the easier bracket and would probably avoid a clash with Maryland or N. C. State until the finals. These two powers are considered the top threats to Carolina's crown, but Duke's recent win over West Virginia has thrown the Blue Devils back into the limelight.

Could Be Tough

South Carolina is still considered a giant-killer despite its poor record. The Gamecocks have been a bit erratic all season but nobody is looking at them with "pushover" in mind.

"We beat them on our home court," McGuire commented recently," but things could be a lot different in Columbia. I only hope we can pick up where we left off before exams."

Tonight's test should give good indication as to what affect the over two weeks idleness had on the Tar Heels. South Carolina has played once since exams, losing to a strong Furman team Thursday night. The Tar Heels started working out for this contest the first of this week.

Starters

McGuire is expected to start with three sophomores again tonight, along with veterans Pete Brennan and Tommy Kearns. Brennan and Lee Shaffer will start at forward, Dick Kepley at center and Kearns and Harvey Salz at guards. Salz has replaced defensive star Bob Cunningham at guard because Salz furnishes more scoring power, but the veteran Cunningham is sure to see plenty of action.

Senator Humphrey Picked As Keynoter

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) has been announced as keynote speaker for the 8th annual North Carolina Conference on World Affairs, to be held on the campus Feb. 12-13.

Dr. Guion Johnson, program chairman, announced that Senator Humphrey will speak on Wednesday, Feb. 12, at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

"Mutual Understanding in the Nuclear Age" is the theme of the two-day conference, which is sponsored by the UNC Extension Division and 20 statewide organizations. Humphrey's speech will be the first event followed by formal registration on Thursday morning, Feb. 13.

A full day of discussion sessions has been scheduled for Feb. 13. Chancellor William B. Aycock will welcome the delegates at the first morning session in Carroll Hall.

A panel of foreign students will speak during the morning, with Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House as moderator.

Five discussion leaders and their topics, centered on the "Mutual Understanding" theme, are as follows: Dr. John Gulick, UNC anthropologist, "Middle East—Uneasy Truce;" Dr. Wiley D. Forbus, Duke Medical School pathologist, "The United States and the Far East;" McNeill Smith, Greensboro attorney, "World Disarmament—A Challenge to National Sovereignty;" Dr. Lucy Morgan, UNC health educator, "Delicate Friendships—A Struggle to Win the Uncommitted Nations;" and Dr. Paul Marrotte, Davidson College historian, "Current Streams in American Foreign Policy."

SUMMATION

Other prominent educators from Chapel Hill, Durham and other North Carolina cities will serve as resource consultants for these talks. A summation of the conference will be given late in the afternoon by Dr. B. Frank Hall, pastor of Pearsall Memorial Presbyterian Church in Wilmington.

A highlight of the conference will be a luncheon meeting on Feb. 13 at the Carolina Inn, under the auspices of the N. C. Council of Women's Organizations. Mrs. J. R. Ellis of Chapel Hill is luncheon chairman.

Groups Needing Additional Funds Should Contact Student Treasurer

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Any student organization interested in initiating aid from student government funds should contact Bob Carter, treasurer of the student body, before Feb. 15.

Carter said that he was sending letters to the treasurers of the 28 organizations now receiving student government funds to inform them of a hearing to be held by the budget committee.

Lasting a month, these hearings are conducted by the committee in order to draw up a budget for the coming fiscal year which begins June 7, 1958.

The committee will evaluate the proposed budgets of the organizations item by item. Then the budget will be presented to the finance committee of the Student Legislature for its approval.

Legislature Approval

The approved budget will then be presented to the current assembly of the Legislature for its approval at the last meeting before spring elections.

Carter is the head of the student government committee which is composed of 10 other students, one of whom must be a member of the Student Legislature and another who is chairman of the student audit board.

Carter estimated that the budget committee will have around $121,000 with which to work. This money comes from student fees; the undergraduates each pay $18 and graduate students $14.65.

The budget can be amended from the floor of the legislature, or, if after the buaget has been put into effect and an organization feels it needs more money, it can have a bill introduced to get it a special appropriation.

Surplus Funds

Any surplus which an organization may have left at the end of the fiscal year reverts back to the General Fund.

Carter said that the student government now has $2,645.76 in unappropriated funds. There is also a cash surplus of $14,729.47 which has accumulated through the years.

news in brief

U. S. Satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Jan 31—The U. S. first earth satellite was launched tonight at approximately 10:50.

The Radio Corporation of America in New York announced a few minutes later that it had monitored the object's beep-beep signal.

The American sputnik was described as being approximately 6 inches in diameter, 80 inches long and weighed 20 pounds. It is believed that the Army's Jupiter-C missile was the launching vehicle used.

Big Missile

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31 (AP)—Government intelligence experts reported today they had some evidence Russia has fired a big missile into outer space.

They said this missile might have thrust a third and bigger Soviet satellite into the heavens but they acknowledged they were not sure.

No government department or agency was willing to say on the record that it knew positively the Soviets had launched what was described as a very large missile.

These authorities, however, who usually keep close check on Soviet developments, said evidence they have received seems pretty good to them.

Defense Fund

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31 (AP)—The Senate Appropriations Committee approved an emergency defense fund of $1,410,000,000 today and Chairman Hayden (D-Ariz) said in effect there was more where that came from.

If the Pentagon decides it needs more money before Congress acts on the defense budget for fiscal 1959, Hayden said, "We are ready to give it to them."

The committee voted unanimously in favor of a bill to finance stepped-up missile production and improve the nation's air defenses. The money will be available in the current fiscal year, which ends June 30.

Union

CAIRO, Jan. 31 (AP)—The presidents of Syria and Egypt will proclaim, perhaps on Sunday, the union of their two countries.

Shukri Kuwatly, 65-year-old President of Syria, and Gamal Abdel Nasser, 40-year-old President of Egypt, met twice today, putting final touches to the formal proclam-

Summer School Will Offer Varied Program

The 1958 Summer Session at UNC scheduled in two terms from June 5-July 15 and July 16-August 23, will offer a wide variety of both graduate and undergraduate courses.

Prof. Guy B. Phillips, director, announced today details for the summer's study, which will include a number of special conferences, institutes, workshops and recreational activities.

Financial aid for prospective summer students was stressed by Phillips, who described a number of scholarships and loan funds available.

Science, Math Teachers

The National Science Foundation is again sponsoring a six-week Institute for High School Science and Mathematics Teachers on June 9-July 18. Sixty participants will receive stipends of $450 each, plus allowances for dependents and travel, and they will pay no tuition or fees.

North Carolina teaching personnel are eligible for 40 scholarships, valued at $100 each, to be given by the University's Scholarship Committee. Dean Arnold Perry of the UNC Education School is handling applications.

Scholarship Loans

Some 200 summer school scholarship loans, not to exceed $75 each, are open to prospective teachers and teachers taking undergraduate courses to qualify for a certificate. Applications are being handled by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction in Raleigh.

Expanded course offerings for teachers in the field of special education have been arranged, Director Phillips said. Graduate students and some advanced undergraduates may take the classes which emphasize speech correction and teaching the slow learner.

Scholarships

Several scholarships of $100 each are available for the first term to teachers who are making a career in special education. Dean Perry is also handling these. Further help is available to teachers in service or students preparing to teach through the Dozier Loan Fund. A maximum of $400 for the 12-week summer session may be borrowed from the fund, according to Dean Perry.

Applications for the summer program for science and mathematics teachers may be secured by writing to NSF Summer Institute, University of North Carolina, Box 1268, Chapel Hill.

The National Science Foundation also provides stipends for science-math teachers during the regular school year. For the 1958-59 academic year, fifty teachers will receive stipends of $3,000 plus allowances.

Dr. E. C. Markham of the UNC Chemistry Department is handling applications for the 1958-59 grants, which will be awarded sometime this spring.

Wetzel Pleads Innocence

Sanford, Jan. 31 (AP)—Frank Edward Wetzel was arraigned in Lee County Superior Court today and pleaded innocent to a charge of murdering Highway Patrolman J. T. Brown near Sanford the night of Nov. 5.

Wetzel, a native of New York State, was convicted earlier this month at Rockingham of first degree murder in the slaying of Patrolman Wister Lee Reece the same night near Ellerbe. A jury recommended mercy and Wetzel was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Solicitor Jack Hooks has said he will press for a death penalty conviction in the Brown killing.

Dekes Here Tops In U. S. Scholastically

The UNC Beta chapter of Delta Kappa Epsilon recently received the national DKE award for the best scholastic standing of any DKE chapter in the nation. The local chapter was judged in comparison with the other fraternities on this campus. Each DKE chapter was judged on this basis.

John Jester, UNC delegate, was also elected vice-president of the annual DKE convention. The other UNC delegate was Walker Lockett.

The award was presented at the annual convention held in Minneapolis, Minn., during the Christmas holidays. The convention was the 113th annual DKE convention and was sponsored by the Northern DKE Alumni Association and the Phi Epsilon chapter of DKE of the University of Minnesota.

The DKE chapter here will receive an engraved plaque for their fraternity house. This is the first time the local chapter has won this award. The DKE's rank 6th scholastically on this campus, last year having a 2.726 average. The overall fraternity average at UNC last year was 2.896.

Three Blazes Reported Here During Exams

By BILL KINCAID

Three fires were reported in the UNC-Chapel Hill area during the last week. Firemen say there were "indications of arson" in one of the cases.

The M. A. MacPherson home, 700 Pittsboro Rd., was set fire Jan. 28. Firemen say they think it was set by the same person who has recently covered the UNC campus with a series of fires.

Draperies on two doors were burned. Fire Chief J. S. Boone said there were "indications of arson in it. We know it was intentional."

At 7:30 yesterday morning a trash chute in the UNC interns' quarters caught fire. Boone said it possibly was an accident caused by a cigarette which was thrown in the chute.

A trash can in Nash Hall caught fire on Saturday night, Jan. 25. Officials say it could have been accidental. People were in the building at the time, and it probably resulted when a burning cigarette was thrown in the can.

Kappa Tau Alpha Taps Tom Byrd, Jerry Shields

Thomas M. Byrd, Mount Olive, and Jerry A. Shields, Kernersville, seniors in the School of Journalism at UNC, have been initiated into Kappa Tau Alpha, journalism honor society.

Byrd, who completed work for his degree in January, is working on the News and Observer. Shields is scheduled to earn his degree in August.

Election to Kappa Tau Alpha is restricted to the upper ten per cent of the student body with a minimum of a B average overall and a B plus in journalism.

UNC Must Reassert Her Leadership In A New Age

Universities, says Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins with characteristic scorn for academic icons, have ceased to be "centers of independent thought and criticism."

The aging enfant terrible of higher education goes ever further. Their decadence is so pronounced, he declares, that "it would be simpler and more hopeful to establish new institutions . . . than to try to reform the universities to the extent that would be required."

It may be unsettling to some Tar Heels that Dr. Hutchins' remarks were made not in one of the walnut lined cubicles of the Fund for the Republic, which he now heads, but on the campus of the University of North Carolina that most hallowed of all southern centers of independent thought and criticism.

Whatever disclaimers he might have inserted concerning the exclusion of "present company," Dr. Hutchins has made a point that should trouble Chapel Hill as deeply as, say, Ann Arbor, Berkeley or Cambridge.

The University of North Carolina still enjoys worldwide respect as a center of southern enlightenment. Its reputation as a rallying point for reason in social, economic and racial inquiry is without equal below the Mason-Dixon line. The plain fact is, however, that the University made its reputation during the turbulent Thirties at a time when much of America was stricken with a social conscience. It has not bolstered that reputation in recent years with anything resembling the noteworthy accomplishments of those earlier days of courage and candor.

That is not to say that the University of North Carolina is no longer a great university or even that it is no longer a leader in what is occasionally referred to, pleasantly, as the southern renaissance. It is all of these things and more. But it is no longer demonstrating the same dauntless attitudes and intellectual curiosity about the new New South of the late 1950s as it did about the old New South of the mid-1930s.

It was Odum who, with talented and dedicated associates and the aid of Rockefeller money, carried on a monumental series of studies of the South which was to culminate in the publication of Southern Regions Of The United States in 1936 by the University of North Carolina Press. It was at Chapel Hill that sociologists dared to undertake studies of the Negro, his psychology as well as his sociology; of the sharecropper and his plight; of the cotton farmer in general; of cotton altogether; of the wasted resources of the South; of the historical myths that blocked the region's progress and prosperity.

It was after such trailblazing research and bold leadership that the late W. J. Cash was able to write in The Mind of The South "that a decisive breach had been made in the savage ideal, in the historical solidity and rigidly enacted uniformity of the South—that the modern mind had been established within the gates, and that here at long last there was springing up in the South a growing body of men—small enough when set against the mass of the South but vastly large when set against anything of the kind which had ever existed in Dixie before—who had broken fully or largely out of that pattern described by Henry Adams in the case of Rooney Lee and fixed by Reconstruction: men who deliberately chose to know and think rather than merely to feel in terms fixed finally by southern patriotism and the prejudices associated with it: men capable of detachment and actively engaged in analysis and criticism of the South itself."

It is easy to argue that the principal battles were won during the Thirties, that the University's inspirational leadership provided the breakthrough and that forces to sense and sanity rose up all over the South to establish a new order based upon a realistic appraisal of real and imagined problems.

But this is to say that Dixie's house is in order, that no new hobgoblins of the spirit have replaced those of the Thirties, that a massive social and economic crisis hardly exists at all.

That is not the way the world works and it is not the way the South works, either.

Festering in Dixie today are problems and issues of terrifying complexity. They involve the status of the Negro, the future of agriculture, the effect on the economy of a sudden postwar wave of industrialization, the terrible necessity of regional planning, the continuing waste of great natural resources, the lingering poverty of many of the South's people, the strengths and weaknesses in southern institutions and folklore, the social and economic frontiers still to be penetrated, the swift changes in the regional culture that war, depression and finally prosperity have brought about and, most important, a new and realistic inventory of the actualities of what is to be done.

The battles have not been won. Yet all around us guardians of the status quo are practicing, with windy evocations of the past, the same old immutability, the same old obstinance. There is a terrified truculence toward even the evolutionary changes common to a dynamic society because these changes are either misunderstood or distrusted.

This condition confronts the University can no longer afford to live in the glow of past triumphs. It has an obligation to mobilize its forces and act, to rise above complacency and illusion.

Exploration of the socio-economic condition of the South today will require fully as much courage, candor, independent thought and constructive criticism as was the case in the Thirties. If anything, it will require more, for certain aged-in-anguish orthodoxies have not been recently challenged in North Carolina. They have grown wild and weedy for a decade.

The leadership in this great adventure must come from a young, eminently promising but still untested inheritor of the mantle of Frank Porter Graham. His name is William Clyde Friday.

Interviews: Pointers For The Graduates

By WHIT WHITFIELD

One of the most traumatic experiences that every graduating senior must face eventually is the job interview. Most of the large companies will have representatives in Chapel Hill during the next three months for this express purpose, so it might be well to point out some of the secrets of a successful interview. In a word, these secrets can be summarized —casualness. No interviewer relishes the idea of facing dozens of hyper-sensitive neurotics. Relax.

Remember to report to your interview just a few minutes late. Show him that you're not a machine whose life is regulated by a clock. Make him realize that you're human.

Look casual. White bucks, khakis, and a sweater, plus a day's growth on your face will suffice. Light up a cigarette, but remember to offer him one. (This is important.)

Don't speak unless spoken to. Give him that "what can you do for me" smile. If he offers his hand for an introductory shake, give him the squeeze. Don't let him think you're a softy. Business needs a strong hand these days.

Don't put your feet on the desk unless he does. This is a hallmark of casualness, but you don't want to overdo it. If you chew tobacco or gum, be sure to offer him some.

Don't be surprised by some of the questions he asks, even though you may consider some of them quite personal. Answer in a subdued yes or no. Don't give him the idea that you're a talkative sort. Change the intonation of your answers so that he may see the variety of talents you have.

If the interviewer should ask you point blank about your accomplishments on your possible assets for his company, blow your own horn. Tell him how good you are. Don't be modest. This may be the last chance he will have to see you.

If he should ask why your academic average is so low, tell him that most of the faculty were in a conspiracy against you because of your intellect. Not being a member of this sacred in-group, the company representative will sympathize with you.

Be sure to ask what the starting salary is at his company. Let him know that you're not available if the salary is low. This will elicit a favorable response, and he will admire you for your high standards.

Don't stay longer than you had intended; your time is valuable. Then he may have something else to do also. Give him another of your super shakes and smile. You cinched the job.

News Of Exam Period Analyzed

By CURTIS GANS

Examination time is a time for getting behind on the news. The following series of brief opinions will summarize some of the more important, to this writer happenings during the examination period.

In the realm of foreign affairs the U. S. received a distinct and deserved slap in the face on the island of Okinawa.

Earlier this year, the U. S. influence in Okinawa was shown as being on the decline when the citizens of the town of Naha elected a Communist mayor.

U. S. officials in the area found a way of disqualifying the man for the post, and set up a new election. There were two candidates for the office of Mayor of Naha. Both were anti-American. The Okinawans voted overwhelmingly for the one who expressed the most vehement anti-American sentiments.

It should by now be evident that American influence in the political affairs of foreign peoples is not only wrong, but unprofitable. What the U. S. stands to lose is one of its most important air force bases in the Far East. It further stands to lose an ally, and could conceivably drive the Okinawan people into Communist hands.

The U. S. would not welcome interference by other nations into its own governmental processes. It had better expect the same type of cold reception at any time it tries to interfere in the governmental processes of other nations.

Again the U. S. must keep the ideal of self government and self determination in mind when it deals with the people of other nations.

The Vanguard project received its obituary notice, when difficulties forced test postponement, and made the Army's Jupiter-C missile the probable first U. S. satellite carrier.

The significance of this is that the difficulties of inter-service rivalry became all too apparent. In the Vanguard the U. S. developed a highly specialized vehicle capable of putting a small satellite aloft. It in no way would have been able to put aloft a satellite containing a dog or anything much heavier than the twenty pound satellite it was designed for. Hence, when Russia put Laika aloft in Sputnik II, the Vanguard project was outdated. Moreover, the difficulties in Vanguard could have been ironed out much earlier if the resources of the scientist on the other programs could be used in combination with the Vanguard people for all the projects. Vanguard might not have been the dismal failure that it turned out to be, with all the added accoutrements of loss of prestige.

In the field of missiles the government has gotten a little wisdom in at least one field, when it planned to go full speed ahead on the Polaris project, which, as it is a missile to be fired from a submarine and hence is mobile, represents the U. S.'s best chance of stopping the Russian challenge. It depends on whether the U. S. effort is in time and quantity enough to beat the Russian challenge.

This columnist did a little research for examinations and found out that in 1945 the U. S. spent 100 billion dollars, 80 billion of which went to the military establishment. This effort was made so that the U. S. might win the war in Europe and the Far East.

Currently, the U. S. is spending 74 billion dollars of which 39 billion dollars goes to the defense establishment. Add the factor of the value of the dollar in 1958 in comparison to the value of the dollar in 1945, and one finds that the U. S. is spending approximately one-third of its 1945 defense expenditure and two-thirds of its 1945 overall expenditure in order to preserve the peace and keep America free.

It is high time that the American people were forced to realize that preserving peace and safety is as important or more important than winning a war.

German Fraternities: Mixture Of Beer, Blood

By DAVE DAVIS

Since 1815 "Korporationen" (fraternities or student societies) have existed on the campuses of German universities. About 40,000 of the over 150,000 university students are members of these organizations, which, similar to American fraternities, propose to promote feelings of comradeship and brotherhood among their members. The fraternity house, the athletic teams, the parties, the dances and the horseplay are all there, but there are several important differences which distinguish the German Korporationen from the American fraternities.

The most romantic and famous type of Burschenschaft (Brotherhood) are the "pauken" or dueling societies. Steeped in years of tradition, the members of these societies still engage in the fencing with swords which became popular during the age of Otto von Bismark (himself a Korporation member here at Goettingen). The members of these societies can be recognized by their brightly colored caps and chest bands which they wear to distinguish themselves from other students. The main elected officers are called by the titles "X-1," "X-2", "X-3", etc. For special occasions such as the Konvent (chapter meeting) special uniforms modelled after the military garb of the time of Frederich the Great are worn. The names of the groups, too, are reminiscent of the old days. Frisia, Germania, Allemania, Borussia, and Franconia being several examples.

Selection to these societies is similar to that in an American fraternity. Only a minority is chosen. However, the son of an Alte Herrn ((an alumnus) is more readily received. Some boys seek membership in the Korporationen in hopes of getting a better job after graduation, for membership is a life-time thing and the older members are usually willing to help their younger successors. This feeling of brotherhood is quite strong, particularly due to the fact that the fraternities are local and not national. Each Korporation has only a single chapter, but the members of a family would all belong to the same one in order that the tradition be more fully carried out.

Before one can become an active member, one must serve about a one year's term as a fuchs ("fox" or pledge). During this period he will carry out many duties, the most important being fencing practice, that he may one day prove his worth auf der Mensur (that is, in a duel against a member of another such group). I was able to be present at such an event and will describe it as best I can.

The event took place on a Saturday morning in a Pauklokale ((banquet room in an inn) on the outskirts of Goettingen. About 200 members of various fraternities were present to witness a slate of seven scheduled matches which were to take place. Women and alcohol were barred from the scene. The first two combatants, of approximately equal size and skill, took their places a swords length apart, to await the announcement of their bout. Their necks, chests, and right arms were protected by heavy thick padding, and their eyes and nose by a heavy metal guard. They were each armed with a three-foot epee which was sharpened for about six inches from the point. Two armed seconds were standing nearby to assist in the proceedings. A physician and the referee, an experienced swordsman, were also present. The referee announced the two combatants and Korporationen, and called for the party to begin. The first second yelled, "Hoch, bitte!" and the men raised their swords. The other second answered, "Sie liegen aus!" (you begin), and at the word, "Los!", the first swordsman attempted to slash the opponent on the top of the head or on the cheek. The opponent parried, then tried to return a blow. After four blows, a round was ended. For thirty rounds the swordsmen fought on, each standing perfectly still, moving no part of their bodies except their right arms; any ducking movement or a show of fear or pain would be sign of womanliness, and could mean expulsion from the group. At the end of the thirty rounds, each of the combatants had several cuts on their heads and faces, which were soon sewn up by the doctor. The boys will wear these scars proudly, as a sign that they have proved their courage auf der Mensur. That night the Brueder (brothers) celebrated the courage of their new members with a Kneipe (beer blast). The Kneipe began about 8 o'clock at night in the banquet hall of the Verbindungshaus (fraternity house). The brothers and guests from many other fraternities, all dressed in colors, took their places before large steins of beer. The "X-1" began the ceremonies banging his sword loudly on the table to call for order, and then proposed a toast to the Heimatland (home country) which he hoped would soon be re-united. All the brothers followed course, drinking down an entire stein. The famous German drinking songs soon filled the air. During the course of the evening every blow of the mornings matches were discussed, and then re-discussed by the Alte Herren who compared these with those in the old days. And the custom is at the Kneipe, when you catch the eye of someone sitting at another table, to drink a toast to his health.

Another interesting diversion of the German fraternities is the customary Sunday afternoon Exbummeln. This is a trip on foot which all of the fraternity brothers make together, usually to some outlying tavern or inn where coffee and cakes or beer will be taken, and the important topics of the day discussed.

The fraternity members are in general, like most Germans, intensely interested in political affairs. Although they have no definite general commitment, they are as a whole extremely anti-Communist, and the majority being supporters of the Adenauer government. They still remain in contact with their brothers in the Soviet zone, and have as their general theme "The Re-unification of Germany." Although all Germans do not agree with the Korporationen about many things, they make no pretenses in supporting them in this.

A SCHOOL AWAY FROM SCHOOL

Students majoring in science, like all other American students, have a wild yearning for culture, but, alas, when a student is after a degree in engineering or math or like that, he simply does not have time to take all the liberal arts courses his heart pines for.

And what is being done about this unhappy situation? I'll tell you what: Enlightened corporations everywhere are setting up on-the-job liberal arts programs for the newly employed science graduate—courses designed to broaden his cultural base—for the enlightened corporation realizes that the truly cultured employee is the truly valuable employee.

Take, for example, Lambswool Sigafoos.

A week after his graduation, Lambswool reported to Mr. Femur, the personnel director of an enlightened corporation engaged in the manufacture of cotter pins and wing nuts. "How do you do?" said Lambswool. "I'm Lambswool Sigafoos and I've come to work."

"Sit down," said Mr. Femur, chuckling kindly. "Have a Marlboro."

"Thank you," said Lambswool. "I like Marlboros. I like their filter and their flavor."

"Me too," said Mr. Femur, blinking humanely. "And I like their flip-top box. When my flip-top box of Marlboros is empty, I use it to keep fish hooks in."

"Know what I do when my flip-top box of Marlboros is empty?" asked Lambswool.

"What?" said Mr. Femur, sniggering graciously.

"I buy some more Marlboros," said Lambswool.

"A sound idea," said Mr. Femur, vibrating fetchingly. "But enough chit-chat. Come along to the campus."

"Campus?" said Lambswool, puzzled. "But I've come to work. Take me to my drawing board."

"This is an enlightened corporation," said Mr. Femur, yodelling viciously. "First you must get your cultural base broadened."

Mr. Femur took Lambswool to the training campus, which looked like any other campus. It had ivy-covered buildings, dormitories, fraternity and sorority houses, a stadium, a deer park, and a moat. Lambswool was given a roommate, a beanie, and copies of the company hymn and rouser, and the enlightened corporation proceeded to fill the gap in his culture.

The Corporation Proceeded to fill the Gap in his Culture

First he was taught to read, then to print capital letters, then capital and small letters. Then there was an attempt to teach him script, but it was ultimately abandoned.

From these fundamentals, Lambswool progressed slowly but steadily through the more complex disciplines. He was diligent, and the corporation was patient, and in the end they were rewarded, for when Lambswool finished, he could play a clavier, compose a triolet, parse a sentence, and identify the birthstone for every month of the year.

His lengthy schooling finally over, Lambswool was assigned to an important executive position where he served with immense distinction. . . . Not, however, for long, because one week later he reached retirement age.

Today, still spry, he lives in St. Petersburg, Florida, where he supplements his pension by parsing sentences for tourists.

Things Plenty Hot Around The ACC

It might still be winter time according to the weather man but you'd never know it looking at the ACC basketball race. Things are getting hotter than the proverbial firecracker and the next month or so of warfare in the conference will only serve to increase the heat as the eight teams drive toward the conference playoffs March 6-8.

There are no less than four teams which right now can reasonably set their sights on first place in the conference by tourney time, and there are four more teams just itching to make things hot for them.

Carolina, State, Maryland and Duke should provide one of the most exciting battles for the cherished number one ranking in the history of the ACC. And Clemson, Wake Forest, Virginia and South Carolina are laying a block across the road just hoping that one of their stronger conference cohorts will come racing along in search of the regular season title.

Duke is the Johnny—come—lately of the conference. The veteran Blue Devils beat top ranked West Virginia, 72-68 in Durham Monday night and knocked off Virginia at home Thursday. It was just a matter of time for the Devils and now it seems they're set to make things tough for everybody.

First Place Is Important—Maybe

Carolina still rules as favorite to grab all the cookies again but the odds are rapidly dropping due to the showing of the other ACC schools, namely State, Maryland and Duke.

Carolina, Maryland and Duke would all like to finish in the bracket opposite State because the Wolfpack can't go anywhere even if it does win the tournament. State, of course, is on recruiting probation. Consequently, should the Raleigh club win the championship the runner-up will continue in NCAA competition.

First place during the regular season is important in that it would give the top team a slot in the supposedly weaker bracket. Of course, the caliber of basketball in the ACC indicates that there really is no weaker bracket but tradition favors the team which gains first place.

Conference Should Abolish Present Setup

The ACC is one of the most rapidly progressing conferences in the country. It's young and well governed and is quickly emerging as one of the country's real athletic hotbeds.

There is one policy of the conference which we do criticize, however—Why should the NCAA representative be ascertained by a three-day tournament?

This matter has been aired many times and we dare say that the majority of the schools are opposed to it. Why should a team be able to lose every game it plays during the regular season but get hot during the tournament, win the championship and go out to represent the ACC in the NCAA against the best teams in the land?

This is an extreme hypothetical example but it gets our point across. When tournament time rolls around, season records mean very little. The best team in the country could lose a valuable man during the tourney and get beat. There goes a great season right out the window—It's like losing on four aces when the dealer calls "low hand." And the NCAA is the only tourney in which ACC teams can participate. In other words, you're putting all your cookies in one basket.

Financially, the present setup is best because so much is riding on the tournament. But we strongly believe that attendence would not be hurt should the NCAA representation be put on a seasonal basis and the tourney be used as merely a post-season affair. Fans in the area have the basketball bug and they'll still come even if the stakes are not as high—look at the Dixie Classic for evidence.

It is our hope and belief that the ACC will abolish the present arrangement in the near future. In this respect, we are not in vogue with modern basketball.

Baseball—Earey Is New Frosh Coach

By-ways of baseball . . . . Swimming coach Pat Earey has been named Bill Wilhelm's successor as Carolina's freshman baseball coach. If Earey handles the diamond aspirants as he has his brilliant swimming team, you can look for a fine year from the frosh.

Head Coach Walter Rabb faces what could be his toughest year in a long time with the varsity. There's a lot of preparation in prospect for the Tar Heels before their season opener in the Rollins Tournament at Winter Park, Fla. March 20-22. Rabb has lost a lot of material since last season and sophomores might hold the key to the fate of the baseballers . . . . The Tar Heels have a 21-game schedule arranged.

Moe Out? Blair Is All-American

Notes from around the campus . . . . Duke's powerful frosh beat Ken Rosemond's Tar Babies, 80-55 Thursday night. Carolina played without first semester star Doug Moe . . . . Moe may not be eligible this semester due to scholastic difficulties . . . . Congratulations to soccer ace Bill Blair. The 1957 captain was named to the All-American intercollegiate soccer squad . . . . The Education Foundation recently donated money for blue cashmere jackets bearing the University's insignia for the football team's road trips next season . . . . Tar Heel ace Pete Brennan is still the leading scorer and rebounder through 15 Carolina games . . . Pete's 20.2 average is tops in the ACC . . . He's also grabbed 187 rebounds . . . . No less than 17 Carolina football players, frosh and varsity, are married.

Scurlock-Sowell Will Clash In Boston Tonite

By DAVE WIBLE

Dave Scurlock, recently called by Sports Illustrated the man most likely to challenge Arnie Sowell, the nations top 1,000-yarder, will get his first chance to prove just that tonight when he meets Sowell on the boards at the Boston Athletic Association Indoor Meet at Boston.

Sowell who runs for the U. S. Army has tied the 1,000-yd indoor record at 2:08.2. Scurlock's best time is 2:10.4.

Ranson Makes Trip

Tar Heel Coach Dale Ranson, who is making the trip with Scurlock, does not feel that his charge will be in top form tonight. "If Dave were in the shape he was two weeks ago he would be at his peak, but the irregularity of exams will slow him down a bit tonight I'm afraid," Ranson said.

Carolina has had one other competitor in the indoor circuit this year. Wayne Bishop—the ACC is top distance man—finished third in the 2-mile run at the Washington Evening Star Games on January 23.

Ranson said that he will plan to run both these Tar Heels in several more of the big indoor meets before the ACC championships on March 1.

ACC track fans noticed several other familiar names in Sports Illustrated's ratings Duke's Dave Sime was co-rated with Western Michigan's Ira Murchison in the 60-yard dash, Maryland's Burr Grim was listed as a contender in the mile run, and former Tar Heel Jim Beatty now running for the Army has the honor of being the top rated Dark Horse in the 2-mile run.

Carolina-Duke Seating Plans Announced

All seats for the Carolina-Duke basketball game on Saturday, February 8, at 2:00 p.m. will be reserved. Holders of passbooks (students, faculty, etc.) must exchange them for reserved seating in order to see this game.

Priority will be given to passbook holders whose names start with the letters A-M and the exchange period for this group will be January 31-February 4.

On the morning of February 5 any remaining tickets will be distributed on a first-come, first-served basis.

A similar procedure will be in effect for the Maryland game on February 22 with the priority going to individuals whose names start with the letters N - Z.

UNC Swimmers At ECC This Afternoon

By MAC MAHAFFY

The Carolina swimmers travel to ECC today for their first meet this semester. The tankmen have an undefeated record which will meet its first real test against the University of Florida here on February 8th.

Between semesters the swim team remained here for double workouts under Coach Pat Earey. After the exam layoff, the added work was welcome, and the team should turn in some very good times in the East Carolina non-conference meet.

The probable lineup will have Bill Zickgraf, Bill Roth, and Walt Rose in the sprint events. Tony Schiffman and Jeff Zwicker will swim the distance events, while Paul Wachendorfer, Telfair Mahaffy, and Bob Turner will swim the butterfly and breaststroke races. Ned Meekins and Pete Reynolds will do the diving. Brent Nash will swim the backstroke.

Tourney Ducats

Officials of the ACC Basketball Tournament to be held in Raleigh March 6-8 recently announced that tickets for the three-day event are now on sale at Reynolds Gymnasium, site of the tournament.

Checks and money orders should be made payable to the Coliseum Box Office and must include 25 cents for postage and handling. The address is P. O. Box 5905, Raleigh, N. C. No telephone orders will be accepted.

Counter sales at the Box Office, for season books and individual games, will start Monday, Feb. 10.

Last year 48,800 persons attended the tournament which North Carolina won, 95-75 in the finals against South Carolina.

Baseball Mgr. Wanted

Carolina baseball coach Walter Rabb is looking for an assistant student manager to assist manager Bill Aldred. Any student interested is asked to contact Rabb in Woollen Gym. Several trips are planned for the managers.

HIGH SCORING GUARD—South Carolina's Dickie Prater will bear watching tonight when the Tar Heels meet the Gamecocks in Columbia. The 6-3 guard has been one of the team's top scorers and proved it by hitting 26 in the Gamecock's loss to Furman Saturday night.

All ACC Teams Return To Action Today

By The Associated Press

For the first time in three weeks all eight Atlantic Coast Conference basketball teams will see action on the same day today. Three league games and two against outside rivals are on the schedule.

Starting the program will be a 2 p.m. regionally televised game that sends Maryland against Navy at Annapolis, Md.

Tonight Virginia plays at Virginia Military, a member of the Southern Conference.

Carolina and North Carolina State share the conference lead at 5-2, with Maryland third on a 4-2 record. Duke has moved into fourth place at 3-2 and dropped Virginia (3-4) to fifth. Clemson follows at 3-5, with South Carolina and Wake Forest tied for seventh at 2-5.

FENCING TEAM

Regular practice sessions of the team will be from 3:30 to 5 p.m. on Wednesday and Friday for the next semester.

MY CLOSEST SHAVE by Pat Flaherty 1956 Indianapolis Speedway Winner

"My closest shave was at Indianapolis in 1953," says Pat Flaherty, 1956 Indianapolis winner. "The track temperature that day hit 125° and the exhaust fumes hung right down on the speedway. I was going into the north turn at 130 mph when the fumes got me. I blacked out, hit the outside concrete fence, and skidded along for 120 feet. The car was demolished, my helmet was torn off, my safety belt broke—but I didn't break a single bone!"

Auto Prices

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1 (AP)—A Senate hearing this week provided a public preview of the issues soon to be fought out at the bargaining table by automobile manufactures and union leaders.

Testimony bef re the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee also pointed up basic differences between the two sides on what makes the economy tick.

60 M.P.H. Limit

RALEIGH, Feb. 1 (AP)—Signs telling motorists they can bear down a little harder on the accelerator—legally—are going up on selected sections of North Carolina's primary road system.

The State Highway Commission said today new 60 miles per hour speed limits already have been posted on most of the road segmens where the higher speed is permitted.

Overall, there are 10 sections of highways, each more than five miles in length, where passenger vehicles have a 60-mile limit and commercial vehicles have a 50-mile limit. The stretches of road total about 140 miles in length.

School Crime

NEW YORK, Feb 1 (AP)—A weekend lull fell today over New York City's school crime crisis.

But official inquiries were to begin Monday into recent rapes, stabbings, beatings and hoodlumism involving white and Negro pupils—capped by the suicide of a depressed school principal.

Policemen have been posted at 41 of the city's 1,000 schools.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner said he would meet Monday with the board of education and other school officials to look into the whole situation."

Phi Society To Install New Head

Newly-elected president of the Philanthropic Literary Society, Jess Stribling, will be inaugurated in ceremonies in Phi Hall on the fourth floor of New East Tuesday night.

In addition, Dr. James King of the UNC History Department will speak on "The Purposes of a University" at the meeting.

Five other officers will be installed at the meeting. President-elect Stribling said yesterday the meeting was open to the public. He said Dr. King's speech should be "interesting and informative."

Installed will be Warren Coolidge, president pro-tempore; Ronnie Pruett, parliamentarian; David Mathews, critic; Sam Black, sergeant-at-arms and Bill Fachert, clerk.

The Tuesday meeting, the first of the second semester, will begin what Stribling called "a revitilization program" for the Phi. Stribling's inaugural address will deal briefly with this topic, he announced.

South Bldg. In A Stir

With the registration, drop-add fray at South Building, there was even more confusion yesterday in the UNC administration building.

Offices in South were being interchanged. Since the Consolidated University offices were moved out before exams began, that space was prepared for UNC offices.

Chancellor William Aycock is now in President William Friday's old office. Also in old Consolidated University offices are Business Manager J. A. Branch, Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty; and Fred Weaver, dean of student affairs.

Moving into the Chancellor's old office were Dr. Henry Clark, administrator of health affairs. Others on first floor, South Building, are Alexander Heard, dean of the Graduate School; Dr. S. B. Alexander, assistant administrator of health affairs; and J. S. Bennett, director of operations.

The accounting office remains in the same space on first floor temporarily.

The other immediate move in South Building was the Graduate School to the ground floor.

RICHARD SATTERWHITE
Held On Arson Charge

Tells Story On Way To Jail: Fires Gave Emotional Relief

By Curtis Gans

Carolina's firebug scare, which had the University in an uproar and caused more than $60,000 property damage, ended yesterday afternoon when Richard T. Satterwhite, 21, first year medical student from McCain, admitted setting some fires and to attempting to set two others.

Satterwhite admitted starting the fires while he was being taken from Chapel Hill jail to the Orange County jail in Hillsboro. Satterwhite described enough details, according to police, to give credence to his story.

Satterwhite said that on the night of Jan. 9, when six fires were reported, he had set these and watched several of them, including the major fire in Swain Hall. He said that he had felt a compulsion to set these fires.

Earlier yesterday, a shaky Satterwhite pleaded guilty to charges of breaking and entering the home of W. D. Carmichael, University vice-president, Thursday, and arson in connection with a fire at the residence of D. Allen MacPherson, Jan. 23.

Recorder's Court judge William F. Stewart bound over Satterwhite to the late February session of Orange County Superior Court, and ordered him jailed without bond on the arson charge, and with $10,000 bail on the charge of breaking and entering.

Before the Recorder's Court hearing, Satterwhite broke down screaming on the court house steps when he saw his parents, who came from McCain to Chapel Hill, after being notified by the police of their son's arrest.

Satterwhite was arrested Friday night at 8 p.m., when police traced his car, after he had broken into the Carmichael home on Thursday.

CONFESSION

Police questioned Satterwhite Friday night until 1 a.m., and obtained a written confession of his breaking and entering and of his setting the MacPherson fire Friday night. However, at that time Satterwhite denied knowledge of the other fires.

Satterwhite admitted, after graduate music student Owen Leland identified him, that he had been in Hill Hall, the night that Leland had spotted two pianos soaked in oil.

He corroborated Leland's story that Leland had seen him entering the building, after Leland had gone into the basement to trace a strong odor of oil, but he denied, at the time, having put the oil there.

He also admitted leaving the building after Leland threatened to call the police.

Bottle-Smashing Youth Turns To Fire Setting

Richard Satterwhite, who earlier in his life relieved built up tensions by breaking bottles and driving his car, turned lately to setting fires.

Satterwhite was apprehended after he had broken into the home of W. D. Carmichael, UNC Vice-President. Mrs. Carmichael, returning home found Satterwhite's car in her driveway. She entered the house andn found Satterwhite standing in the hall way.

Mrs. Carmichael questioned Satterwhite, asking him his name and the reason for his presence in her house. Satterwhite said he thought it was the house of "Dr. Hayden," presumably Dr. Glen Hayden, chairman of the Music Dept. He also said that his name was Satterwhite.

Satterwhite was leaving when Mrs. Carmichael asked again who he was, asked for some identification, and threatened to call the police. Satterwhite this time replied that his name was "Sievenson" and after offering identification, withdrew it and drove off.

GOT LICENSE NUMBER

Mrs. Carmichael with the aid of Bill Williams and George Reed two Durham men, doing a sewer survey across the street, got the license number of the car and the make, model, and color of the vehicle.

The information was relayed on to the Chapel Hill Police Dept., which subsequently found that the New Jersey license plate was stolen from a car in Durham. However, with the description of the car, police were able, with the aid of the University registration files, to trace the car to Satterwhite.

Satterwhite was apprehended Friday at 8 p.m.

MacPHERSON FIRE

Within a half hour Satterwhite had admitted to the setting of a fire Jan. 23 at the D. Allen MacPherson residence, and to breaking and entering the Carmichael home.

Satterwhite said that he had rung three times at the front door of the MacPherson residence, and after finding the place deserted, he went around to the back door, which he said was unlocked, and entered. According to MacPherson, the door had been locked.

Satterwhite, when brought back to the scene of the crime described the interior of the house and gave a description of his actions which included the igniting of a curtain. The damages from the blaze were minor.

EMOTIONAL PRESSURE

Satterwhite said that he felt himself under great emotional pressure which compelled him to set the fire. He added that after the fire he felt an emotional release and was calm.

Satterwhite also cleared up the problem of his license tag, when

Opera Star Jan Peerce To Sing Here Thursday

Jan Peerce, famous tenor of the Metropolitan and San Francisco Operas, will appear in concert Thursday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall, the Student Entertainment Committee announced today.

Carolina students wil be admitted free to the performance upon presentation of their I. D. cards. Tickets for student wives are $1, with all other tickets selling for $2.

The tenor's performance here is one of 45, in addition to his operatic, radio and television engagements, that he will give during his current season under the aegis of Impresario S. Hurok.

One of the most versatile of American singers, Peerce made headlines around the world last June, when, at the invitation of the Soviet Minister of Culture, he toured Russia as the first Metropolitan Opera star to appear there since World War II and the first American in history to sing in Moscow's renowned Bolshoi Theatre.

Russian audiences jammed auditoriums to hear him in Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev, where he sang in concert as well as opera. The tenor was also widely-hailed in his London debut in Royal Festival Hall on July 15.

Heard recently in the world's motion picture theatres in 20th-Century Fox's film-biography of S. Hurok, "Tonight We Sing," Peerce has also starred in four other Hollywood movies including "Of Men and Music" and "Something In The Wind."

He is a frequent performer on radio and such television shows as last January's wide-hailed NBC spectacular "Festival of Music." His RCA Victor recordings have been among the nation's best-sellers.

Groundhogs Fed Up; Stay-in Strike Offered

By PAUL RULE

A possibility of a mass strike by all members of the United Brotherhood of Groundhogs loomed early today. Union locals in all parts of North America were reported on alert for such a move.

A. Furry Woodchuck, president of Kenan Woods Local No. 496, in an exclusive Daily Tar Heel interview said, "We're fed up! For years people have been accusing us groundhogs of the lousy weather in February and March. We have nothing to do with it, and we're tired of taking the blame."

If a groundhog sees his shadow Feb. 2, six weeks of bad weather are supposed to follow. Good weather is alleged to result if a shadow is not seen.

"This time we may not come out of our burrows at all," continued Woodchuck. "If the other unions can have walkouts, we can have a stay-in. Let them blame the climate on the squirrels for a change."

Doubt was expressed by local observers as to whether groundhogs in this area, otherwise knonwn as woodchucks, could muster many union members since the animals are a rarity this far south.

Several years ago an action similar to the one proposed resulted in violence when a group of weather forecasters and almanac publishers attempted to cross a groundhog picket line for shadow observation. Trouble began when the picket busters insulted union members by reciting "How Much Wood Can A Woodchuck Chuck."

Should the stay-in strike materialize weather bureaus will be requested to issue extra advisories during the next few weeks to fill the gap created by the absence of the customary groundhog prediction.

Disadvantages Of Pay TV

Two of the nation's leading TV bigwhigs have testified strongly against pay television in hearings conducted by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. What they had to say should interest all Americans who now, or someday will, own television sets.

Both Dr. Frank Stanton, president of CBS, and Leonard H. Goldenson, president of ABC, spoke out against pay television trial tests granted by the Federal Communications Commission. And they attempted to show that, in the final analysis, the expense of pay TV will be highly burdensome to the average American family.

Speaking before the House Committee on January 23, Dr. Stanton testified that "to watch pay television for two-thirds of the number of hours that it now actually watches free television, the average American family would have to pay $173 a year," or, as he put it, "seven times what the average family spends annually on shoes . . . three times what it spends in heating and lighting its home . . ."

Taking a figure of only $100, "which has been suggested by the pay-television promoters as the anticipated average collection per family," Dr. Stanton said, the family would get only four hours of viewing a week—"which is only a little more than one-tenth of the time it now devotes to free television."

Not only would the costs for pay TV be prohibitive in some cases, but the practice also would "blackout" programs for those who want to see TV on free channels, he continued. Furthermore, programs now offered on free TV would be added to the pay TV channels, because of pay TV's higher purchasing power, thus robbing free channels of some of their better presentations.

Dr. Stanton quoted an FCC report as saying: ". . . some kind of programs hitherto available under the present system would probably be subjected to a charge on the viewer." And he quoted a pay TV promoter as saying "We can nickel-and-dime them (the public) to death."

Dr. Stanton's testimony was virtually echoed by Goldenson, who pointed out this factor: "If pay TV succeeds, the programs now seen on free TV will move to pay TV. The public will be the loser, for it will be forced to pay for programs it now sees free."

Both Dr. Stanton and Goldenson made clear to the House Committee that their respective corporations would probably be forced to join the pay TV ranks if the trial tests lead to a permanence of the system. In such a case, they said, their own profits would soar to unprecedented highs.

"Let me illustrate this by saying that the producers of programs would favor charging 1 million homes 50 cents apiece with a gross of $500,000 to charging 10 million homes 1 cent apiece or $100,000—a typical charge to advertisers," Goldenson said. "It can readily be appreciated that the potential of pay TV—if it works—would make it almost irresistible from a profit standpoint."

What both men are afraid of is that once pay TV is established on a trial basis, the heavy investment involved will prohibit cancellation of the practice three years hence—when the trial period is over. So much capital will be involved that the FCC could not but rule for permanence of pay TV, they feel. As Goldenson put it:

"The Commission and the proponents of pay TV have stated that it is in the best American tradition to give pay TV a test. To permit such a test is equivalant to starting an epidemic to test a new vaccine. Once the epildemic has started, it cannot be controlled. Even limited 3-year tests, because of the investment required, would create economic interests which, once established, would be virtually impossible to dislodge."

There probably is a lot to Goldenson's argument. Not only would pay TV be attractive to the networks, profit-wise, but the almost unlimited bidding power of pay TV over free TV would add even more dollars to the pockets of entertainers who already get fabulous sums for a three-minute flash across the screen.

Once these entertainers realize their own profit potential, there is reason to believe that they would sell themselves entirely to the highest bidder—the pay TV networks. And then begins the exit of free TV from the American communi*cations system—a practice we prefer to retain.*

Red Propaganda

A classic example of Russian propaganda lies in the Kremlin's attitude toward American launching of an earth satellite. It's repression to the fullest.

The Editor of the Newspaper Evening Moscow, the Soviet capital's only afternoon newspaper, when told about the U. S. satellite, said the Explorer was interesting. But, he added, the newspaper was unlikely to print it.

"We seem to have mislaid our Tass dispatch on that subject," he was quoted as saying.

But what about Little Rock? Or the Maxton Indian uprising against the Ku Klux Klan? Moscow press had plenty of space—and information—about those American crises. And they were exploitd to the fullest.

Now comes a scientific achievement from which will come data the U. S. will share with the world. The Kremlin's reaction: let the Russian people remain ignorant of all but Russian achievement. After all, that's real freedom.

Keeping Tabs

It takes a broad tracking system to keep tabs on the Explorer, the U. S.'s first earth satellite, but it's pretty easy to keep up with the President.

Guess where he was when Explorer was launched succesfully by the United States Friday night? Vacationing in Georgia, while the eyes of the world were turned toward Washington for word on the satellite.

It seems recently that more and more federal news is being sent over the wires from Augusta, while Dr. Hagerty keeps things in line in Washington. Too bad the Press Secretary isn't a caddy, cause then he could get a vacation too.

J. Y.'S JAZZ

'Seven Likely Arts' Departs Illustriously

Last fall CBS television ran a show called "The Seven Lively Arts" every Sunday afternoon from five to six o'clock. Suddenly it stopped. The reason was the usual, of course; sponsor and rating problems. Yet this show, in its brief, thirteen week tenure, did some amazing things. True, it was not always the best; some of the shows, notably the one on love—certainly a promising and wonderful subject—were rather poor. One show, however, remains in our memory and makes us wonder why ratings take precedent over art.

The name of the show was "The Sound of Jazz." The high accord awarded the show by your reviewer comes not from a provincial feeling that jazz is God; it comes from recognition of the superb blending of music and sound. Eric Larrabee, in Harper's Magazine, said this about "The Sound of Jazz:" "The best thing that ever happened to television . . . This is where live television began to amount to something."

Larrabee's comment arose from an extraordinary departure from the video norm on the part of the Columbia Television Network. The courage was not only in airing jazz, a touchy matter these days, but in the willingness to sacrifice pomp for simplicity and, what should be most important on a television show, people seen as they really are.

The program's success came as a result not only of the visual appeal of the program but even more impressively of the amazing musical value of the sound content. Fortunately for those of us who love jazz and wish to have a permanent reminder of jazz at one of its greatest moments, Columbia has released a recording, made four days before the actual telecast, which is every inch the equal of the television production (CL 1098).

The feature performers on the record are enough to sell any potential buyer—Count Basie, Billie Holiday, Roy Eldridge, Lester Young, Jimmy Rushing, Jimmy Giuffre, Jo Jones— I could go on forever. And the music matches the men. Particularly thrilling for me has been the Jimmy Giuffre -Pee Wee Russell blues duet. Final proof that a true musician is able to supersede his style and play with another true musician of a different style. There are so many other high points that I'm just going to suggest that you buy the disk and hear for yourself.

The column by Eric Larrabee states that the program was so enthusiastically greeted by the CBS hierarchy that they are seriously considering starting a series of programs featuring the same format. If they do, they will be making not only a great contribution to the furthering of jazz, but to the enjoyment of millions of Americans.

Explorer Should Spur U. S. Effort

By CURTIS GANS

On January 31, 1958, four months after the Russians launched their first satellite, the U. S. launched a satellite and put it successfully into orbit.

For the U. S. it was a great achievement and culminated several months of feverish activity.

It was a great achievement in itself, and it was a great achievement in that it restored to the U. S. a measure of the prestige that the U. S. had lost to the Russians.

However, it must not be the case this time, that the American people react to this development with the smug complacency that lost the U. S. technological supremacy in the world. The U. S. must not let down its guard.

It must be remembered that the U. S. satellite was launched four months after the Russian satellite. It must be further remembered that the U. S. satellite weighs only 30 pounds against 184 pounds for the original Russian satellite, and 1000 pounds for the second satellite with dog. It must also be remembered that the U. S. has not successfully test fired a Intercontinental Ballistics Missile, except in laboratory range, while the Russians are believed to have Intercontinental Ballistics Missiles already operational.

What is even more significant is that there is considerable reluctance in the U. S. by the administration to release the controversial Gaither Report, presumeably because it shed grave doubts, not only on the present state of military preparedness, but also cast some doubts on the possibility that the U. S. can meet the Russian challenge at all.

It is, then, one thing to get a small satellite aloft, it is another to produce what the Russians did, and to have a fleet of missiles ready for use. The U. S. is more than four months behind the Russians, and unless the people of the United States are prepared to spend money, and the Congress of the United States is prepared to give the green light to research projects that may at one time seem unnecessary, but can at later times be turned into useful tools for the defense arsenal, that arsenal will continue to be behind the Russians.

Moreover, unless the president takes a long step on the road toward eliminating interservice rivalry, which has left the U. S. with an obsolete missile on its hands in the shape of Vanguard, progress will be difficult, and the goal of achieving at least parity with the Russians in anything but standard of living impossible.

The reaction that is necessary from the American people is one of renewed vigor, an even greater sense of urgency, and a strong desire to have the U. S. supreme. The people of the U. S. must not view the successful firing of 1958 Alpha as the ultimate achievement, nor must it lessen the concern of Americans for their defense establishment.

What is necessary is enough confidence by the legislative department, in the scientific group, so that future experiments can go on unhampered, for it was viewed probable by Dr. Wernher Von Braun, head of the Army missile research, that a satellite could have been put up two years ago.

There must be greatly increased expenditure, rather than a slacking of the zeal that Congress has been displaying lately. There must still be an increase in taxation in order that the U. S. can have the funds available to pursue the cause of defending democracy and freedom.

One of the unfortunate results of the U. S. satellite launching will be a reversal of the tide that has currently been going against the Republican party. It is hoped that the U. S. can be more foresighted than to let the party that was in great measure, due to conservative policies, ingrained in its historical make-up, responsible for the lag of U. S. defense behind Russia back in power. There can be hoped from the American people a turning away from conservativism to the type of foresight that is necessary to pursue the economic and technological offensive, for it will not be too many days until the Russians produce something that will make 1958 Alpha look like a very minor achievement.

Chief Boone Discusses Department Work Here

By CHARLIE SLOAN

"We don't blow that whistle unless we have to," commented Chief J. S. Boone of the Chapel Hill Fire Department.

Chief Boone said the claxon, that whistle they don't blow unless they have to, "sometimes does more harm than good." Last year the code was changed because too many people could tell where the fire was by the claxon signal.

Before the change the code was printed in the telephone book. Now only a few people have cards translating the signal.

Chapel Hill probably has the best attended fires in the state. One of the firemen on duty Thursday morning mentioned that on a couple of occasions he has been tempted to just sit by the truck and let the citizens fight the fires.

The young smoke eater said helpful spectators take equipment off the trucks and once grabbed a ladder out of his hands.

In addition to the over-helpful fire buffs who emerge at every blaze, the department has 9 full time firemen, 15 part time workers and 6 volunteers. Chief Boone called the 6 volunteers "call men." Chapel Hill doesn't have a regular volunteer fire department.

Every other week the entire staff gets together for an hour and a half training session. Their textbook has been put together from the Oklahoma A and M. manual on the subject. In the winter they meet indoors, learning where equipment is located on the trucks and looking at movies on fire prevention and detection. When warm weather rolls around they go outside and run through exercises.

Chief Boone, a firefighter of 34 years' experience, said he would like to have a practice fire building. He located a magazine of the fire profession and showed the reporter a picture of a windowless cinderblock building where actual fire conditions can be simulated.

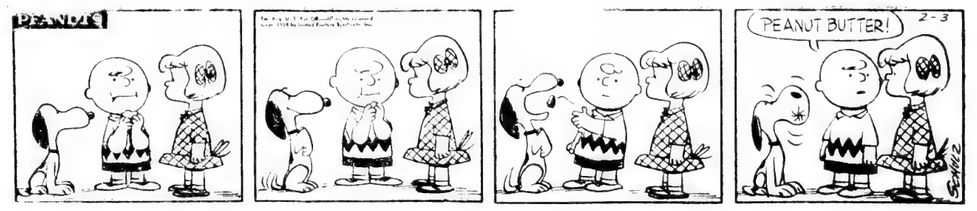
Besides underfoot spectators and impatient newsmen, the Fire Department has other problems.

When a fire breaks out housewives occasionally run out to see the show and leave an iron on, or something on the stove, and the Fire Department finds itself with a second fire in a matter of minutes. The chief said they've had a few like that over a period of time.

A much more frequent problem concerns the telephone. When the claxon sounds people want to know where the fire is. So they call the Fire Department. And the phone gets tied up. Chief Boone emphasized the fact that the phone listed in the front of the telephone directory should be used only to report fires.

Right now the police take calls when no one is on duty in the Fire Department, but Chief Boone says "we're getting too big for that." Soon, he added, they will keep a man on duty "all the time."

So far the town has a good record on fires. The fire bug has hurt this record some, Chief Boone remarked regretfully. "One great help in our success in Chapel Hill has always been short runs," he said. Since the recent annexation this factor no longer exists. But the department is getting a new hook and ladder truck, and will soon have another station house to take care of part of the new area.



Besides the short trip from fire house to fires, the Fire Department has been fortunate in another way. Most fires cannot be seen from the street and unless somebody is around to show the way, the big red trucks could miss the fire completely. "We have been pretty lucky in finding the places," said Chief Boone.

The fire bug has made the department's job more difficult. When they answer a fire call they must search for more than one fire at the site. And as soon as they can spare a piece of equipment it must be returned to the fire house in case another call comes in.

Chief Boone said the people of Chapel Hill can help fight the firebug on their own.

What the community needs right now is "for people to keep their houses locked." Everybody can fight the firebug by simply doing this.

The Vulnerable Customer

Last spring the Federal Reserve Board released a monumental six-volume study concluding that it was impossible to reach any definite conclusion about the effect of rising consumer indebtedness on the economy.

But some of the facts presented in the report can raise a sizable number of goose pimples today. In early 1956, when these data were assembled, the average consumer held liquid assets (other than cash in his pocket) of only $810. Even this modest level of liquid assets was reached only by families having at least a $5,000 income. At the same time, the typical family with a $4,000-$5,000 yearly income was carrying an installment debt of $440. Only in families earning more than $5,000 a year did liquid assets begin to exceed installment indebtedness. The story suggests a remarkable reliance on job security and steady income, combined with a load of fixed obligations that leave little room for holding liquid assets.

And then there is the question of personal loans. In the first nine months of 1957, this category of consumer debt has grown more rapidly than any other form: from less than $7.2 billion in January to more than $7.9 billion in September, or ten per cent.

If the consumer should face even a brief income drought which he cannot supplement with sufficient unemployment insurance and similar payments, his liquid assets will quickly be drained and he will be forced either to dispose of nonliquid assets or to assume further indebtedness. The present moment is favorable to neither step. Further curtailment of his current consumption, on the other hand, will aggrevate the general downturn. But the choice may not be his.—The Reporter

U.S. 'Moon' Proves A Success Soaring Around The World

It is soaring around the earth high enough—200 to 1,700 miles—to stay in space a long time, at least several months and possibly 10 years.

Its path is "quite satisfactorily close" to what had been planned, its delighted scientific godfathers said. They told newsmen they didn't know of a thing that had gone wrong.

The satellite is not easy to see, but observers in the Southern United States may spot it with field glasses.

It has already radioed back to the earth some information about temperature, and also cosmic rays and possibly about meteorites, two of the principal mysteries of space that "Explorer" was sent aloft to look into. Its steady "E-E-E-E-E" broadcast is regularly being picked up by the world-girdling chain of tracking stations.

And it was already plain that the success of the pencil-shaped moonlet and the bulky rocket system that hurled it on its 18,000-miles-an-hour course was serving as a strong tonic to the United States' confidence in its own technical ability. This confidence of Americans and some of their friends had been sent into shock by Soviet satellite success and the failure ofthe first U. S. effort.

The elation went around the free world, inspiring fat headlines in Western Europe and a shout of congratulations from a Japanese scientist.

A Soviet spokesman said, "We congratulate you." A Soviet scientist said the third Sputnik will be launched soon.

A crowd of 10,000 joyfully demonstrated last night at Huntsville, Ala., home of the Army Ballistic Missile Agency which produced Explorer.

In Washington, delight shone through the careful words of a panel of scientists assembled to answer newsmen's questions. Congressional leaders mixed congratulations with exhortations to push ahead quickly in the competition for space.

PSYCHIATRIC TREATMENT

At the trial yesterday, Satterwhite's mother proclaimed that Satterwhite did not know what he was doing, and Judge Stewart said that the boy would be able to get psychiatric assistance in his cell.

After the trial, Satterwhite started talking about the fires, and by the time he had arrived at Hillsboro, he had admitted to setting the fires in the past few weeks that the police attributed to arson.

Foreign Film Series Begins This Thursday

A ticket for the series, which includes eight films, costs $2 and can also be purchased at the door before the showing of the first film.

The films scheduled for this semester are: "Mr. Hulot's Holiday" (French, Feb. 6), "Border Street" (Polish, Feb. 20), "Forgotten Village" (Mexican, March 6), "Topaze" (French, March 20),

"Ten Days That Shook the World" (Russian, April 10), an evening of experimental films (April 24), "The Male Brute" (French, May 1) and "Angelo" (Italian, May 15).

were told at a news conference of civilian scientists in the program that "The name of this particular satellite is 1958 Alpha."

This, of course, seemed to suggest the scientists might call the second U. S. satellite "Beta," the second letter of the Greek Alphabet.

Meanwhile, the Army was still trying to decide on a new name for the rocket launching vehicle, still designated as "Jupiter-C." Among the names under consideration is that of "Juno," the consort of the mythical Jupiter who, like Jupiter, represented light and fire.

Dr. Moller Set To Lecture On Earth Satellites

Dr. Christian Moller, a Danish scientist and authority in the field of artificial earth satellities, will deliver four lectures this month here and at Duke University.

Dr. Moller, a professor at the University of Copenhagen, has been doing research at the UNC for the past two months. The project is sponsored by the Institute of Field Physics, a privately financed project for studies in gravitation.

Dr. Moller will speak on Monday at a seminar in the UNC Physics Department. He will lecture at Duke on Feb. 5 and Feb. 10, and again in Chapel Hill on Feb. 17.

UNC Med Student Admits Recent Fires

he told police that he had gone to Durham, and changed the license plates.

Police continued questioninng Satterwhite until about 1 a.m. Saturday during which time he explained these periods of emotional build-up and how he had found some relief in his childhood by breaking bottles. When he grew older, Satterwhite recalled taking long drives, which would give him partial release from the emotional pressure.

Under police questioning, and with the help of UNC student Owen Leland, who saw Satterwhite il Hill Hall the night police found two pianos soaked in oil, he admitted being in the building, and leaving whe Leland threatened to call police. He did not admit spreading the oil until yesterday afternoon.

The police found out that Satterwhite had paid for a semester's use of one of the music practice rooms in Hill Hall.

NEAR SCENE OF BLAZES

Satterwhite told conflicting stories to police Friday night about his whereabouts on Jan. 9, the night when six fires occurred on the university campus. However, he admitted to Sgt. Coy. E. Durham that he had been eating at Carolina Inn that evening. The Inn was the scene of three of the fires that occurred that night.

Sgt. Durham also reported that he had seen Satterwhite at the scene of the Swain Hall fire.

Satterwhite said that he had not previously undergone psychiatric treatment.

Capt. W. D. Blake of the police department said that Satterwhite broke into the Carmichael residence by cutting open a screen and opening a window.

Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver said that Satterwhite had a good scholastic record both as an undergraduate and as a first year medical student.

Satterwhite told police that he did not think of getting caught but only of the idea that he had to set these fires to relieve the emotional pressure that was upon him. He said that he believed he would die if he hadn't set the fires.

He told police also that he did not seek psychiatric aid because he was afraid of going to a psychiatrist.

He was described as being somewhat emotionally unbalanced, and police reported on Saturday white had lapses of memory as well as telling conflicting stories under questioning.

Blake said that despite the conflicting stories, Satterwhite was quite cooperative when being questioned.

Tar Heels Trounce SC, 115-88 To Tie All-Time Mark

KING'S CORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

If you're one of those sports enthusiaist who likes his football all year long, you can get back into the gridiron spirit come Feb. 10—that's when Jim Tatum's Carolina Tar Heels begin their 20-day spring training session.

ACC schools are allowed 20 days practice in a calendar period of 36 days and Tatum plans to close things with the annual Blue-White game in Kenan Stadium on March 15. The Tar Heels will have regular intra-squad scrimmages every Saturday except Feb. 17 in Kenan Stadium. Otherwise, their workouts will be held on Navy Field.

The Tar Heels will be practicing every Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday and take off the other three days in order to get in a few licks with the books. All sessions will be open to the public.

What will be Tatum's main concern during this important period?

"First of all we've got to find a replacement for Buddy Payne at left end," Tatum said yesterday. "We've got several good boys capable of taking over there; the problem is to come up with the best replacement."

Tatum figures he's got to establish a capable fullback for next season. Giles Gaca, who came into his own at that post late in the season, graduates in June leaving a gap for someone to fill. Bob Shupin and Ed Lipski are the leading candidates there, both having seen a good deal of action at fullback last season. Tatum also plans to try quarterback Curt Hathaway and halfback Don Coker at the line plunging post. He's also got several freshman who might be able to do the job.

"We need some depth at tackle also," commented Tatum, whose 1957 team surprised everybody with a 6-4 record.

Scholastically, the Tar Heels suffered light but major casualties. Mac Turlington, a standout end last season is not in school now, nor is sophomore tackle Don Stallings.

The two boys are taking correspondence courses and plan to attend summer school and Tatum is still hopeful they'll be back next fall.

Ever heard of a football lab? Well Duke University is holding one this spring. It's called the Dixie Clinic and it features coaches of all the Big Four schools.

This unique innovation is scheduled for March 17-19 at Duke. According to the program, the clinic will cover all phases of the game and demonstrations be conducted by players of the Big Four who'll be in the middle of spring training during that period.

Reservations are now being accepted for the three-day clinic.

Sports quickies—York Larese, the highly touted freshman basketball star here last year is back on crutches. York had an operation on both knees before the season started and was counted out this year. He was off the crutches for awhile but he's had to have this another knee operation which will keep him on crutches for another six or seven weeks . . . "I'm feeling fine though," smiles York . . . Some of the Carolina baseballers are already limbering up and there are a few sore joints around . . . South Carolina basketball coach Frank Johnson likes the idea of a postseason all-star game between the best seniors from the ACC and a group from other sections. "I like the idea of picking the players from the whole conference, rather than just the two Carolinas as has been suggested," comments Johnson . . . . It is conceivable that the ACC won't have an All-American cager this season . . . . There are no real high scorers in the conference, and it always seems that that's the way the A-A's are chosen . . .

Win Gives UNC 6-2 ACC Mark

COLUMBIA, S. C.—Carolina's defending national basketball champions came back from an almost three-weeks exam layoff to hand South Carolina a 115-88 defeat here tonight and tie an all-time team total for the Tar Heels.

This Atlantic Coast Conference victory, which kept the Chapel Hillians in a tie with N. C. State for the ACC lead, equalled the 115 points which the Tar Heels scored against William and Mary in 1956. The win left the Tar Heels with a 6-2 conference record and was win number 13 against three losses in overall competition.

KEARNS TOPS

Three Tar Heels hit over 20 points as Frank McGuire's talented club defeated Frank Johnson's Gamecocks for the second time this season. Senior guard Tommy Kearns chipped in 27 points to pace the attack. Forwards Lee Shaffer and Pete Brennan were close behind with 23 and 22 points respectively. Brennan's total, kept him out front in the conference scoring race. Sophomore guard Harvey Salz aided the winning cause with 17 points.

It was strictly no contest from the start as the Tar Heels opened up a vicious first half attack which sent them ahead 62-28 at intermission. McGuire used every one of his Tar Heels in the big victory which coupled with State's victory over Clemson left the consolidated brothers battling tooth and nail for the top berth in the conference standings.

North Carolina dominated action off the backboards and had one of its better night's from the floor hitting 45 percent against 39 for the losing Gamecocks.

The loss left South Carolina with a 6-2 conference record and an 4-12 mark over the season. Ray Pericola was high for the Gamecocks with 23 points and Dick Hoffman had 20.

Mermen Top ECC; Still Unbeaten

GREENVILLE — The Carolina swimmers made it eight in a row here yesterday with a 53-33 victory over the East Carolina mermen. It was the second time this season the Carolinians had beaten the Pirates.

The undefeated tankers had things more or less their way all afternoon as they won quite handily, though not as easily as the last time the two teams met when the Tar Heels won it 63-21.

Rose High Man

Walt Rose was high point man for Carolina in the meet as he continued his fine overall performance. Brent Nash performed very well as lead-off man in the 400-yard relay.

The closest race of the day was the breaststroke, with Mac Mahaffey taking it for the Tar Heels. Ned Meekins dropped a heartbreaker in the diving competition, as he lost by but 8/10 of a point to Midgett of East Carolina. A pool record was set by Sawyer of the Pirates in the backstroke, as he thrashed the water for the record time of 2:19.3.

Accused Firebug Committed To Dix Hill For Observation

Bound Over For April 28 Court Term

By BILL KINCAID

Richard Satterwhite, 21-year-old medical student, who has admitted to officers that he set the series of fires on the UNC campus, has been taken to the State Hospital in Raleigh for observation.

Judge Leo Carr ordered him committed to Dix Hill Saturday night for an observation period not to exceed 60 days.

Satterwhite was taken into custody Friday night after local police had traced an intruder who broke into the home of W. D. Carmichael Jr., University vice president, on Thursday afternoon.

Held Without Bond

The youth was ordered held without privilege of bond on a charge of arson for the April 28 term of Superior Court. He was also placed under $10,000 bond on charges of breaking and entering.

Officers said he has admitted that he set 10 fires and attempted to set two others in Chapel Hill since Jan. 8. Signed confessions have been obtained in the MacPherson and Carmichael cases.

All the fires did minor damage except one in Swain Hall. The Swain Hall fire caused damages estimated at $60,000.

Officers said Satterwhite claims he is beset by strange and uncontrollable urges to start fires. He said that he had felt a compulsion to set the fires. Earlier in his life he relieved built up tensions by breaking bottles and driving his car. He added that lately he had turned to setting fires.

Carmichael Break-in

Satterwhite was found in the Carmichael house by Mrs. Carmichael when she was returning

SP Hears Discussion By Johnson

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

General College Dean Cecil Johnson discussed and named the problems connected with the present General College adviser system last night at a Student Party meeting.

He said that the advisers were available at other times than at registration but that students often did not take the initiative in coming "in between times."

With the exception of those students who signed up for a course which is not available, he said that most of the other people in drop-add lines had failed in some academic obligation.

There are now 12 advisers and one dean for the General College, which now has 2,200 students. The advisers, who have to give up about a quarter of their teaching time are paid a stipend of $800 in addition to their regular salary.

Dean Johnson said that, if the advisers had fewer students under their care, they could do a better job. However, there is a financial problem.

He said that a bid had been placed to increase the number of advisers to meet the expected increase in enrollment; however, the ratio between students and advisers will remain about the same.

It is also difficult to find qualified men who are willing to give up research time to be an adviser and whom the department chairmen are willing to let divert some of their time from teaching the department.

Each adviser is chosen because "he is a fine person for the students to deal with." The present system was originated in the mid 1930's by President Frank Graham.

Dean Johnson said that several years ago the University tried having one faculty counselor for every 20 students. However, "the results as a whole were quite discouraging," he explained.

Jim Pittman introduced a resolution which urged, "that the Dean of General College and the Dean of Student Affairs consider this problem as a mutual one which can only be solved by the coordination of the responsibilities and duties of the Dorm Counselors and the academic advisers."

The resolution failed, but a resolution by Gary Greer to set up a SP committee to study the problem more fully was passed.

By acclamation Betty Huffman was elected to a seat in Dorm Women's District and Christie Farnham to the SP Advisory Board.

ORIGINAL PHONE COMPANY

Local Phone Company To Double Present Size

The Chapel Hill Telephone Company, owned by the University will double the size of its telephone building and install new equipment to provide 1,000 new lines and interceptor apparatus, according to an announcement by Chancellor William B. Aycock and Business Manager J. A. Branch.

The estimated cost of the additions will be $300,000.

Construction of the addition to the present telephone company building and the new installations will be completed next fall. Gray Culbreth is superintendent of the Telephone Company for the University.

The expansion has been approved by the Department of Administration of the North Carolina Budget Office in Raleigh after a survey by University officials, the State Utilities Commission, the Southern Bell Telephone Company, the General Telephone Company and the Automatic Electric Sales Company, manufacturers of exchange equipment.

One result of the new lines will be elimination of a number of multi-party lines and availability of additional private lines. Many Chapel Hill telephones are on four-party lines and a few on eight-party lines.

The interceptor equipment will permit the telephone company to assist callers who are dialing numbers which have been changed, and to help the callers in dialing the correct numbers.

The action came after a thorough study of needs of the telephone system and represents the first step in a ten-year improvement plan.

The construction and additions will be done at no cost to the taxpayers. The Chapel Hill Telephone Company will amortize the costs from receipts.

The University bought the telephone company from local private owners 30 years ago.

The growth of the telephone company in the past 20 years has paralleled the growth of the community and the University. There were about 1,000 telephones in Chapel Hill in 1936. At present there are 8,735 phones in use, or eight times the number of two decades ago. The largest increase has come in the past five years when the number of telephones here has doubled.

Chapel Hill was the first medium-sized town in the state to have an automatic telephone exchange system, and was one of the first towns of this size in the nation to have such installation.

Buddy Morrow And Orchestra To Be Feature At Mardi Gras

By CHARLIE SLOAN

Buddy Morrow, elaborate decoration and a new location will spark the second annual Mardi Gras weekend.

Scheduled for Feb. 28 and March 1, the event has been designed to give the entire campus a major dance weekend.

Morrow's group is probably best known for its recordings of Night Train and One Mint Julep. Featured vocalist for the organization is Betty Ann Blake.

Mardi Gras Committee Chairman Gerry Boudreau announced the committee's choice adding that additional attractions have been planned, but are yet to be signed.

Weekend Agenda

The weekend will consist of a dance Friday night, the 28th, and a concert Friday afternoon from 2 o'clock to 5. A concert will also be held Saturday, Feb. 1 from 3 to 5 p.m.

This year's dance will be held in the Tin Can. Boudreau explained that the old gym is being used because it will be easier to decorate. Over one thousand dollars have been allotted for the decorations.

The elaborate and expensive decorations have been planned in response to comments that dances at Carolina in the past have lacked atmosphere.

Tickets

The weekend will cost each couple three dollars. Boudreau pointed out that the actual price per couple should be about eight dollars. The difference in the cost of the weekend is being made up by Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Tickets are available at the GM information desk and Y Court. Other plates where they may be purchased will be announced later.

Petite Musicale Slated This Sunday To Feature Two Harpists, Soprano

The first Petite Musicale of the spring semester will be presented Sunday at 8 p.m. in Garrard Hall. This recital will feature Emily Kellam and Suzann Davids, duo-harpists of Chapel Hill.

These two artists will be assisted by Ethel Casey, soprano of Raleigh, in a group of Spanish songs by Manuel da Falla. The Da Falla songs, originally written for piano accompaniment, were transcribed for two harps by Carlos Salzedo, internationally recognized harpist and teacher of the two performers.

Mrs. Kellam was harp instructor at Hockaday School for Girls in Dallas, Texas, and Greenwich House Music School in New York City.

Her appearances have included performances with a harp ensemble at the Dallas Museum of Art, as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony during the 1951 and 1957 seasons, and as orchestra harpist with the University Symphony and Duke Symphony.

Mrs. Davids was harp instructor at the University of Iowa and has appeared as principal harpist with the Elkhart (Indiana) Symphony and with various other Symphony orchestras in Iowa. She has also appeared as soloist with the University of Iowa Orchestra and as a solist in a three-state tour with the University of Iowa Band.

America Finally Admitting To Education Shortcomings

Awhile back, an American scientist told a group of editors: "Until the time comes when the Phi Beta Kappa has the same social standing as the football player, we are going to fall behind U.S.S.R."

While the scientist's point may be a bit overstated, it does focus on a basic problem in our whole educational system. Running with a football or tossing a basketball through a hoop always has been a surer route to campus status than turning out a superlative report card.

Too often, good grades have called as much for apology as for pride.

It's still that way to an extent, but there are signs that a gradual change is taking place. A national magazine reported recently that the athlete whose brains can't keep pace with his brawn has lost considerable prestige on college campuses.

There are more academic scholarships available than ever before. Parents, eyeing rising college expenses, are increasingly eager to see their youngsters pass up an extra-curricular activity or two for a bout with the books.

Some newspapers are making a special efforts to recognize leadership and scholastic merit. The Observer's "Top Teens" features are a case in point.

The widely publicized need for brainpower to insure our national survival is gradually altering attitudes toward eggheads in general.

This is all to the good. For too long adults and adolescents alike have contributed to an unrealistic standard of values on high school and college camupses.

We're not knocking halfbacks and forwards. We cheer for them with the rest of the crowd and will continue to. It's just that we believe that fellow who racks up an A in physics has done something even more important than scoring a touchdown or a field goal.

He deserves some cheers, too.—The Charlotte Observer

Investigators Should Probe Prior To Wrecks, Not After

It's becoming almost routine to read of midair plane collisions which claim not only the lives of persons travelling through the skies, but of innocent people on ground as well.

And a classic example of what occurs after each such accident appears in a wire story from Norwalk, Calif., over the weekend.

"Investigating teams from the Air Force and the Navy poked through scorched wreckage at two crash sites today to learn what caused the awesome, midair collision of two big military planes over this Los Angeles suburb last night," it reads.

The collision claimed 48 lives. One of the total was a 23-year-old housewife who was decapitated as she ran from her home to see what had happened. She was cut down by flying wreckage.

Whatever the "investigating teams" uncover at the crash sites will probably be used to explain away the horrible tragedy seen in the collision. But it's just cold fact that, as in previous cases, the whole cause lies in the two planes' passing through the same point at the same time—with resulting collision.

The Air Force and the Navy would do better to make their investigations before crashes, and not after them, in order that future tragedies could be averted. Indeed, it would be better to examine flight orders and airways than wreckage of twisted steel and mutilated bodies.

It was not long ago that the Civil Aeronautics Board conducted extensive surveys and hearings to determine just how crowded the skies are, and how air traffic could be controlled to prevent awesome collisions. Perhaps more money should be spent to arrive at a uniform, workable plan to correct what the board found.

Scholars Deserve Some Cheers, Too

If proposals of Secretary of Welfare Folsom are any yardstick, America is finally getting around to admitting the real cause of apathy within her vast educational system.

Urging a speed-up in scientific training, the Secretary has proposed that science and math on the high school level be bolstered by a program estimated to cost 605 million dollars. And how will it be spent?

"Of the total, 550 million would be for grants on a 50-50 matching basis to encourage the states and local school systems to expand and improve such teaching," the announcement read. "The other 55 million would go on a matching basis to state education departments to help strengthen their own staffs for supervising math and science."

Underlying those proposals is the much-too-late admission by the top man in our educational system that America's teachers, and programs set down for them, are the real course for the nation's relapse in scientific preparation. Teachers, themselves, are not sufficiently trained to instruct others.

What our school teachers need to do is quit baby handling teenage youths, come to realize that there is more in life than conformity to society, and demand sweat and blood of students who now look upon high school diplomas as records of attendance.

Too, the educational system should be geared to offer new knowledge and ideas to the better-than-average student, rather than providing minimum requirements so that the least intellectual of all the class will find promotion an easy route.

Perhaps 605 million dollars will bring about these revisions. If it doesn't, then it's time for more money to be allotted so that American education will one day recover the respect which it long since has lost.

Where Credit Due

Last Saturday The Daily Tar Heel ran an editorial, "UNC must Reassert Her Leadership In A New Age," reprinted verbatim from The Charlotte News.

We had preceded the reprint with a credit line, but somewhere in the printer's shop that line was separated from the editorial. Thus, it looked to some as if we were guilty of plagiarism.

Suffice it to say that we in no way attempted to take credit for work not of our own making, and regret the mechanical oversight which made it appear so.

J. Y.'S JAZZ

Church, Jazz Said To Have Lot In Common

The subject of jazz and Christianity has been attacked by many different people and in many different ways. Because I would like to develop the matter to a moderately full extent, I intend to take a couple of columns to explore things, and in the process of doing so will be making a great many observations which are of a purely personal nature. I would appreciate comment on this problem very much, as one person can hardly begin to develop its dimensions.

The Kai Winding Septet recently made a recording for Columbia called Trombone Panorama (CL 998) on which the Horace Silver composition "The Preacher" is featured. I had never been given the opportunity of hearing this tune in a really definitive setting, so hearing this was a major revelation.

There is more pure religion in this recording than many church services I have attended. I can't really explain why; the effect is one of many aspects. The most immediately striking of these is the simplicity of the tune itself. There is a marked resemblance to the old gospel hymns - the essence being of course simplicity and rhythm. There is more than the tune, though; there is the performance itself. It is the fervor of the performance with which I am primarily concerned.

The Septet starts "The Preacher" quietly, rather reverently. The melody is exploited purely for its simplicity, without unnecessary embellishment. The coda, however ,is entirely different.

suddenly all four trombones, with drummer Jack Franklin applying a rocking two beat, burst into an exhilarating finish, which matches any hymn I have ever heard. It is this which brings jazz into the realm of Christianity.

Historically, jazz arose from many roots. Perhaps most important were African rhythms, plantation field blues and chants, and gospel singing. Gospel singing is the most spirited, emotional form of worship. Despite its emotionality, it is as legimately Christian as the High Episcopal Church or the Holy Rollers. Poor logic would lead one to say that since gospel singing is a form of Christian worship, and jazz arose from gospel singing, Jazz is Christian in essence. Although this assumption has a certain amount of vadidity, there is one primary fault: jazz has come a long way in the past sixty years, and with the rise has come a change in values and approach.

The essence of jazz, therefore, is what we must examine in order to make any conclusions about its relationship to Christianity. I shall do this on Saturday, bearing in mind the comments which I have made upon the Kai Winding Septet's recording of "The Preacher."

Arab Merger Presents Problem

What's in a name?

The name of the new state that is the combination of the two former states of Syria and Egypt is the United Arab State. The head of this state in all probability is General Gamal Abdel Nasser, current head of Egypt.

The name of the state simply suggests to the people of the Arab world a rallying point, a possible medium for the uniting of the entire Middle East area, with the exception of Israel. It represents to Israel the first step by the Arab world to form a united opposition to the Israeli state.

The union itself is the first fruit of the seeds of militant nationalism in the area, and according to Nasser, one of the basic things that this union will bring about is the purgation of outside influences from the countries involved. When one realizes that these words come from Nasser, one realizes that he means the purgation of Western influences.

Already the seed of nationalism is bearing fruit, when ministers of Jordan, Iraq, and Saudi Arabia, announced Saturday that they too would try to seek union.

Geographically the Egyptian-Syrian combine wedges Israel in, and controls much of the Western oil pipelines as well as the Suez Canal. It must be remembered also that this union is now profoundly anti-Western.

Politically this union has a strong selling point, since it can offer allegiance of the Arab states against Israel, known to be the Arab common enemy. The next step could be the uniting of the new alliance with the proposed alliance of Jordan, Iraq, and Saudi Arabia. The result of this would be disastrous to the Baghdad Pact, and since the make-up of the current United Arab State is firmly anti-Western, the Soviets would stand a good chance of having the bridge to Africa that they want, as well as the wedge against Israel in the promoting of a limited war. What is more the Russians may get control of Middle East oil, which is so vital to the West.

The picture in the Middle East is anything but bright, and although the U. S. has scientific problems to worry about at home, the problem of American foreign policy still remains acute.

What is necessary here is the realization that something must be done to combat the United Arab State idea from spreading so far that the U. S. loses any semblance of a alliance system in the Middle East. If the U. S. can get the other countries of the Middle East to unite as they hope to do, but to keep themselves separate from the new Arab state, there remains a chance that the Middle East tinder box will not be touched off into a blazing limited war, which most experts feel the U. S. would lose at the present time.

What is also necessary is that U. S. Aid to the countries of the Middle East, exclusive of the new Arab state, be continued and increased so that the U. S. might start meeting the economic offensive of the Russians. One way to do this would be to cut the interest rate on loans to foreign countries to 2½%, or on a par with the Russians, rather than trying to compete with the Russians while charging a full per cent more interest.

Moreover, the nations of the Arab world that are part of the U. S. alliance system must be aided to defend themselves against the possible onslaught by the new Arab state. This requires not only arms, but also education, for in the majority of cases communist penetration in countries has been achieved by one method. This method has been the invasion of a department of government which had the closest control over the police and economic forces of the country. If the communists attain that critical step, their victory in the battle for supremacy of that state is almost assured, since they have control of both the police power as well as the purse strings.

Another thing that the U. S. must do is try to solve the Arab-Israeli refugee problem as speedily as possible through the U.N., for as long as that problem exists, the better chance the Soviet Union has of driving a wedge into the Middle East and consummating all the possible gains it is after, including the partitioning of Asia and Europe.

The time for alert foreign policy and clear-headed statesmanship is now.

'COLOR OF DARKNESS'

J. Purdy Is Promising Author, Book Reveals

by Frank Crowther

In the past several years, the American literary scene has welcomed very few young writers of obvious exceptional talent. In fact, there has been a paucity of writers who have even mastered the stylistic and structural forms of the short story—after all, there are so many markets today, that one only has to have enough money for postage and a reasonably competent talent for reeling off a yarn and, voila, he's in print.

In this context, we have more short story writers than ever before; on the other hand, however, we have only occasionally encountered a new artist, a man well versed in his profession and who possesses the rare talent of communicating his depth of feeling and insight through the short story. We may have just heard from one of those rare birds in the volume of short stories recently published by New Directions Books entitled "Color Of Darkness," by James Purdy.

This collection will undoubtedly become the subject of considerable discussion, even controversy. Already, many of the writers in this country as well as in England have commented favorably on Purdy's style of writing and the subject matter with which he has concerned himself.

The volume contains 11 short stories and a novella; the latter, 63: Dream Palace, is a near miss at a minor masterpiece.

In the novella the author treats the strange relationship between two brothers who, though apparently situated in New York City, inhabit some subterranean house on "Sixty-three Street." The allegory is further emphasized when one of the brothers describes their house as "a not-right-kind of place at all" which is "alive with something. I don't know what. . . . ."

Our main criticism is that the novella lacks the demonstrated continuity of thought and concentration shown in the previous short stories in the book. There are actually two stories in the one and, although this may have been the author's intent, we feel that the main theme is delayed too long and thereby lacks some of the intensity it very well could have.

The subtle softness of James Purdy's style, however, is really something to experience. His combination of a storm of horror with the calm of a child-like tenderness will arouse even the most insensible reader's emotions, as when he relates the feelings of brother for brother as "too terrible and closed in for the rest of the world to know or care about." His descriptive artistry is quite impressive: "He stood in the immense vacant attic with its suffocating smell of rotting wood, its soft but ticklingly clammy caresses of cobwebs, the feeling of small animal eyes upon him and the imperceptible sounds of disintegration and rot."

Mr. Purdy has presented a most moving association in these two brothers whom we find in an alien, dark-sided existence. We are almost forced to try to escape with them from some monstrous dungeon, a dungeon strangely familiar to us all, a dungeon which lurks in the allegorical world of darkness and gloom, sickness and despair. As we recover from this delirious journey, we wonder how much of an allegory it really was. We seem to have been there before.

In the short stories, the themes are varied but the anxiety and the "color of darkness" prevail.

Almost all of the stories are acutely concerned with the "other side" of the relationships between love and hate. We find a paraplegic and his wife striving for a glimpse of love in an intolerable situation which breeds only anguish; we participate in one of the most unusual reunions of college child who is brooding over some pictures of his roommates; and, most pathetically and almost unbearably, we read of the passions between a sick dead father and his mother who forces the boy to burn the photos.

With this book, James Purdy has made an impressive, if somber and awesome, arrival.

Of course one volume does not rank him with the best nor does it assure us that Mr. Purdy will continue as honestly in his pursuits as he seems to in "Color Of Darkness." We hope, however, that he survives his first publication and the sudden concern shown him.

THE NEW REPUBLIC

Sketches In The Sand

That is what kills political writing, this absurd pretence you are delivering a great utterance. You never do. Your are just a puzzled man making notes about what you think. You are not building the Pantheon, then why act like a graven image? You are drawing sketches in the sand which the sea will wash away. What more is your book but your timidity by frowning learnedly on anyone are you to be grandiloquent and impersonal? The truth is you're afraid to be wrong. And so you put on these airs and use the established phrases, knowing that they will sound familiar and be respected.

But this fear of being wrong is a disease. You cover and qualify and elucidate, you speak vaguely, you mumble because you are afraid of the sound of your own voice. And then you apologize for your timidity by forwning learnedly on anyone who honestly regards thought as an adventure, who strikes ahead and takes his chances. You are like a man trying to be happy, like a man trying too hard to make a good mashie shot in golf. It can't be done by trying so hard to do it. Whatever truth you contribute to the world will be one lucky shot in a thousand misses. You cannot be right by holding your breath and taking precautions. —Walter Lippmann

DANISH PROFESSOR CHRISTIAN MOLLER
To Lecture Both Here And At Duke University

World Authority On Earth Satellites Plans Lectures At UNC & Duke

A Danish scientist, working in Chapel Hill for two months on gravitation, relativity and related influences in connection with artificial earth satellies and atomic clocks, is lecturing four times at UNC and Duke University during the month of February.

Dr. Christian Moller of the University of Copenhagen spoke first on Monday at a seminar in the Physics Department at Phillips Hall heret.

Dr. Moller's research at UNC is sponsored by the Institute of Field Physics, a project which is privately financed and undertakes to pursue studies in gravitation, particularly in areas in which Albert Einstein was performing research at the time of his death. Dr. Moller's study deals with gravitational waves. He also studies energy density, whether it is unique and whether a similar thing can be done with momentum energy. He is investigating the implications of these results for the quantization of the gravitational fields.

Other lectures by Dr. Moller in the theortical seminars and the Joint Duke-Carolina Physics Colloquium are Feb. 5 at Duke, Feb. 10 at Duke and Feb. 17 at Chapel Hill.

The topic on Monday, Feg.3 is "The Energy-Momentum Tensor in General Relativity."

Dr. Moller is a world-renowned theoretical physicist and has long been a professor at the University of Copenhagen.

He was recently appointed director of NORDITA, a scientific joint enterprise of Denmark, Finland, Iceland. Norway and Sweden.

In his work here, Dr. Moller is associated with the research team of Dr. Bryce DeWitt and Dr. Cecile DeWitt, who head the Institute of Field Physics.

Established last fall in Copenhagen NORDITA was planned to facilitate close cooperation between universities in the parent countries and to provide opportunities for advanced theoretical study for postdoctoral physicists.

Supported by the five countries on a population basis NORDITA (Nordic Institute for Theoretical Physics) started its work in Copenhagen after the Theoretical Study Group of CERN there was moved to Geneva.

With a permanent faculty of outstanding physicists NORDITA will also play host to foreign physicists. it is thus hoped to provide a firm basis for collaboration inside the field of theoretical physics, according to Dr. Moller.

Raper Is Symposium Class Seminar Head

By DAVIS YOUNG

John Raper, senior from Fayetteville, is currently serving as chairman of the Classroom-Departmental Seminar Committee of the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs.

Raper in commenting on the purpose and progress of his committee to date stated: "The purpose of the Departmental Seminar Committee is to invite supplementary speakers to participate in classroom lectures in the morning and afternoon seminars aimed at students majoring in the various departments.

Specific Subjects

"These speakers will speak on the specific subject of each department as it is affected by the theme of the General Symposium—survival.

"Many of the departments through this committee and the Symposium have invited important men in their fields from the surrounding area to speak during Symposium Week on some phase of the general topic.

"The Departmental-Seminar Committee is responsible too for arranging the schedule of the main speakers in classroom lectures. The committee is currently working with each University department and school in co-ordinating a Symposium program that will present to the students the theme, specifically through classroom lectures and afternoon seminars on a departmental level.

"Many of our own faculty members, who are well qualified to speak on some general phase of the theme, have been invited. We are also working with different organizations on campus to help bring about a successful conclusion to our part of the program.

Sub-Chairmen

"I would like to acknowledge the help of my sub-chairman Dan Southerland and Mason Wilkins and all of the committee members who have participated up to date."

In addition to his Symposium work, Raper has been active in numerous campus activities including: Beta Theta Pi fraternity, University Party vice chairman, student legislature, GMAB and was selected as a Goettingen Exchange Student in 1956.

home. When she asked him his name he told her it was "Satterwhite" and then "Stevenson." When he fled from the house Mrs. Carmichael got a description of the car and his license number.

Chapel Hill police found that the New Jersey license plate which he had on his car had been stolen from a car in Durham. However, with the description of the car police were able to trace the car to Satterwhite.

He was apprehended Friday at 8 p.m.

Within a half hour Satterwhite had admitted to the setting of a fire Jan. 23 at the D. A. MacPherson residence, and to breaking and entering the Carmichael home. He later admitted the other blazes, officers said.

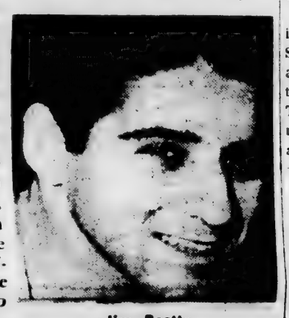
Light Action On Carolina Sports Front

This and that on the Carolina sports front . . . . . .



We're now in that perennial period following exams when things on the athletic front are at a virtual standstill. Take this week's schedule for example. There is no varsity action in any sport scheduled this week until Saturday. And that's when all the teams get back into action.

The freshman basketballers will provide most of the action prior to Saturday's resumption of normal activity. The frosh will meet the N. C. State frosh in Raleigh Wednesday night, travel to ACC (JV'S) on Thursday and round out the week against the Duke yearlings on Saturday.

Friday, the freshman wrestling team will get into action for the first time since it lost, 23-15 on Jan. 17 to ACC. The match will be held at Pfeiffer . . . The frosh will get a chance to avenge the VPI loss Saturday when two teams collide here . . . The UNC and VPI varsity grapplers will also meet Saturday and the varsity would like to get some revenge for a 26-6 loss to VPI on Jan. 17.

Swimmers Only Unbeaten Team On Campus

Carolina's only undefeated team, the swimmers, splash back into action at Bowman Gray Pool here Saturday against Florida. Pat Eary's club will seek win number nine against the Floridians, who are tabbed possibly the toughest team the Tar Heels will face this season . . . That the mermen are one of the finest teams in the country is evidenced in the fact that they have not had one close meet this season.

Jim Beatty

Dave Scurlock continues to win national recognition for outstanding track performances . . . .The Greensboro native's last achievement was a shining victory in the 1,000 yard run in the Boston AA games Saturday night. His time was 2:11.1, only a tenth second off the meet record . . . Former Carolina All-American Jim Beatty also won praise for his work in the Boston affair . . . .Beatty's 4:08.9 time in the mile was second only to the great Ron Delany.

Tar Babies Losing Men To Football

The Carolina freshman basketball team could conceivably be reduced to nine men by Feb. 10 . . . .Scoring ace Doug Moe is ineligible for the rest of the semester due to scholastic difficulties (he's still in school, however) and three of the Tar Babies will probably begin football practice when spring practice opens on the tenth . . . . John Hickey, Russ Hollers and Lennie Beck all played for the gridders in 1957.

Two big swimming events are scheduled for Bowman Gray Pool in the near future . . . The Carolina Swimming Collegiates is set for Feb. 10, followed on the 15th by the Southern Interscholastic Championships . . . The ACC swim championships are slated for Feb. 27-March 1.

Assistant basketball coach Buck Freeman reports that the Tar Heels will be working out every afternoon this week in preparation for their big game with Duke here Saturday afternoon on TV . . . . The Blue Devils have emerged from hardwood obscurity since the exam layoff and are expected to give the Tar Heels a real battle . . . Fortunately this one is scheduled for Carolina's home court.

West Va. Still Tops In AP Poll

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

After due consideration of West Virginia's first defeat of the basketball season, the sports writers and broadcasters who follow the game closely today voted the Mountaineers the No. 1 college team in the nation for the seventh straight week.

The race for the top spot became wide open when the last two unbeaten major teams, West Virginia and St. John's of Brooklyn, finally met defeat last week. But the observers who had liked West Virginia during its 17-game winning streak after the Mountaineers lost to Duke and then bounced back to whip Florida State.

In the weekly Associated Press poll of sports writers and broadcasters, 44 out of 120 still put West Virginia on top while the remaining votes were scattered, 27 going to Kansas. The result gave West Virginia 1,061 points on the usual 10-9-8 etc. basis while runnerup Kansas polled only 928 points.

Kansas, idle since Jan. 18, didn't get a chance to cash in on the Mountaineer loss by doing some thing which would impress the experts. Third place Cincinnati won two games, but a pair of unranked opponents held down Oscar Robertson's scoring and didn't let the Bearcats put on much of a show. Thus Cincinnati again beat out Kansas State by a rather narrow margin for third place.

Only one chance in the top ten was made in this week's voting as San Francisco, Oklahoma State, Carolina, Maryland, Carolina State and Temple round out the upper bracket.

Kentucky, rated eighth a week ago, dropped its fourth game of the season to Georgia Tech and slipped to 12th in the point totals. Maryland and N. C. State moved up one notch in the ratings and Temple, winging along on a 13-game winning streak after two early defeats, took over 10 place.

Scurlock Is Star In Boston; Meet Set Sat.

By DAVE WIBLE

Carolina's track team, which is being respected more and more for having members which rate high on the national competition level, had its most recent claim to fame Saturday night when middle-distance star Dave Scurlock won the Boston AA 1,000 yard run.

Scurlock, making his debut on the big-meet boards, ran a beautifully planned race finishing a tenth of a second off the meet record of 2:10:1. Running second most of the way and dropping to third with a little more than lap to go, the big speedster made his move in the final lap and with a final kick, won with four yards to spare.

It was quite an accomplishment for Scurlock since both of the runners he edged out, Harry Bright of the N. Y. Pioneer Club and Bruce Lockerbie of the N. Y. Athletic Club, have been competing at the big indoor meets for several years.

Exam Layoff Hurt

Looking back at his pre-race strategy, Scurlock said, "I had planned to move out to start with if the pace was slow, but Bright took the lead at a good pace so I decided to holud back until the final lap. Exams messed up my training schedule and I was afraid of my condition so I held back a little".

Next Saturday Scurlock will run in the Millrose games at Madison Square Garden in New York probably against the same field. This time the distance will be 880 yards. The record for the distance at Millrose is 1:50.3, the world's record, and is held by Arnie Sowell who is running for the U. S. Army. Sowell has not decided whether or not he will run and will not know until the end of this week.

Track Notes

The Tar Heels will send a team up to Lexington, Virginia, Saturday to compete for individual honors in the V.M.I. Relays. Duke, Maryland, and State will be there and it should be a good preview of things to come in the ACC Indoor Games to be held here March 1. . . . . Wayne Bishop will run in the 2-mile at V.M.I. He will also run in several more of the big indoor meets but does not know which ones yet . . . . . Carolina will have two more practice meets before the indoor championships. State and Wake Forest will be here February 15, and Duke will be here February 22.

Writer Says Kearns Might Play Football

Tommy Kearns might play football next year.

According to Durham Herald sports Editor Jack Horner, Kearns is trying to get in law school here and says, "if I do, I might go out for football."

Horner quoted coach Jim Tatum as saying: "He's so quick and fast, he could really run the option play because he's such a great ball handler. Kearns is smart and a good thinker. I think he would have made a great college quarterback."

Kearns would be eligible for one season since an athlete is allowed four years competition in a five year period. Tommy, of course, will have used up all his basketball eligibility at the end of this season but he will still have a year of athletic eligibility if he decides to go out for the football team next season.

Men's Honor Council Suspends Five For Violations During Fall Semester

Dr. King Talks At Phi Meet

By ED ROWLAND

A college should "aid in the development of responsible thinking," Dr. James King, associate professor of history here, told members of the Phi and their guests last night.

Dr. King, in delivering the guest address at the Phi inauguration of its president, added that colleges need to follow two maxims: do not teach too many subjects, and what you teach, teach throughly.

He declared that there is no "glory road" to education, but constant drill is needed.

Dr. King, who was introduced by outgoing president Jim Tolbert, stressed the different purposes of a college from that of a university. He said colleges should lay the foundation for better living in any career. "Intellectual power should be the goal of a college," Dr. King, who teaches a "suicide fifty" history section, declared. The graduate has the art of applying knowledge, he said.

He said college educations are divided into two levels: general, which is exposure if not absorbtion of broad culture, and arts and sciences, which is administration of knowledge through culture.

The speaker, who gave his brief talk before some fifty persons, emphasized that due to the practice presenting quantity instead of quality in courses, said a degree may be obtained without being earned. He said the blame must be shared by everyone. "The curriculum is being enriched while it is being im-

One Case Involves Excuses

Five of 18 men found guilty by the Men's Honor Council during the fall semester have been indefinitely suspended from the University, a report showed here today.

Of the remaining 13, 12 were placed on probation by the Men's Council and another was handed an official reprimand.

A report by Council Clerk Gary Cooper showed that one student was indefinitely suspended after his conviction on charges of purchasing and using false excuses, lying to Honor Council members and to his professor.

False Excuse

It was assumed that conviction and judgment grew out of the false excuse scandal uncovered here.

Other cases in which defendants were indefinitely suspended from the University by the Honor Council include the following:

1. Lying on four counts regarding absences from a sociology quiz and final examination.

2. Altering an official University excuse and lying to an instructor.

3. Cheating on a Spanish quiz and lying extensively to Honor Council members.

Twelve Cases

Cooper's report showed that the Council tried a total of 12 cases during the fall semester, involving a total of 23 UNC men. Five of the total students involved were found not guilty.

According to the Council clerk, the remainder of cases involving students alleged to have used fraudulent excuses—growing out of the recent scandal—are now being prepared for trial.

Council Chairman George Ragsdale said earlier that substantially more than 50 persons probably would be involved in the excuse scandal uncovered here just before classes resumed after the Christmas holidays.

At the same time, he said the Council would look with leniency upon those violators who turned themselves in for use of the fraudulent excuses.

Message Comes From 'Explorer' — Staying Longer Than Visit

NEW YORK, Feb. 4 (AP)—The first American visitor to space has messaged home: staying longer. Come on up. Weather fine.

That's the report from earth-bound scientists listening to the humming radio of the Explorer satellite.

The Explorer has given them early information on the three things it was sent into orbit to observe: cosmic rays, meteorites and the temperature of sunlight and earth-shadow.

From these first reports scientists know that the cosmic weather has been calm. They also know that Explorer will be aloft for many a stormy day in space as well.

These stormy days come after the gigantic solar flares explode from the surface of the sun, sending bursts of high energy radiation pouring toward earth.

In its egg-shaped orbit, Explorer will be able to measure the fury of the sun above the atmosphere and report back whether mere flesh and blood humans can endure it.

The orbit of Explorer has now been pegged as 230 miles from the earth at its closest and 1,600 miles from the earth at its most distant. Average traveling time in this path is a little less than an hour and 55 minutes.

Scientists also believe that Explorer may stay in space some 10 years at the most, several years at the least.

Journalism School Gets Check From Foundation

Journalism Foundation directors have turned over a check for $3,602.62 to the School of Journalism for expenditure at the discretion of the Dean.

In accepting the check which represents the income from the Foundation trust funds, Dean Norval Neil Luxon said, "No other state press association supports its School of Journalism as does the North Carolina group. We are most grateful."

Scholarships

Dean Luxon reported on the expenditure of Foundations funds in 1957, $1,350 of which went for scholarships. Donald J. Chipman of the Piedmont Publishing Company, Winston-Salem, treasurer of the Foundation, made the financial report to the directors at a meeting held in connection with the 33rd Midwinter Press Institute.

Thomas L. Robinson, publisher, Charlotte News, was selected to a three-year term as director, and Hal H. Tanner, publisher, Goldsboro News-Argus, was elected to fill the unexpired term of J. Neal Cadieu, late publisher of the Richmond County Journal, Rockingham. Tanner will serve one year.

Arnold Moss Portrays G. B. Shaw In 'Back To Methuselah' Production

For years one of America's leading depictors of classic roles, Arnold Moss will be having his first encounter with the modern classicist, Bernard Shaw, in "Back to Methuselah," which comes to Memorial Hall, Feb. 28 and March 1, at 8:30 p. m., with Tyrone Power, Faye Emerson, and Arthur Treacher starred in person.

As if to make up for lost time, Moss is working on this show in a triple capacity—as actor, adapter, and co-producer with the Theatre Guild.

"Back to Methuselah" has long been considered one of the most masterful of Shaw's works. But it was unwieldy, requiring three evenings to present in its original form.

Moss undertook to adapt the play into one evening's entertainment, without losing any of the essential ideas or the sharp wit of the original.

During last July and August he tried out his adaptation on the summer theatre trail with great success. After making a few further revisions, on the basis of audience reaction during the tour, Moss was joined by the Theatre Guild in presenting the play in 42 cities before opening in New York in March.

This union with the Theatre Guild as co-producer in a sense returned him to his home base. After serving as an apprentice with Eva Le Gallienne's Civic Reportory Theatre, Moss had retired from professional theatre to teach English and Drama at Brooklyn College.

In 1941 the Theatre Guild called him out of his retirement to appear for them in Ernest Hemingway's 'Fifth Column' with Franchot Tone. The teaching profession lost a well-regarded member when the critics acclaimed Moss's performance, and he has been a steady theatre worker ever since.

After appearances in "Hold on to Your Hats" with Al Jolson and Martha Raye; Maxwell Anderson's "Journey to Jerusalem;" and Elmer Rice's "Flight to the West," Moss aligned himself with Shakespeare, playing Prospero in Margaret Webster's production of "The Tempest," starring Vera Zorina.

His performance turned Moss overnight into one of the nation's leading Shakespeare actors.

Feeling that Miss Webster was in no small part responsible for his success in his first encounter with Shakespeare, Moss has enlisted her services as director again in his first bout with Shaw in 'Back to Methuselah."

Following "The Tempest," Moss was in gerat demand for Shakespearean roles. In "Twelfth Night" he was acclaimed "the best Malvolio of our generations." He has also appeared as Gloucester in "King Lear with Louis Calhern as Lear, and with the American Shakespearean Festival as the Duke of Vienna in "Measure for Measure."

General College Adviser System Needs Revamping

It only takes a little arithmetic to uphold a statement by General College Dean Cecil Johnson Monday night that advisers in General College are handicapped by the large number of students with whom they deal.

Speaking at a Student Party meeting, the Dean pointed out that 12 advisers and the Dean of the General College now work with some 2,200 students during time out of the class room. For that service each adviser receives an $800 stipend.

What this adds up to is an average of around 183 students per adviser, or more than nine times the number per adviser which was tested here several years ago. The results of the test for 20 students per adviser were, however, "quite discouraging," Dean Johnson said.

Perhaps 20 students per adviser is an undesireable number for a satisfactory adviser system at the University. Nevertheless, it appears evident that to thrust over 180 students upon each adviser is also undesireable—not only for the adviser but primarily for the student's sake.

Each adviser spends from two hours a day to 10 hours a week, on the average, in performance of his extra job. That adds up to about 160 hours a semester, or little less than one hour per student per semester under the current system.

Obviously, that's not much time for counselling when figured on an individual basis. It seems doubtful that any close relation — one which would be an incentive to the student through a close association with his adviser—could develop under these circumstances.

These overburdening conditions could go a long way toward support of a dormitory counselling system conceived by Student Body President Sonny Evans as a boost to the education process at the University.

Thus, not only would demands of General College advisers be relaxed, but the plan also would contribute to the concept of residence halls' playing a significant role out of the class room, other than a place to sleep and dress, by becoming the centers of study which they should be.

Whatever is done at the University, it is obvious that some steps must soon be taken to assure that the potential of every student is more fully realized. That this is not being done today is one of the major problems of the education system.

Laws Should Be Rewritten If Doerfer Testimony True

If FCC Chairman John C. Doerfer has the right, as he says, to collect from government and private enterprises for the same expenses, then it's high time the laws be rewritten to read otherwise.

Testifying before a House subcommittee, the Eisenhower Republican acknowledged private groups in the radio and television broadcasting industry picked up the check for a Western trip in 1954 for which Doerfer also charged the government.

"But," the story read, "he claimed he had a right under law to do so."

Perhaps, under law, Doerfer does have the right to collect from private sources and the federal government at the same time for the same expenses. But the American public cannot be blinded into endorsing such practices.

Nor do we go along with Doerfer's comments when Subcommittee counsel Bernard Schwartz asked the FCC chairman whether the law allowed him (Doerfer) to make a profit on a speech made at government expense.

"That's a very nasty way of putting it," Doerfer said, claiming that $900 paid to him by the National Association of Broadcasters was an "honorarium" — or fee — for making the speech.

Well, we believe that Subcomittee hearings have uncovered a "very nasty way" of behaving on the part of the top man on the Federal Communications Commission. Put it like you want to, it's hot complementary in the end.

Apparently, Doerfer himself is taking stock of his behavior on the FCC since his appointment by President Eisenhower. It hardly seems coincidental that he reimbursed two weeks ago an Oklahoma television station for plane fare for which the federal government was also charged.

But, then, perhaps he just now remembered to reimburse the Oklahoma firm — days before House Subcommittee hearings were scheduled to open in Washington.

West's Challenge Is Foolish Again

Melvin West, the Jacksonville, N. C. disc jockey who got lost at sea last fall on a motor boat trip to Bermuda, is back at it again.

This time, the papers say, West has been gone five days in the "Empress of North Carolina" without word from his 16-foot boat. He had estimated the 620 mile sea trip would take him 12 days to complete.

According to news accounts, West undertook the trip to prove that motorboating had "come of age."

Well, you'd think that a man who cost the taxpayers thousands of dollars by his first futile attempt, besides time and effort by the Coast Guard spent at sea, would himself have "come of age" to refrain from such ridiculous challenges of the ocean.

Football, too, has come of age as a modern sport, but it has certain places and seasons to limit its play. And so with ice skating; but no fool woutd attempt to skate across Lake Michigan in the summer time.

Residences Need New Telephones

Now that the University-owned Chapel Hill Telephone Company is expanding its physical facilities on Rosemary Street, maybe funds also could be supplied to replace seemingly ancient telephones in local residence halls, fraternity and sorority houses.

Most of the telephones work all the time. But we have known cases where money dropped in a phone cash box was not heard by the operator, producing over-the-telephone arguments before a long distance conversation can begin.

Not only are mechanical disorders a bother to the subscriber, but they also bring about mbarassment for the Carolina gentleman who calls out f town for a date—when the operator keeps asking where his money is!

Such conditions should be corrected forthwith.

Talking Liquor Stores Would Tell Sad Story

Editor:

Thirty years ago, in 1927, I graduated from the University of North Carolina. I have my letter as cheer leader, my letter as basketball manager, and I have a Glee Club key. They called me Boo Loo. I don't know whether you have such a club there now.

I am a Methodist minister and recently I sent the enclosed tract to a few of the liquor stores and the enclosed came back unsigned. Knowing the Tar Heel is a fair and objective newspaper, I am sending this tract on to you and ask you to put it before the student body in print.

After you have experienced 30 years of dealing with your own classmates and people you will find that many go down under the pull of self indulgence. Many of my classmates have fallen by the wayside because of drink.

I take my stand with what I said in the enclosed folder and we will let time decide who is the Boo Loo, me a total abstainer and a fighter of liquor, or the alcoholic who becomes his own victim and becomes one of the four million to be pitied in the United States. I send this at the request of an unsigned request.

Robert M. Hardee, Pastor
First Methodist Church
Troutman, N. C.

The 'tract':

"If a liquor store could speak, I wonder what it would say. If the store spoke the truth, it would say 'I am a North Carolina liquor store. I was brought into existence because people became mightily concerned over the revenue I would produce. They forgot that I produce alcoholics. An alcoholic is my finished product. He has the highest degre that my state institution can give him. I am a part of a legislative program of the state; therefore, every citizen in North Carolina has a part in my purposes and functions.

"'I am considered popular. I am visited by all classes of people, especially those who should be spending their money on milk, food, and clothing for their children. I am the enemy for soft drinks for claim is that I have more kick.

"'When people drink my products, they get foolish. They get mad. They get silly. They want to fight. They get careless and I am responsible for more crime than anything else.

"'I appeal to gentlemen of distinction by my false advertising. I wreck homes. I am the cause of divorces. Preachers fight me but I expect that.

"'I make all types of promises that are misleading. I was Christmas decoration during the Christmas season. I have never been able to see my connection between real Christmas cheer and the headaches that I produce.

"'Most of my customers, the ones who have patronized me the longest, have ended up in hospitals, in automobile wrecks, in the jail, or on the road. I will ruin your character and reputation if you patronize me long enough.

"'P.S. I am sending this to my church paper because I hope some layman will send a copy of this to every liquor store in North Carolina.'"

"I'll Let You Know What You Ought To Look Into"

Is Mandatory Attendance Good?

(Following is a copy of a letter addressed to the President, University of North Carlina at Chapel Hill.)

Dear Sir:

With some surprise I read recent newspaper articles about a scandal involving class attendance permits for absence at the university. I am less surprised about the abuse of permits than about mandatory attendance in which a student is "automatically dropped when he has three unexcused absences."

Is mandatory class attendance good?

Some universities and colleges of my acquaintances have found that the PASSING student himself is an excellent judge of whether he can make more valuable use of his time in LEARNING the required information by (1) studying in an informal seminar with fellow students (2) library researching (3) obtaining tutoring from advance student or instructor, or a practitioner of the trade or science being taught (example: now in a college physics course, I have obtained tutoring from a master's graduate in engineering from N. C. State College (so he says) who is a practicing mechanical engineer). (4) working assigned problems and preparing required reports (5) or in case the student understands the topic of the day's lesson thoroughly, he goes ahead or does additional work.

You will notice none of these procedures covers the student who has to be MADE TO ATTEND CLASS. I am not too much worried about him, and I am wondering why anyone else should be? If we must wipe his nose for him, then make class attendance mandatory in any course for which the student has a C average or less during that term.

I am surprised to hear of - and UNC - mandatory class attendance and irresponsibility to students to attend to business on their own initiative.

If you must change by degrees rather than outright; then give to honor students the option of using their own judgment, with regard to class attendance. You may be sure they will be in class if that is the most profitable course in each instance.

Thanks for your consideration of these points.

A second point: I am appalled by the lack of CLASSROOM SUPERVISION over instructors at the college level (certainly was not true in grade school and high school I attended, where classes were occasionally monitored by supervisors), and the LACK FOR FORMAL TEACHING EXPERIENCE and education courses including practice teaching, in many of our college instructors. THEY WOULD NOT BE QUALIFIED TO TEACH IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS: Why should this be so? Having all kinds of degrees cannot make a teacher of a non-teacher. If an instructor at the university has not had teaching background and formal education sufficient to deserve a public school teacher's certificate, let's make it part of his training at the university to get a teacher's certificate.

I have had some extremely bad instructors in college, the like of which I never recognized in public schools. I feel that the hiring of scholars who are NOT teachers at all, is a national disgrace and a tremendous waste and imposition upon the students.

And then, not to have supervision over these instructors in their classroom presentation—for their supervisors not to enter the classroom once over a period of years, is another disgrace. How can you call that "supervision?"

A basic principle of management being that the supervisor knows the performance of the subordinate, and that he be active in improving performance, conditions, and so on: don't we have a wonderful opportunity for real progress?

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Is UNC's Leadership In Education Waning?

To the editor:

Editorials in three North Carolina Dailies raise a timely question: Is the university maintaining the leadership in education now that it exerted in the 30s and 40s?

Well, there has certainly been plenty of money spent at the university since I first came here in 1911 or 1912. The transformation at Smith Dormitory is typical of what has taken place on the whole campus. Smith dormitory then, save for crude beds, dressers and chairs, was bare as a stable. The same went for Old East, where I also stayed. Now, the new dormitories, with their beautiful living rooms, attractively furnished bedrooms, tile bathrooms and showers, make one rejoice at the transformation that has taken place. It is all to the good that our girls can come to UNC and live in esthetically pleasing surroundings. The seemingly unending painting and remodeling that goes on in all the buildings—dormitories, class rooms, administration buildings—is very impressive. Is there any real reason why we should have to live or work in dirty, unattractive surroundings? There is always a crew of men in evidence whenever you walk through the campus, raking, scraping, planting and fertilizing, to keep the campus something you love and are proud to return to

What about food? When I first came to Chapel Hill we ate at Swain Hall, more aptly termed Swine Hall by those unfortunate enough to have to eat there. It is a far cry from Swain Hall to Lenoir Hall today where I eat my lunch. Suffice it to say that the food at Lenoir Hall compares very favorably with the food at the commercial cafeterias and restaurants in North Carolina. And the price is most reasonable.

Teaching: How does the university compare academically with the 1910 to 1930 period?

Of course I can speak from my own very limited experience. At one time I sat in on Dr. Howard W. Odum's class; at another, on Dr. Horace Williams class, both outstanding men in their field. I remember Dr. Odum asked me in class one day if I were prejudiced. I answered almost indignantly that I was not. Then by a few adroit questions I realized that I was full of prejudices where the Negro was concerned. I may still cherish some of my prejudices, but thanks to Dr. Odum I am not very proud of them. I didn't sit under Dr. Williams long enough to become, like his distinguished pupil, Judge Winston, an accomplished writer after the age of sixty.

My art education had been neglected, so last June I enrolled in Dr. Sommer's class, 'The History of Art and Painting in the Western World,' followed by the 'Renaissance History in Italy,' a wonderful background for the art course. These two courses broadened my horizons and opened up new worlds to me.

Last Fall I decided, since I knew almost nothing about the history of my own state, to try to remedy that situation. Through the courtesy of Dr. Lefler I had the privilege of sitting in on his class in North Carolina history. I am perfectly astonished that the university of 7,000 students offers only one course in North Carolina history. This one professor was simply beaten down by an enormous class of 115 students. When I went back to the second semester and found a class of 125 students I gave up and quit. A class of this size is simply overpowering. There is no personal contact or communication between teacher and student, no time for questions, no time for discussion. It is an intolerable situation for the professor, and it is unfair to the students who have no where else to go.

This state of affairs leads one to ponder along with the Charlotte Observer, The News and Observer, and the Greensboro Daily News the question: Who makes the decisions and forms the policy at the university? No university is greater than its faculty. No faculty is strong that is worked to death by overloaded classes.

The university occupies a peculiar place in my affections. My grandfather graduated here in 1840. He was for many years a trustee of the University and a State Senator. In the latter capacity he voted for the reopening of the university after the Civil War. He was among those Senators who voted to give $5,000 to the university when some of the Senators thought the State was too poor to give $5,000 to the University. He also contributed to a $20,000 fund for the University in days when money was scarce in North Carolina. My father attended the University. He was for many years a trustee, and a devoted and loyal son of Carolina. My brother graduated here in 1920, and my son in June, 1957.

This year of grace, 1958, North Carolina can afford a first class university. We cannot afford to require one teacher to do the work of three. Let us get on with the business of maintaining an adequate teaching staff to teach our boys and girls. We must not be satisfied with anything less than the best.

RELAXATION

By R. P. LISTER

In The Atlantic

The moment that a man relaxes,
Smoothing the furrows round his eyes.
A hungry host of rates and taxes
Lights on his shoulders with hoarse cries.

The grisly specter of inflation
Beats at his head with loathsome wings;
The voices of A Certain Nation
Bellow uncomplimentary things.

Systems and creeds and dread diseases
Wrinkle his nose with fresh disgust,
And from reverberating breezes
Trickles the radioactive dust.

Better grip what we lay a hand on,
Stuff a stiff ramrod up our backs.
Someone will steal the ground we stand on,
If for a moment we relax.

David Sloan's Handbook Committee Busy Working On Current Edition

By DAVIS YOUNG

Word came today from the office of the Carolina Symposium that David Sloan, junior from Wilmington, is curently serving in the vital position of chairman of the Symposium Handbook Committee.

Aside from his duties at the Symposium, Sloan has demonstrated interest and proficiency in a number of diversified campus extra curricular and scholary activities. He is a member of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity, a member of the Orientation Committee, University Party Election Board and is a Morehead Scholar.

Work On Handbook

Sloan and his committee are busy planning the Symposium Handbook, its organization and completion. The handbook will be 30 pages long for the 58' Symposium and will contain background sketches of all participants and detailed explanations and introductions of all topics.

The exact purpose of his committee, as he outlined it yesterday, is to present "an insight into the purpose of the Symposium." Progress of the committee has been consistent and the project is nearing its conclusion. The planning stage is now over and only a few loose ends remained to be tied.

DAVID SLOAN
Symposium Handbook Chairman

Expresses Thanks

Sloan in another statement to The Daily Tar Heel stated: "I would like to make special mention of Laradel Lawrence whose help has been instrumental in compiling the layout for the handbook. I would also like to thank all of the members of my committee for their continued interest throughout the year."

Members of Sloan's committee include: Dick Frazier, Herman Godwin, Laradel Lawrence, Christian Lewibure, Bev Raney, Jack Spain, Cobb White and Joe Walser.

proverished," he said.

The motivation is sincere, but nevertheless the result is a disservice to students, he pointed out.

Dr. King hit at the practice of instilling democracy into the classroom to such an extent that grading standards are lowered. He said this demoracy will inevitably lead to self-distruction of the institution.

Newly-inaugurated President Jess Stribling presented what he called a "revitalization" program for the Phi this spring, to "make this organization once again profitable to the intellectual, as well as the social life of the University."

He announced that the Way and Means Committee has prepared bills for debate for the next three weeks: the collegiate debate topic of right-to-work laws, the committment of Ezra Pound, and the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Each bill will have attached a page of introductory material along with suggested reference works for the use of speakers, he disclosed. And a guest critic will be present at each meeting to point out different approaches seen by one well-informed on the debate topic. The guest critic will be a faculty member, President Stribling said.

The new president challenged members to work together to make the Phi a worthwhile and necessary part of the Carolina way of life.

'Devils, Demons & Stars' Is Planetarium Show

The Morehead Planetarium's new show," Devils, Demons and Stars," opened last night at the planetarium at 8:30 for a four-week run.

"Devils, Demons and Stars," which will run through March 10, tells of the ideas and superstitions of the ancients who thought the stars controlled all evil and good forces.

The ancient concept of devils was that stars which caused evil occurences. Demons were thought to control either good or evil times.

The show dispels the old superstitions, Scientific knowledge, which has aided mankind in proving that the stars do not control man's destiny, points out that events happen not fundamentally because of any influence by the strars.

The school version of the program, recommended for children in grades 7 through 12, will be given Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays at 11 a .m. and 1 p. m.

Public programs will be weekdays at 8:30, Saturday at 11 a. m., 3 and 8:30 p. m., and Sundays at 3, 4, and 8:30 p. m.

Planetarium officials said the program, "Star Scouting," which closed last night, was seen by 1700 Boy Scouts over the week end.

The five performances Saturday were attended by 1,395 Scouts and 282 attended Sunday.

To be known as Arturo Toscanini's favorite tenor would be enough to inflate an ordinary ego to hippopotamus size, but Jan Peerce who appears at Memorial Hall Thursday at 8 p. m., is still the genial casual fellow he has been through a dozen years of world fame.

The noted Met Opera star, who sang his 14th major engagement, "The Masked Ball," with Toscanini a year ago, gives some inside glimpses into working with the fabulous maestro when chatting informally.

Students will be admited free to the concert upon presentation of I.D. Cards. Sponsored by the Student Entertainment Committee, concert tickets for students wives are $1, with all other tickets selling for $2.

"You know, you want to give more than your best when you sing for him," Peerce said. "Everybody feels the same way, and everyone is completely in awe of him during rehearsals and performance. I remember once Pinza said to me just before a performance: 'I am never scared. No matter what I sing or with whom, I am never scared. But when I sing the Ninth Symphony and Toscanini conducts, then I am scared!' I guess we all feel a little that way."

Toscanini Movie

Peerce has made a movie with the maestro, "The Hymn of All Nations." He also sang "La Traviata," "La Boheme", "The Masked Ball," "Fidelio," and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven with the conductor, performances recently released by RCA Victor.

"Toscanini's memory is really as phenomenal as the legends say," the tenor went on. "After many rehearsals, he may call you in just before the performance and remind you of every correction and suggestion he made since you began working with him on the score."

"I once asked him to retard one orchestral phrase. It was the only way I could get a deep enough breath to sing the following measures the way the Maestro wanted them.

"In the performance I saw that, without even glancing at me, he dragged his hand at that spot.

Never Forgets

"He never forgets a single musical thing!"

Jan Peerce is well known to be one of the most musical of singers, and his admiration for Toscanini's profound musical knowledge in unbounded.

"When you question him on a tempo or phrasing, it's absolutely amazing how he not only shows you why he is doing what he is but proves the rightness of his interpretion. When he says, 'It's not me. It's Verdi!' That is just what he means.

"People so often talk to me about Toscanini's tempo and remark that his are different from what they are accustomed to hearing. That can be true, particularly in the series of broadcast operas, now being reletased on records, which we have given over the years.

Interpretation

"In the first place it's necessary to remember that the opera is being played as a piece of music. There is no visual interest and, since the opera is being played for listening and nothing else, there is no slowing down for the ordinary stage business."

Peerce waggled his finger at us.

"But if anyone thinks that the Maestro's interpretation is geared to the limited time of a broadcast that is entirely wrong. He plays a score the way the composers wrote them. That's what his sole aim is, and that's what he does!"

Tar Heels Will Have To Win Away From Home

If the homecourt makes any difference in basketball, and history indicates that it certainly does, Carolina's Tar Heels will be at a definite disadvantage the rest of the way in the race for top regular season honors in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Carolina has only two games remaining in Woollen Gym. The first is Saturday afternoon before the television cameras against Duke. The final home contest is Feb. 22 against Maryland.

Otherwise, the Tar Heels have to meet Virginia in Charlottsville (Feb. 11), WaKe Forest in Winston-Salem (Feb. 13), N. C. State in Raleigh (Feb. 18) and Duke in Durham (Feb. 28). Incidentally, the Tar Heels play Notre Dame in Chicago on Feb. 15 so the Chapel Hillians will be one of the busiest teams around from the middle to the end of February.

When State clipped the Tar Heels, 58-57 in an overtime here Jan. 15 it was the first time Carolina had been beaten in Woollen since 1955—and the Wolfpack did it then. Thus, if Carolina is able to finish in first place, it will have been done the hard way.

Team Scoring Totals Down This Season

The 115 points which the Tar Heels scored against South Carolina Saturday night marked the first time the McGuiremen had gone over the 100 mark since Lennie Rosenbluth and Co. beat Virginia, 102-90 here last season for their 14th consecutive victory.

McGuire, who doesn't like to run over the 100 mark against another team unless his club needs the points, said after the South Carolina game: "I hate to go over 100 like that but South Carolina was hitting well and we couldn't relax."

The downward trend in college scoring has hit Carolina this season. Only once this yar have the Tar Heels hit the 90 points mark (excepting the SC game) and that was against Clemson on Jan. 18. So actually the two highest point totals for Carolina this season have come in their last two games—might be an indication of things to come. Still the Tar Heels have the top scoring team in the ACC.

Administration Did Good Deed

The administration is to be congratulated on its broad mindedness in extending the co-ed deadline one hour for the N. C. State game in Raleigh Feb. 18. This should alleviate any incident such as the one when the two schools met here. Many of the gals panicked as the game went into an overtime and rushed back to their dorms in fear of being late.

Of course, should this game be a repetition of the Carolina State game in Raleigh last year, further concessions would be necessary. That was the night that the road from Raleigh to Chapel Hill was frozen and traffic was lined up for miles. However, weather permitting, the girls should be safely back to their dorms by twelve with no real rush.

Basketball-Football Notes

Freshman coach Ken Rosemond thinks that Carolina will win the ACCC championship and will get into the big NCAA tournament in Louisville, Ky. this season. . . . Members of the Atlantic Coast Sportswriters Assn. have already started thinking about their all-conference team and the three men from the conference they'll recommend for All-American recognition . . . Carolina has three men in the top ten scorers in the ACC. . . . Pete Brennan is first, Tommy Kearns third and Lee Shaffer tenth. . . . Several members of the football team have already begun trotting off a little weight before spring practice opens Feb. 10. . . . Curt Hathaway will have to miss spring training because his arm hasn't completely healed. . . . Buddy Payne and Fred Swearingen are staying in shape on the handball courts during the winter. . . . Buddy was recently drafted by the Washington Redskins.

Tar Babies Invade N. C. State Tonight

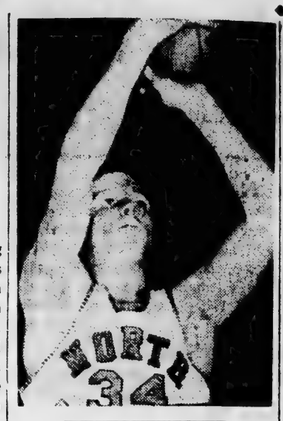
Frosh Seek Revenge In Raleigh

By RUSTY HAMMOND

With two straight defeats dogging them Carolina's cage Tar Babies seek to hit the winning trail again tonight as they journey to Raleigh to face the State College Wolflets.

The frosh now sport an 8-3 overall season record. Their woes began before exams when this same State squad snapped a Carolina winning streak at seven, winning the game in overtime by 78-75. Last week, in the first post-exam game, Duke once again defeated the Tar Babies, this time by 80-55. Duke had beaten Carolina earlier in the season.

Losing Streak



This two-game losing streak will be only one of the problems facing Coach Ken Rosemond tonight, as the entire team now consists of only nine players. Doug Moe, who was averaging over 20 ponits per game, is off the team because of scholastic difficulties, although he is still in school. Lenny Beck and John Hickey have dropped from the squad to take up spring football practice, and Russ Hollers will probably do the same when drills start.

Fans who saw the last State-Carolina frosh encounter will recall the Wolflets as a fast, tall, and talented bunch of cagers Outstanding for State so far have been Mark Reiner, the small guard who beat the Tar Babies with two free throws in the finals seconds, and Bruce Hoadley, Raleigh's own representative to the contingent who is consistently scoring in double figures.

Starting Lineup

Statistics show the Tar Babies with an average 16-point spread over opponents. Carolina is averaging 82.5 points per game against the opposition's 66.3.

The probable starting line-up for tonight will include Tam Shuford and Lou Brown at guards. Hugh Donahue at center, and Pete Longnecker and Billy Dunalp or Bob Deaton at forwards.

ACC Scoring Lead Held By Carolina

GREENSBORO, Feb. 4 (AP)—Carolina's Tar Heels, who returned to action last Saturday night with a 115-88 victory over South Carolina, regained the team basketball scoring lead in the Atlantic Coast Conference as a result of that school record-matching out-burst.

According to ACC Service Bureau compilations, it upped the per-game average for the defending NCAA and ACC champs from 74.1 to 74.8 points a game. This edged the Tar Heels back in front over Virginia, which increased its average from 72.9 to 73.2 even in surrendering the lead.

North Carolina State has replaced Carolina as the primary challenger to perennial leader Maryland in team defense While the Terps improved their average yield to 56.4 points a game, the Wolfpack advanced from 61.1 to 59.8. Carolina, which led this category early in the year, now has a third place defensive average of 62.7.

Blue Devils Next Foe For Tar Heels

It's Duke next for Carolina's basketball Tar Heels, who make their only appearance this week against the startling Blue Devils in a regionally televised game here Saturday at 2 p. m.

Duke last week made national news by downing previously undefeated West Virginia, the nation's number one team, N. C. State, Virginia and Wake Forest were other victims of the rampaging Blue Devils before they turned into another busy week, to be climaxed by the contest here.

Easy Victory

The Tar Heels, on the other hand, also ran into a streak of prosperity after getting bumped off on their home court by State's Wolfpack. They played handsome and fancy in turning back Clemson at Clemson and South Carolina at Columbia.

In their last outing, against the Gamecocks, the Tar Heels showed the class they had last year in running up a 32-game winning skein and capturing the national championship. The score was 115 to 88 and was by far their greatest offensive performance. The 115 points tied a school record.

"I felt bad about that," said Coach Frank McGuire after the game. "I have always felt it was bad for a team to score more than 100 points and we usually try to avoid it. Of course, South Carolina was scoring a lot, too, and you couldn't get too complacent."

Tommy Kearns (27), Lee Shaffer (23) and Pete Brennan (22) were the best marksmen against the Gamecocks. Harvey Salz chipped in with 17 to round out a quartertin double figures.

Brennan remains the top man for the season long. Senior and tri-captain Brennan has scored 325 points in 16 games for a 20.2 average per game.

Tag Football Playoffs Begin Today

Playoffs to determine the campus tag football champions will be held today and tomorrow with the title game scheduled for Friday afternoon.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon Zeta Psi and Sigma Chi will meet to determine the winner of the fraternity blue division. Ruffin and Grimes dorms will also meet this afternoon for the dorm championship.

On Thursday afternoon the dorm champs will take on Peacocks who are the winners of the grad division. In another contest tomorrow, the winners of the fraternity Blue Division play the DKE'S.

On Friday the winners of the games on Thursday will meet for the campus championship.

The delay in the playoffs is a result of the recent bad weather and the Asian Flu epedemic last fall.

Brennan Holds ACC Lead; Kearns Third

Carolina's sparkling senior forward Pete Brennan continues to holds the lead in the ACC scoring race over Virginia's second place Herb Busch according to the most recent ACC scoring statistics released yesterday.

Brennan has an 20.3 average in 16 games, and Busch has averaged 17.7 in 14 contests. Carolina's hard driving guard Tommy Kearns is pushing Busch hard for the second place honors with a 17.3 average.

The first statistics to be released for two weeks because of the few games played during exams, find Busch dropping slightly from his pre-team average while Brennan and Kearns have increased their marks. Brennan and Kearns each had a big night at South Carolina with 22 and 29 points respectively while Busch was held to 6 when Virginia played at Duke.

Another Tar Heel, Lee Shaffer has also made the top ten for ACC scoring honors. Shaffer has an average of 14.4 to tie with Ray Pericola of South Carolina for tenth place.

UNC Mardi Gras Hits Snag; Weekend May Be Canceled

Tin Can Said Unsafe; Repair Costs 'Too High'

The Carolina Mardi Gras has run into a snag that may mean cancellation of the big weekend.

Mardi Gras Chairman Gerry Boudreau was uncertain yesterday whether or not the possible loss of the Tin Can as a dance site would mean calling off the dance.

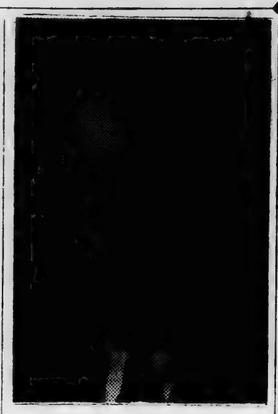
Phys. Ed. Dept. Bldgs. and Maintenance Superivsor, C. B. Huggins notified the Mardi Gras Committee Tuesday that in its present condition the Tin Can is not safe for the crowd expected at the dance. He said it might take two or three thousand dollars to put the old building into condition for dances of the size planned.

The only loss the Mardi Gras may take is a $1,250 down payment on the Buddy Morrow contract. Menzel said an effort will be made to get this money back.

If the money is returned, Menzel said, an effort would be made to hold the Mardi Gras weekend later in the spring.

An order for 30,000 square feet of crepe paper intended for decorations is being held up until the confusion over the dance site is cleared up.

The Weekend will consist of a concert Friday afternoon, and dance Friday night, and possibly another concert on Saturday afternoon if the plans are carried out.



The ACC Indoor Track Tournament is being held on Saturday night, March 1, in Woollen Gym. Because of the track paraphernalia, the gym will not be available for the dance Friday night.

Boudreau and Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jefferies are planning to talk to Huggins and Track Coach Dale Ranson this afternoon in an effort to work something out.

Jefferies said he thought Huggins' estimate on repairing the Tin Can is too high, but he would not comment further.

The Mardi Gras Committee has been working under a $5,000 budget, with the expected sale of 900 tickets. Vice Chairman Jim Menzel said $1,000 of this had been allotted for decorations.

Menzel said the committee planned to use only about $200 of the sum for decorations, and use the rest of the fund to hire a [illegible] for the dance.

DR. WILLIAM WELLS
Chairman Of The Faculty

Dr. Wells New Post Not New

For over a month, Dr. William Wells, Kenan professor of English, has been acting in another official position: chairman of the faculty.

This post is not new to Dr. Wells because he was chosen as the first chairman of the faculty 12 years ago.

The chairman, who is elected by all voting members of the faculty, serves a three-year period.

Although the chairman of the faculty is technically a part of the University administration, he is a member of the Chancellor's Cabinet and represent the Chancellor in all academic matters whenever the Chancellor requests him to do so.

The chairman must also act as chairman pro tem of the Faculty Council and general faculty.

Dr. Wells came to the University in 1935 and since then served at one time as dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

The second chairman of the faculty was Dudley D. Carroll. Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, was the third to hold that position. Dr. Wells, immediate predecessor was Dr. E. C. Markham of the Chemistry Department.

An advisory committee of the faculty nominates three members to run for chairman. The person elected must receive a majority of votes or a second election must be held.

Cut Plan To Be Studied By Faculty

A report on University attendance regulations will be presented to the Faculty Council Friday afternoon for discussion and action by the council.

The nature of this report will not be disclosed until the time of the meeting.

The report will be presented by a specially appointed committee under the chairmanship of James S. Ingram, associate professor of economics.

Subject To Debate

Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, said yesterday that the report will be subject to debate and official action by the council. As soon as final action is taken, the report will be released, he said.

The council may possibly act on the question of attendance regulations in the meeting Friday. However, the final decision may be postponed to a subsequent meeting.

Proposals

The committee to draw up a report on attendance regulations was appointed at the January meeting of the Faculty Council. Three student body officials appeared at that meeting and made several proposals concerning attendance rules.

Sonny Evans, student body president; Don Furtado, student body vice-president; and George Ragsdale, chairman of Men's Honor Council, proposed to the council that class cuts be placed under the Honor System.

Neville Rubin Will Address Legislature

The Student Legislature will hear Neville Rubin, a representative of the World University Service, and a report from the newspaper research committee tonight at 7 o'clock on the top floor of New East.

Dick Robinson's (UP) resolution "approving the constitution of the University Art League" will come before the body.

Newspaper Report

Pat Adams (SP), chairman of the newspaper research committee, will present its report. The report does not include any bills or resolutions.

Rubin is vice president for International Relations of the National Union of South African Students. He has traveled around the world in connection with the World University Service.

"I think anyone who comes to hear Rubin can gain a good bit of insight into problems of foreign students and the world today," said Don Furtado, speaker of the Student Legislature.

Kappa Invites 150 For Rush

By ANN FRYE

Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority's "newest satellite will be launched" Monday from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at the first party of its rush program, according to invitations sent out by the sorority.

Others Invited

Coeds who did not receive invitations and desire to go through the rush program of Kappa Kappa Gamma have been advised to attend the first party in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Building.

The dress for the occasion will be dressy woolens and heels.

Four Duke Kappas will assist alumnae from Chapel Hill, Durham and Raleigh and the four UNC Kappas in holding the first party.

Duke Kappas Invited

The entire Duke chapter will attend the second party Wednesday night from 7:30 to 9 o'clock in Smith parlour. Plans for the third party will be announced later.

Students Are Offered Trip

The American-European College Student Association has planned an airflight to Europe this summer at student prices.

The flight by DC-6's will leave Montreal, Canada, on July 8 and will arrive in London. The return trip will be Sept. 3.

The cost to members is $330 per person, round trip. This is less than regular round-trip tourist fare by boat.

Subsequent European summer flights and Bermuda spring time flights are also planned.

Free membership in the AECSA is open to all college students and teachers. Interested persons should write to AECSA, 62 Park St., Canton, New York. Free lists of student approved accommodations in Europe will be sent on request.

Student Gov't. Positions Open For Interviews

Interviews for appointments to four committees at UNC are currently being held, according to Sonny Evans, president of the student body.

Interviews are being held for individuals interested in serving as chairman of the campus Orientation Committee next year. Women are eligible for the position.

Persons who are interested in serving on the budget committee should come in the Student Government office for interviews. This committee is made up of both men and women and will hold hearings on appropriations to the various student organizations.

All persons interested in serving as chairman of the Elections Board for the spring elections should come by the Student Government office for interviews. The chairman of the Elections Board administers spring elections.

Interviews are now being held for membership to the Student Entertainment Committee. This committee obtains entertainment acts for next year. Programs in the past have included Alec Templeton, Jan Peerce, Mantovani and the Encyclopedia of Jazz.

news in brief

Vanguard

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5 (AP)—The Navy blamed the failure of its second Vanguard rocket today on a faulty control system governing the firststage engine.

A preliminary explanation of what went wrong at today's ill fated launching at Cape Canaveral, Fla., was issued by the Naval Research Laboratory.

The announcement said some parts of the rocket are being recovered and will be studied for a more detailed understanding of the failure.

Segregation

RALEIGH, Feb 5 (AP)—A Federal court showdown in Raleigh's first school segregation case had been set for May 12 in Eastern District Court.

Federal Judge Don Gilliam said today at an informal pre-trial hearing involving counsel for both sides, that as far as he now is concerned, only one question will be decided upon:

Was the application of Joseph H. Holt Jr., 14-year-old youth for reassignment to all-white needham-Broughton High School here turned down solely because he is a negro?

'Beyond Repair'

CHARLOTTE Feb. 5 (AP)—Racial relations in America are "practically beyond repair," a South Carolina Lutheran and school man declared today.

Lexington, S. C., Schools Supt. H. Odelle Harman made the observation in a speech prepared for a Southern Synod's Leadership School on Human Relations sponsored by the Social Missions Board of the United Lutheran Church in America.

"The method of forced integration which is being resorted to by the church and the state will not bring about the desired results," he predicted, "and should be discontinued."

Instead, he said, "The church and other agencies should begin crusading for the U. S. Supreme Court to reverse" its decision against segregated schools.

Winter Germans Has New Look; Ray Anthony Featured At Concert

By MARY MOORE MASON

Winter Germans this year will have the "new look," according to Mark Cherry, president of the German Club.

"For the first time in history, as far as I know, the Germans dance will be semi-formal and we will have four entertainment attractions," said Cherry. "By semi-formal, we mean that the boys are to wear dark suits and the girls dressy cocktail dresses."

Germans, which will be Valentine's weekend, Feb. 14-15, will have four feature attractions. Ray Anthony, Billy Knauff, the Gladiolas and Leo de Lyon.

Billy Knauff, a well-known regional band; the Gladiolas, a Negro instrumental-vocalist group famous for the record "Little Darling;" and Leo de Lyon, versatile and talented entertainer of international recording and television fame, will all entertain at the dance on Friday night from 9 p. m. to 1 a. m.

The Saturday concert from 3 p. m. to 5 p. m. in Memorial Hall will feature Ray Anthony and his famous TV orchestra and entertainers and Leo de Lyon.

The dance will be set up in cabaret form with tables around the dance floor covered with white table cloths and centered with a candle.

The theme for decorations will probably be a Valentine theme.

Bids for the dance will be given out to all fraternity men whose fraternities are members of the German Club. These men may in turn sell their tickets or use them themselves.

Doormen and members of the dance committee will be at the dance to see that all boys who attend wear dark suits and to carry on their usual duties.

U.S. Cultural Ambassador To Russia Jan Peerce To Sing Here Tonight

Jan Peerce, Metropolitan Opera tenor, who will appear at Memorial Hall tonight at 8 o'clock, was happily anticipating a quiet, restful summer in 1958, with a few out-door music festival concerts.

Came May, 1956 and an invitation from the Cultural Minister of the Soviet Union. "Would Mr. Peerce come to Russia for an intensive concert and opera tour during the month of June?" This was an important offer indeed Jan realized that he would be the first Metropolitan Opera star to sing at Moslow's famous Bolshoi Theatre. Our State Department in Washington approved the plan for this visit and felt sure that Jan Peerce would be an ideal "Cultural Ambassador" from the United States to the Soviet Union.

Typical of Peerce's feelings about this assignment was the statement he gave to the press on June 4 as he, his wife Alice and accompanist Warner Bass left Idlewild. "I am honored and glad to be going," Peerce said. "I want them to know how a man can advance himself under democracy."

Soon news of Peerce's phenomenal success flashed around the world via the press. "Jan Peerce In Moscow" the New York Times headed its report on June 7, the day after Peerce's first concert in the Russian capital. "Met Tenor Opens Tour to Tumultuous Applause," the report went on. It also mentioned that Peerce had to sing seven encores and that the house-manager had to turn out the lights in Tchaikovsky Hall, so that the wildly enthusiastic audience would start for home.

Peerce's Moscow debut set the pace for the entire tour. In Leningrad crowds lined the streets from the opera house to Peerce's hotel after his performance in Verdi's Rigoletto, to throw flowers and cheer their new-found idol.

During the dress-rehearsal of Verdi's La Traviata in Moscow, the tenor suddenly realized that there was an audience of about 500 in the Bolshoi Theatre's orchestra.

The pandemonium which had accompanied the dress rehearsal was intensified during the gala-performance the next night. There was an added electric atmosphere—For, this was not merely a gala-performance of La Traviata; it was a diplematic event U. S. Ambassador Charles E. Bohlen and Mrs. Bohlen were present, representing the United States; as well as high Soviet Officials and Ambassadors from many other countries.

Mr. Peerce was invited to return to Russia next year—his busy schedule permitting. He would sing some more operas and concerts and was asked to teach a master-class, composed of professional opera singers.

"People must be informed that America is a cultured nation," the famous tenor stated on his return. "Intensified cultural interchange seems to me about the best way of putting our best foot forward."

Are False Excuse Users Being Treated Equally?

A report by the Men's Honor Council yesterday brings to mind several questions about the recent fraudulent excuse scandal at the University.

First and foremost is, what disposition was made of those cases where use of the false excuses constituted an overcut for the student involved? Were all such students treated alike?

Obviously, the Men's Honor Council has followed procedure in accordance with rules and regulations set down for that body. It suspended one student on charges growing out of the scandal; others have been placed on probation and the Council trials are still continuing.

In view of conduct of the students involved in the scandal, the Men's Honor Council has, as it promised when the scandal was first exposed, looked with leniency upon those violators who turned themselves in. It has not, we feel, usurped its power in handing down those judgments.

But have instructors acted in fairness toward all students whose purchase of a false excuse constituted an overcut in a particular class?

We know of one person who was dropped from two courses with failing marks because he had three unexcused absences from class before he purchased one of the fraudulent excuses. Use of that excuse constituted his fourth cut—grounds for a failing grade in the General College.

With that action by the instructor we have no argument—so long as all persons in similar circumstances were treated in the same manner. Indeed, violation of the cut system is known to all General College students as grounds for failing a course. And instructors should have the right to enforce that regulation.

But were all students treated accordingly whose purchase of one of the false excuses constituted an overcut? Was it a campuswide practice to drop from class with a failing mark ALL those students similarly involved in the scandal?

If not, they certainly should have been. And if one instructor allowed a student with four cuts to continue in a course, then all instructors should have acted in the same way. Whatever the action was, it should have been consistent.

Perhaps these questions, in view of the continuing investigation, cannot readily be answered. Whatever the disposition, it seems probable that some students involved in the scandal could emerge as scapegoats for those with more lenient professors.

South Is Not Only Region That Experiences Problems

Southern newspapers are now having a hayday in editorial comment and news play surrounding sweeping juvenile delinquency in the greater New York area.

Why, they ask, doesn't President Eisenhower send federal troops to Brooklyn to keep order in schools there just as he did at Little Rock, Ark.?

Well, the answer is fairly obvious: Orval Faubus was openly defying federal law when his National Guard troops prevented Negro students from enrolling at Little Rock High School. In New York, violations fall under the state courts' jurisdiction.

Nevertheless, there is a moral to Southern comparison of troubles in the Deep South and the continuing delinquency in the liberal North. And it might help the North to realize that even that part of the nation can experience domestic disorder.

More recently it has become pronounced. Violence in New York led Mayor Robert F. Wagner and the Board of Education to announce a program to curb juvenile crime in city schools. Police have been posted at 41 of the city's 1,000 schools in a move to check violence.

Such violence leads to the question: Is the North condemning itself with the same fervor with which it has blasted the South in the past four years? Or has the press there minimized Northern domestic disorder while providing all the answers for problems of the South?

Whatever the answer, it is obvious that the Southern press has fully exploited the violence in New York to retaliate against charges levelled against the South by the Northern press during Little Rock, Clinton, Tenn., and other areas of Southern problems. Perhaps the North, too, should take stock of her own problems along with those of the rest of the country.

Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee summed it up this way:

"Mayor Robert F. Wagner of New York is a fine man and he is having his troubles now. I don't want to add to his woes. I never have said we haven't made mistakes, but I do say this: Let's all get our dirty laundry out and wash it together. Let's end this hypocritical pointing of an accusing finger at any one section of the country.

"I want them to leave us alone in Tennessee and I'm going to leave them alone in their troubles. We must all try to learn to live in peace."

Thus, regardless of causes for problems in the South, it appears we're not the only section of the nation which has come face to face with domestic disorder. Let's all solve our own problems, so long as judgment can be universal.

Really Over?

That war really must be over.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy asked the State Highway Commission to call one of the federal north-south highways the Jefferson Davis Highway. The Commission voted "no" late yesterday.

And, at a relatively late hour this morning, no delegations had called on the newspaper offices or the Highway Commission protesting the "no" vote.—THE RALEIGH TIMES.

Will Women's, Men's Council Be Combined?

By GAIL GODWIN

The latest word has it that a plan to combine the Men's Honor Council and the Women's Honor Council is in its drafting stages. Undoubtedly, such a step would boost the caliber of the student government here to unknown heights.

We pride ourselves on having a student government comparable to the national government . . . all the way down to the two party system. So far, the weak link has been the campus court system.

Student leaders have recognized this weakness and are going all out to apprehend it. They will sooner of later put forth their reasons in a logical, concise little bill, we hope. However, some of us can already put our finger on the core of these weaknesses.

Take a typical example. John and Mary are sweethearts. It just so happens that they are in a class together. However, John is not right bright, so he and Mary devise a system by which he can sit next to her and she can write her answers extra large on her quiz papers. Alas! One day they are caught in the act. The game is up. John must go before the Men's Honor Council and Mary before the Women's Honor Council. In fear and trembling, John and Mary sit in separate rooms before separate judiciaries. They are judged by the members of their own sex and sentenced appropriately. After it is all over, they meet under a tree in the Arboretum to discuss the outcome. It so happens that John got off much lighter than Mary. Or maybe vice-versa. This could happen because the case was considered as two cases. The men decided John's fate and the "Gals" decided Mary's. Is this according to real legal method?

A combination of the two honor councils here would alleviate this flaw and many others. The two points of view—male and female—would balance each other.

One criticism of the Women's Honor Council has been that it sometimes splits hairs over trivial matters, that it lacks the masculine touch of sobriety and brevity, that it takes itself too seriously. If there is any truth in this criticism, then a combination of the two councils would establish a much more mature and respected honor council on the UNC campus.

Education Programs Inadequate

By CURTIS GANS

The administration education plan went to Congress not long ago, and fairly soon the Democratic segment of Congress realized that the administration proposal was inadequate.

The trouble is that the Democratic proposal, although a step in the right direction, is also inadequate.

What the Democratic proposal would do would be allot three billion dollars to college scholarships of six years duration. This, according to some estimates, would provide that 40,000 of the 100,000 exceptionally capable students, currently not in college for lack of funds, would be able to attend college. The problem is two-fold. First, the Democratic proposal is not doing the job for the entire 100,000, and secondly the Democratic proposal does not hit all the necessary areas.

The first and most important area it does not hit is the primary and secondary grades, which is the foundation for college students. The second area it does not hit is the problem of school construction, where overcrowding in the U. S. is the rule and inadequate facilities are all too prevalent. Thirdly, it does nothing about bringing up the standard of education, which should at least hit a parity with European countries, if not go them one better. Lastly, the Democratic proposal does not see fit to account for the need for teachers, since there is a great need for educators in all fields and in all grades.

What is needed is not only more money but more thought, for money will not buy success in the education program unless there is an idea of what success is and how one goes about to achieve this mythical thing called success.

President Eisenhower last year spelled out the importance of school construction, and found that it was so important that he completely dropped the idea of school construction from his education proposals in order to achieve a balanced budget. The fact is that school construction is needed urgently.

To develop bright students of initiative, and to acquaint others with the necessary knowledge and necessary thought processes to be a responsible member of the community, much individual attention is necessary at the lower grades. This is impossible when forty students crowd into a single classroom. Moreover, to insure the progress of all students at their capacity, there must be at least three sections of each grade—for superior, average, and below average students, in order that each develops to the best of his ability, and can progress at the most rapid rate without retardation. This is impossible with six classrooms to a six grade school. Moreover, in order to give the children the benefit of new processes, facilities of the most modern sort must be available to students. These are not available in buildings that have not seen renovation in over fifty years.

The U. S. needs a school construction program and it cannot be hampered by riders from the pen of Representative Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.), whose anti-segregation riders have made the majority of the country suffer for the errors of the few.

The problem of encouraging teachers can be handled in two ways. The first is that government funds are necessary to give teachers salaries that would prohibit their entrance into the world of business for reason of funds. The second factor is in providing the individual attention and challenging subject material that will make the teacher's life an inspiring challenge instead of drudgery.

There is even a third way to create in the minds of the public the importance of teachers. This is to make a hero out of the educated man, which would put brains rather than drawn at a premium in the U. S. Then, perhaps teaching will become a desirable occupation.

Education is the backbone of democracy. It is up to America to keep its back erect.

A TEST OF JUSTICE

Give Me Liberty

ERIC SEVAREID

This is about Alphonse J. Dulle, assistant foreman in the pressroom at the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. I was once a copy boy with occasional duties in a similar pressroom and I am not surprised that Mr. Dulle is a pressroom boss. They are men of a certain breed, entirely capable of instructing a big-eyed copy boy to tell that lily-fingered managing editor so-and-so to come down and run these so-and so presses himself if he don't like it.

I have had Alphonse J. Dulle on my mind for several weeks now, because a lot of hopes ride with Mr. Dulle. He is engaged in a struggle over his front-yard mailbox; and in some ways the outcome will be just as vital to America and its traditional way of life as the outcome of Secretary McElroy's struggle to reorganize the Pentagon.

The clipping about Mr. Dulle has been lying in front of me for a long time, but other things were always interfering—the State of the Union speech, rockets, Khrushchev, and Secretary Dulles, who spells his name almost the same as Mr. Dulle but is probably no relation. The clipping reads as follows: "St. Louis, January 3. Alphonse J. Dulle's neighbors filed suit today for two thousand dollars damages because his mailbox is white with black lettering. They want the court to force him to paint it black with white lettering like all others in the twenty-two house development."

Well, the other day, Khrushchev, Secretary Dulles, and the other distractions seemed quiescent and I couldn't stand it any longer, anyway, so I put in a call to St. Louis. Pressrooms are noisy places, so I called the house and got Mrs. Dulle. There was a cagey note of suspicion in her voice, and I wasn't surprised. After all, anyone who has been ambushed by her own neighbors is not going to give her trust to total strangers, just like that.

Clearly, the Dulles are an embattled family and I gathered they were not enjoying their lonely if lofty isolation. But, as Mrs. Dulle told me Mr. Dulle keeps saying to her, there just comes a time when if a man can't call his home his own, he can't call his soul his own and he's just got to fight it out.

A man can't very well stand guard with a shotgun any more, but he can hire a lawyer, the modern equivalent, so Mr. Dulle has done that. Twice, said Mrs. Dulle, her husband has moved the mailbox, but the trustees of the development—these are owned, not rented properties—still weren't satisfied. They not only want the color changed; they want the box on a black metal rack, like the others, instead of on what they call an unfinished wooden post. Actually, it's a creosoted post, Mrs. Dulle explained.

The court hasn't acted yet; so we don't yet know whether, in the eyes of American justice, a group of Americans have, singly or collectively, been damaged materially, socially, or spiritually because one among them has dared to be different. But we can report that the Dulles are not entirely forsaken in their lonely eminence. They have been getting letters from around the country and, said Mrs. Dulle, "every one of them's on our side."—(From a broadcast over CBS Radio.)

DDT Is Not Enough

Is there among us any phychologist or poet skillful enough to record, for all time to come, the relationship we the people have with our President? We were thinking of this while watching the recital of the State of the Union Message on our TV screen. Most of our attention was rivited on the President's looks, the steadiness of his hands, and the fluency of his delivery. All of us have become diagnosticians and remedial-speech experts.. During the first few bars of the National Anthem there must have been a sigh of relief all over the nation as well as in the House chamber: he had made it.

But reading the speech was something else again. We learned that the U. S. defense situation is not too brilliant, but it surely will be improved by a great national effort, unmarred by extra taxes. There is something wrong with our educational system, and the government will do something about that, too. But above all, it's up to Johnny himself to learn how to read.

The Soviets are "waging total cold war," and our answer is to "waging total cold war," and point the President was specific. We invite the Russians to join us in waging total war on the anopheles, the malaria-producing mosquito. As a matter of fact, there are a few other ominous things buzzing in the air these days; but the idea is to proceed, one step at a time, from a tiny enemy of mankind to a larger one. Moreover, in the fight against anopheles there can be little doubt of the Russians' good faith.

But what about some other fields of science? What about, for instance, inviting the Russians to pool scientific and technological discoveries, including those in the field of weapons? Couldn't our weaponeers together with the Russians formally recognize what they know already: they have overreached their goal?

The idea of negotiations with the Russians is still distasteful to the administration. Yet the President had just returned from an interallied summit meeting in Paris, where he was told by the allied leaders that negotiations with the Russians are imperative at all possible levels, from the summit to the basement. Since then, Macmillan has suggested a European nonaggression pact. A similar proposal was made back in the summer of 1953 by Chancellor Adenauer, who in a letter to John Foster Dulles advanced the idea of negotiations with the Russians over a reduction of armaments in Europe and a mutual security pact. Somehow, Dulles never got that letter. But now the allies have become more insistent, and it unlikely that their messages to Washington will get lost again.

Actually, we don't think there is anything inherently wrong with summit meetings. What's wrong is the lack of follow-up. There was no follow-up on our part after Geneva. From the way the President spoke to the nation, there doesn't seem to be much of a follow-up after Paris—at least not on our part.

One several occasions during the last few years the shaping of our foreign policy has been taken over by an allied leader. We are waiting for the next move from our Acting Secretary of State, Konrad Adenauer.—The Reporter.

as SBI agents and Robeson County deputies—with drawn guns—burst into the Indian home near Pembroke where they were hiding.

The two had been the object of an intensive search since Sunday night when they and three fellow prisoners overpowered a jailer and escaped from the Mecklenburg County jail at Charlotte. Two of the escapees were caught at Columbia, S. C., Monday leaving only one of the five still at large.

Tax Cut

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5 (AP)—President Eisenhower said today a tax cut could be a reserve weapon to give business a shot in the arm. But he gave no indication whatever of recommending a reduction at this time.

Instead, Eisenhower stood by his prediction that business should pick up around the middle of the year.

In a voice hoarse from a cold, the President told a news conference that if things got to the point where it was necessary, a tax cut would have a "very real, great stimulus on the economy." But he cautioned against "going too far with trying to fool with our economy" and getting "something else started."

Tar Babies Beaten By State Frosh

Rocky Mount — Carolina's Tar Babies suffered their third consecutive defeat here tonight, as the State College Wolflets beat them for the second time this season by 85-69.

The Tar Babies saw their Consolidated University brothers control both backboards most of the night, and a Carolina full-court press failed to unnerve the Wolflets in the second half. The press caused many fouls, thus running up the score for State at the charity stripe.

Carolina was led by sharp-shooter Lou Brown, who pumped in 20 in the losing cause. State's Stan Niewierowski dumped in 31, while Larry Lakins collected 21.

The main bright spot for the ailing freshmen was the performance of Billy Dunlap, predicted by some to fill the shoes of the scholastically disabled Doug Moe. Dunlap got 12 points.

The frosh play here again tonight, as they will be seeking to get back into the win column against Altantic Christian.

Ruffin And Zeta Psi Win In Mural Tag Football Playoffs

Ruffin Dormitory and Zeta Psi Fraternity emerged from a long and drawn out intramural tag football season as the respective champion in their division yesterday afternoon.

Ruffin defeated Grimes 19-0 to become chmapion in the dorm division and the Zetas conquered the Sigma Chi's 22-0 to take the top honor in the fraternity blue division.

Tomorrow's action will find Ruffin playing the grad students champion, the Peacocks; and the Zetas will battle the fraternity white division champion, the DKE's, to determine a fraternity champion. A campus champion will be determined Friday.

Ruffin gained its victory with three touchdowns, two of them coming in the first half. Robert Wicker made the first talley and was soon followed by Charles Reaves. Tommy Rogers kicked the extra point after Wicker's score, giving Ruffin a 13-0 lead at half time. The second half play was a little closer, Robert Lowder going over for the final Ruffin score.

The Zetas got the jump on the Sigma Chis when Garret Folger and Jerre Parker scored for them in the first half. Walt Wilson converted both extra points. In the second half, Mac Patton scored, and Sandy Thorp blocked a kick which fell over the Sigma Chi goal for a safety.

news in brief

Plane Crash

MUNICH, Germany, Feb. 6 (UP)—A British European Airways plane crashed today in a third attempt to take off in a snowstorm, and Munich police said 21 persons were killed. Seven of England's top soccer stars were among the victims.

The twin-engine Elizabethan airliner was carrying England's champion Manchester United soccer team and a number of British sports writers. The British Consulate here said only 10 of the 17 team members survived.

The police said 23 passengers and crewmen survived the fiery crash but doctors were reported operating feverishly on soem in an attempt to save their lives.

Unemployment

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 (UP)—Several Democratic senators jumped on President Eisenhower today for what one of them called "the serious economic trouble" the country is facing.

This was the phrase used by Sen. McNamara (D-Mich) in co-sponsoring a bill by Sen. Kennedy (D-Mass) to increase unemployment compensation payments and widen the range of coverage.

Kennedy said present benefits cover only a small fraction of the current loss in wages.

Race Trouble

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Feb. 6 (UP)—A series of racial incidents were reported from integrated Central High School today. And there was another anonymous report of a bomb in the school.

Supt. Virgil Blossom confirmed that he was investigating a report that a girl student struck another girl with a purse. He said one girl was white and the second negro, but declined to say which one did the striking.

Blossom refused to identify the students, but unofficial sources said the Negro girl was Minnie Jean Brown, who has been involved in some previous incidents. These sources gave the white girl's name as Frankie Gregg.

Reports emanating from the school said that a white boy later spilled soup on Minnie Jean in the school cafeteria and that another Negro girl was involved in a kicking incident in a corridor.

Pay TV

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 (UP) A House commitee today asked the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to hold off on its plans for a trial of pay television until Congress can act on the issue.

Rep. Harris (D-Ark) told reporters that the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which he is chairman, had passed a resolution to that effect in closed session today.

Professor

HIGH POINT, N. C., Feb. 6 (UP) — Corydon P. Spruill, professor of economics at the University of North Carolina, was named today as executive director for a committee to study North Carolina public school finances.

The appointment was announced by State Sen. Arthur Kirkman of High Point who is chairman of the North Carolina Committee for a Study of Public School Finance.

Bomb Scare

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Feb. 6 (UP)—A bomb scare at a Mecklenburg County Negro grammar school fizzled out today. A police captain suggested the whole affair was intimidation by a group of whites.

An anonymous male telephoned county, police last night that a bomb was set to explode at 11 a. m. today in the Woodland School at Paw Creek, about five miles from here.

Police Capt. G. A. Stevens said his officers searched the school this morning and remained there several hours before they were withdrawn.

COMPOSER PERCY GRAINGER

Australian Composer Plans Local Concert

Percy Grainger, noted Australian composer and pianist, will be the guest artist in a joint concert of the UNC Symphonic Wind Ensemble, conducted by Herbert W. Fred, and the University Chorus under the direction of Wilton Mason to be given Tuesday, Feb. 11, at 8 p. m. in Hill Music Hall.

The concert, which is open to the public, is sponsored by the Department of Music and Graham Memorial.

Grainger was born in Melborne, Australia; as a child prodigy he toured Europe giving many piano concerts. He was recognized as a performer of outstanding talent by Edward Grieg, Norwegian composer. The pianist became one of the most popular performers of the early 20th century.

Grainger's vocal and instrumental compositions, many of them based upon English folksongs collected by him since 1905, have been frequently performed in this country and abroad.

Besides making concert appearances and composing, Grainger is co-editing the important music series, English Gothic Music.

In the Chapel Hill concert, Grainger will be the soloist in the first movement of Grieg's Piano Concerto in A Minor. In 1907 the composer chose Grainger as pianist for an imporant performance of this work, and it has remained a favorite of the artist.

The program will be composed largely of compositions writen or arranged by Grainger. His works, noted for their use of irregular rhythms, are technically difficult to perform, yet are models of melodic tunefulness.

Musicales Trio Plans Melodies From Spain

The first Petites Musicales program of the spring semester will be presented at the University Sunday at 8 p. m. in Gerrard Hall.

Featured artists in the Sunday evening concert will be Emily Kellam and Suzanne Davids, duo-harpists of Chapel Hill and Ethel Casey, soprano from Raleigh. The group will present a series of Spanish songs by Manuel de Falla.

These songs, originally written for piano accompaniment, were transcribed for two harps at the request of Charlos Salzedo, internationally known harpist and teacher of the two performers.

N. C. Symphony Soloist

Mrs. Kellam was harp instructor at Hockaday School for girls in Dallas, Tex., and Greenwich House Music School in New York City.

She has performed with a harp ensemble at the Dallas Museum of Art, as soloist with the North Carolina Symphony during the 1951 and 1957 season and as orchestra harpist with the University Symphony and Duke Symphony.

Harp Instructor

Mrs. Davids has appeared as principal harpist with the Elkhart Symphony in Indiana and she was harp instructor at the University of Iowa.

She has played with various symphony orchestras in Iowa and soloed with the University of Iowa orchestra and with the University of Iowa band, during a three-state tour.

Soloist In 'Elijah'

Mrs. Casey, wife of Willis Casey, business manager of athletics at N. C. State College, has performed as soloist with the Raleigh Oratorio Society.

Among her other appearances was her performance at Duke University last May in Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

Petites Musicales are sponsored by GMAB and the recitals are open to the public at no charge.

Revision Of Honor Councils Offered By Solons To Provide Single Body

Newspaper Research Group Makes Report

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Al Goldsmith (UP) and Pat Adams (SP) introduced on the behalf of Student Government Attorney-General Sonny Hallford a bill to form "a council for Honor Code violations" last night at the Student Legislature.

The Honor Council will be composed of a council of five members and a jury of nine students which will have original jurisdiction of all cases of violations by men and women of the Honor Code.

A committee will be drawn from the Honor System Commission to interview and select jurors "on the basis of interest, sincerity of purpose and competence."

Before a hearing a student will be given a list of 25 jurors. If he can give a "substantial" reason to the Attorney General why a juror is unacceptable, then the Attorney-General will excuse that juror.

From the remaining jurors the Attorney-General will pick seven people. Two jurors will be selected from a group of four permanent jurors. There will be at least two male and two female jurors.

A two-thirds vote of the jury is needed for a conviction. The council members will decide questions of law and procedure by a majority vote. Their decisions are subject to appeal to the Student-Faculty Judicial Council.

There will be six permanent members of the council; three elected in the spring, three in the fall. One of the three shall be male, one female and one elected at large.

Should the bill be passed three people from the Women's and the Men's Honor Councils shall be selected by the President of the Student Body to serve until spring elections and three until elections next fall.

If passed, the bill will go into effect as soon as the procedures have been set up and the jurors selected.

Pat Adams (SP), chairman of the newspaper research committee, read its report. John Brooks (SP) made a motion that bills be drawn to implement recommended chages in those matters under the control of the Student Legislature.

The committee recommended that the students continue to elect the editor. A selections board would consider if the charges against and editor are valid grounds for a recall election.

The bi-partisan selections board would be altered. The committee drew up a list of qualifications needed by an editorial candidate in order to be endorsed by the selections board.

The committee recommended that The Daily Tar Heel retain its annual profits.

A bill was introduced by Harold O'Tuel (SP) to buy The Daily Tar Heel a new delivery truck. Ralph Cummings (SP) introduced a bill "to organize administration of the Bell Tower Parking Lot."

Jerry Oppenheimer (UP) introduced a bill to reorganize the campus orientation committee. A bill to alter the Carolina Forum and the Publications Board was introduced by John Brooks (SP).

UNC Receives $100,000 Grant From Carnegie

The University will receive a grant of $100,000 from the Carnegie Corporation for support of a program for superior students, according to an announcement made today.

The program will be supported by Carnegie for five years at the rate of $20,000 per year.

The current UNC program for "superior freshmen," which has been operating since 1954, will be expanded to apply also to top ranking sophomores, juniors and seniors.

One immediate result of the program can be decisions by the parents of many talented high school seniors to send their sons to the University at Chapel Hill so that their abilities will be recognized and special attention be given to their educational development.

The program wil continue for five years under the Carnegie grant, at a cost of $20,000 a year which will include salaries for additional instructors to relieve regular staff members in the program and salaries for visiting professors.

Advantages

By carefully selecting faculty members to teach in the program and by organizing special courses for the most able students, the University will be able to:

1. Give the high-ranking students the benefits said to be characteristic of a few distinguished small colleges in the nation.

2. Also give them the advantages peculiar to a large university.

The procedure which has been followed is to select students with superior aptitude as indicated by tests and high school records (50 freshmen were chosen this year) and "keep them together" in special courses in mathematics, history of Western Civilization and English. Each student also takes two other courses, usually a foreign language and a natural science.

During the sophomore year they are also together in courses in philosophy and recent history.

The students and their teachers undertake to advance as far as their abilities will permit. In the first three years of the experiment

Living In Chapel Hill

Ex-Venezuelan Attorney General

By EDITH MacKINNON

"It is important to realize that any revolution is not directed against one thing or one group but against the culture in general."

These words were spoken concerning the recent Venezuelan revolt by Martin Perez. Perez is a former Venezuelan attorney general placed in exile by recently ousted dictator Perez Jiminez in 1951.

The lawyer and his family have been in the U. S. since 1955 and at present are making their home in Chapel Hill. A son, Martin, is now a pre-medical student at Carolina.

Pleased with Revolt

Speaking of the revolt which came to a head in January of this year, Perez said he was "very pleased" with the results.

The Venezuelan exile told how Perez Jiminez rose to power following the 1948 coup against the elected government of Dr. Romulo Gallgeos. After a reorganization of the government in 1950, Jiminez became absolute ruler, and suspended many civil liberties.

"It is important to take account of the fact that the army became the main source of political power under Jiminez," Perez said. He told how Jiminez had gained power through "corruption" and "bribery."

'Complete Tyrant'

In Perez's opinion, Jiminez was a "complete tyrant" and "not ruler of any country."

Asked about the Communist role in the recent revolution, Perez pointed out that it is "easier for the Communists to work in an underground position." The Communists were one of the four political parties making up the Patriotic Junta, the group actively working for the overthrow of Jiminez.

Perez said free elections would soon be held in their troubled country for a new president. These elections would be open to anyone over 18.

One of the main problems now, according to Perez, will be "to get an atmosphere of confidence and to avoid, for the first term, a real struggle."

Plans Return

Speaking of his own plans, Perez said he will return to Venezuela very shortly. His family will remain in Chapel Hill.

Asked if he would re-enter politics on his return, Perez said he would like better to go back into his law profession. He added that the new presidential candidate would probably be an independent. Perez himself is an independent.

Perez has been in politics since 1936 and was jailed in October, 1952 when he was involved in plans to organize a new political party. In December of that year he was "politely invited" to leave the country.

Perez says he is not really a politican, "but sometimes a man can not be what he wants to be."

Following his exile Perez and his family went to Costa Rica and came to the U. S. in 1955. They decided to come to America because they "felt it was important

Tyrone Power—Not Only A Big Star But A Success As An Actor As Well

By DAVE PETERSON

Tyrone Power, who is co-starred with Faye Emerson and Arthur Treacher in "Back to Methuselah," which comes to Memorial Hall Feb. 28 and March 1, at 8:30 p.m., has succeeded in making both critics and public think of him, not just as a handsome movie star, but as one of the nation's more accomplished actors.

This change of thought pattern was not easily accomplished. As one of the screen's more popular stars, he had been so much admired for his rugged appearence that his acting ability tended to be overlooked.

Two-Type Roles

Until he went into the Marine Corps during World War II, his screen roles had placed him among the top ten stars at the box-office. His studio was happy with the financial returns of his film.

But they were limited to two types: the swashbuckling hero in adventures such as "Blood and Sand" and "The Mark of Zorro" and the romantic lead in comedies such as "Thin Ice" and "Alexander's Ragtime Band."

When he returned from his military service in 1945, he fought for wider scope and achieved it somewhat in films such as "The Razor's Edge" and "Nightmare Alley."

Recent Roles

In recent years, able to pick and choose, he has been able to find tremendous gratification in the work he has been able to accomplish. His roles on the screen in "The Long Gray Line, "The Eddy Duchin Story,", "The Sun Also Rises" and "Witness for the Prosecution" are far from the mold Hollywood had forced him into for so long.

And on the stage he has achieved artistic as well as popular success in "John Brown's Body" and "The Dark is Light Enough" in New York, and in London and Dublin as "Mr. Roberts" and in Shaw's "The Devil's Disciplee."

Tickets for "Back to Methuselah" are available in the Carolina Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall. All seats are reserved at $2.20, $3.30, and $4.40.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Research Group's Report Holds Good For Tar Heel

The Newspaper Research Committee has come up with what appear to be basically good recommendations for improvement of The Daily Tar Heel. Text of the committee report is printed elsewhere on this page.

Significant among the report are areas of newspaper knowledge which the committee feels should be investigated by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board when it screens candidates prior to election of editor of the campus newspaper. Perhaps the Research Committee has been a little stern in this part of the report.

In the first place, its breadth demands of the student knowledge about the newspaper which probably few editors on any major daily publication would be able to answer. It is, we feel, expecting a little too much to require each candidate to be well versed in the administrative, editorial, news and business aspects of the paper at once, notwithstanding the importance of the same.

Secondly, requirements which the Research Committee feels should be met by editor candidates presumes that persons with such qualifications exist on the campus. Perhaps one or two do, but that number is not sufficient to assure all talented students an equal chance before the Selections Board.

After all, it is conceivable that a good journalist with editorial talent is not versed in all the operations of the paper. It is true he should have some knowledge about the working procedure of the publication, but to expect a thorough knowledge of all is to subtract a certain responsibility from those who head the several departments of the paper.

Another area in which the Research Committee may have failed is its procedure for recall election. It has proposed that, after petitions for recall are signed and turned over to the Attorney General, the Selections Board would rule on alleged charges and call for the election if probable cause were evident.

What this does, in effect, is to allow for the overruling of 15 per cent of the student body in its desire for recall election. In other words, a small board could prohibit a recall election even if such action were the desire of 100 per cent of the student body. Consequently, this recommendation should be studied closely by the legislature.

On the positive side, the Research Committee has acted to benefit the Daily Tar Heel in its recommendation that funds be forthcoming for photographic equipment and supplies for the paper. It seems to us rather archaic that a daily newspaper should be without the equipment to produce the art work which makes for a better publication.

In considering this recommendation, the legislature should realize that no increased budgetary allotment would be required, once the initial capital outlay were expended for the necessary equipment. Thereafter, the sum now allotted to the photography fund could be allotted to a new department of the Daily Tar Heel for use in expanding our photographic news coverage.

In appearing before the Research Committee, we did not recommend increased salaries for the news editor or institution of a salary for the associate editor. However, we endorse the recommendations made by the Research Committee with an eye to improving the newspaper through compensation for services contributed.

Finally, and this could be the most important of all the recommendations, the Research Committee has recognized a stimulus for the Daily Tar Heel in its proposal that profits made by the publication be retained for administration by the editor, upon approval of the Publications Board.

Currently, any profits accrued by the Daily Tar Heel over a year's time are turned back into the student coffers. The Research Committee proposal would stimulate economy within the publication while at the same time conceivably eliminating the need for the paper to go before the legislature for special appropriations. The Publications Board would serve as the watchdog over these profits.

We are, after all, virtually a self-sustaining organization. We sell our newspapers for less than 2½ cents per copy. And the remainder of our revenue comes from student fees.

In view of these facts, it seems that the Daily Tar Heel, responsible as an economic operaion on the campus, should retain what ever fruits it gains from its efforts. To do otherwise is to eliminate any real stimulus for efficient operations of the publication.

What Is Faculty Council Probing?

Just what is being considered by the Faculty Council concerning attendance regulations is, at this point, just about anybody's guess.

The Council has sworn secrecy until discussion and action slated for this afternoon.

We will point out, however, that recommendations have been made by student leaders on campus that class excuses be put on an honor system basis, similar to the practice during a portion of the flu epidemic here last fall.

We already have spoken out in favor of such a plan. Suffice it to say that it would be another extension of the Honor System at the University.

Meanwhile, we anxiously await the full report which the Faculty Council will disclose after its deliberations. It is doubtful, however, that any revolutionary changes in attendance requirements will be forthcoming.

Needs Shown

Possible elimination of the Tin Can as a dance site for Mardi Gras weekend only points out the growing need for adequate Student Union facilities at the University.

Noting that the Tin Can is not safe for the crowd expected at the Mardi Gras Dance, Maintenance Supervisor C. B. Huggins has informed the dance committee that several thousand dollars would be needed to get the old building in condition for the event.

Next weekend fraternities on campus will hold a Germans Dance in Woollen Gymnasium. But the night of the Mardi Gras Dance, planned particularly with non fraternity students in mind, Woollen Gymnasium will not be available.

Thus, hard feelings could result. And all this could be averted if only Student Union facilities existed to accommodate the numbers expected at such University social functions.

Sacred Cows Select Own Fellows

By WHIT WHITFIELD

Once upon a time there was a group of Sacred Cows who were selected to safeguard the integrity of the herd. The herd being large, the duties and responsibilities of the Sacred Cows were great in number. It was only fitting therefore, that these Sacred Cows be the most sacred and honorable of all Sacred Cows, and they were, to be sure.

In order to be a Sacred Cow, a member of the herd had to be a member of a semi-sacred in-group called a corral. Not only this, but he had to be very sociable, a bovine paramour so to speak.

Although it was not strictly necessary, it was very helpful for the prospective deity to have been selected dux of his particular corral.

In prearranged roundups the Sacred Cows selected from their particular corrals (semi-sacred in groups) the candidates that would most likely best represent them in the future. These candidates were then eligible for the big roundup which usually came a short while later. It was at this roundup that the "untouchables" were invited to attend and present their candidates. The "untouchables" were so accustomed to this type procedure that they often refused to be represented, knowing full well that it was no use.

Nevertheless, at the big roundup, the "untouchables" were represented to some degree, although it was to no avail. Without the permission of the Sacred Cows it was almost futile. How could one aspire to be a Sacred Cow without The Sacred Cow's assent?

Shortly after, the herd was given the opportunity to choose their new Sacred Cows. The candidates previously accepted by their semi-sacred in-groups had begun to socialize and plan their strategy.

The herd was finally given the opportunity to select the Sacred Cows for the next winter. The semi-sacred in-groups made sure that their members voted; the "untouchables" were not well organized at all, and many of them didn't care about Sacred Cows, so they didn't bother to vote. Naturally the hopefuls from the corrals were selected, so the herd once again was led by an enlightened minority. God bless those sacred Cows.

Conformity?

"The danger to our country is not that liberty will destroy itself in honest, earnest, controversial debate but that liberty will be allowed to suffocate in the prevailing atmosphere of complacency and conformity.

"To the conformist, all controversy is social error and controversy that challenges political complacency with fear and apprehension of danger and destruction is intolerable. To the conformist, the way to get along is to go along with the stream.

"To be suspicious of the cause of the prevailing current is to be an alarmist and any active attempt to prove the truth of what you suspect will make you a witch-hunter or a crackpot.

"The diseased disposition for popular conformity has reduced our pictured, printed and radio news to a common denominator that could be called the prevailing line of conformity. Who establishes the line of conformity is a mystery, but he who hits that line is immediately thrown for a distractful loss.

Text Of Research Committee Report

The following is the text verbatim of the Newspaper Research Committee, excluding introductory remarks explaining establishment of this committee.

1) EDITOR'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE PAPER:

We feel that the editor, being the single popularly elected head of the paper, is ultimately responsible for the entire paper. This in no way negates the financial responsibility of the paper to the Publications Board.

2) SELECTION OF THE EDITOR AND THE PROCESSES OF REMOVAL FROM OFFICE:

The Committee feels that since the Daily Tar Heel is dependent upon student funds for publication, the student body should continue to elect the editor.

We recommend certain changes in the membership of the Bi-Partisan Selection Board and in the procedures and responsibilities of this Board.

In our opinion, the members which would make the most competent and fair Selections Board are: the chairman of both political parties, one member elected from and by the executive positions of the Daily Tar Heel, one member elected from and by the non-salaried staff of the Daily Tar Heel, one member of the Journalism School Faculty appointed by the speaker of the Student Legislature, and the chairman of the University Party.

The Selections Board should convene prior to any election for the office of editor of the Daily Tar Heel. They will interview all candidates for this office and assess these candidates' qualifications with regard to these fields:

I. Experience.
II. Knowledge of the administrative aspects of the Daily Tar Heel.
A) General knowledge of what constitutes libel.
B) Organization of the paper.
C) Training program.
III. Knowledge of the editorial aspects of the Daily Tar Heel.
A) Ability to write
B) Organization of the editorial page.
IV. Knowledge of the news aspects of the Daily Tar Heel (including make-up, headline writing, proof reading, night editing, etc.)
A) News.
B) Features.
C) Sports.
V. Knowledge of the business aspect of the Daily Tar Heel.
A) Circulation.
B) Subscription.
C) Advertising.
VI. Knowledge of the campus.
VII. Knowledge of current events.
VIII. Personality.

The Selections Board may endorse as many candidates as it deems qualified. The Board should make public a short paragraphic report on each candidate's qualifications taking into account the aforementioned fields.

In order to emphasize the importance of the Selections Board approval, its name would be the only one indicated by the side of a qualified candidate on the ballot.

The parties or any other group would continue to be free to endorse or support any candidate. It is recommended that the Selections Board convene prior to the endorsement of the campus political parties.

We recommend, in the interest of fairness, that the total expenditures for a candidate's campaign be limited and equal for all candidates.

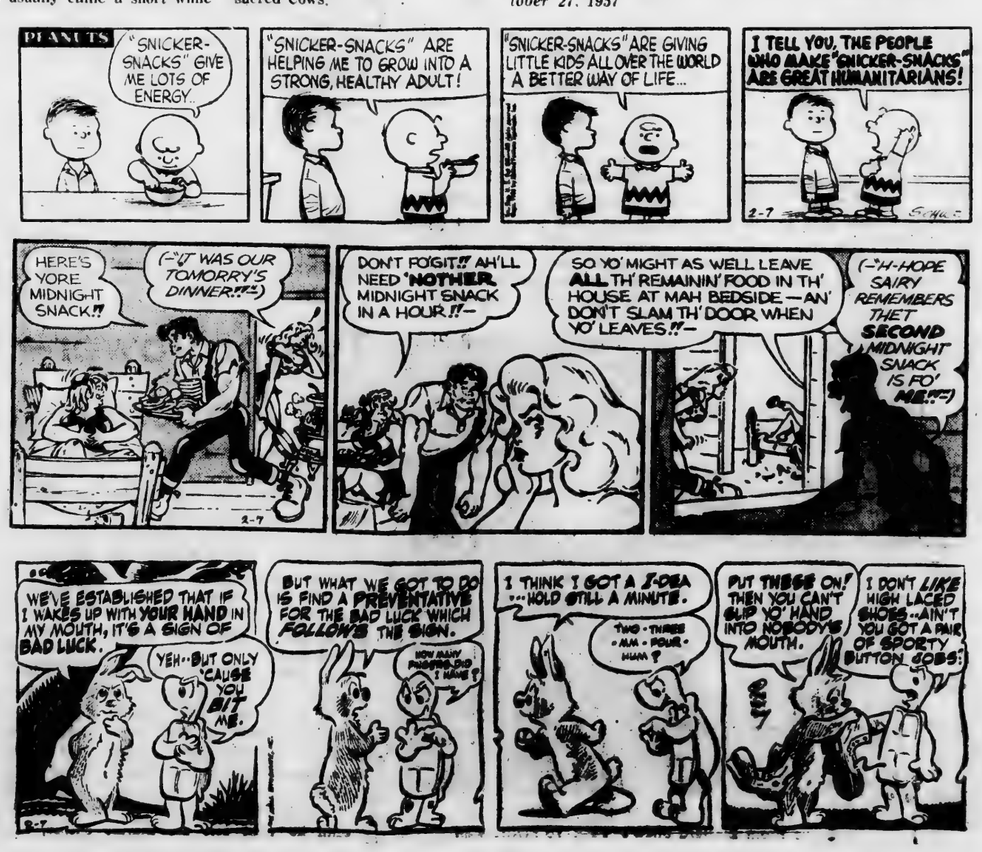
We suggest continuance of the democratic process of recall with certain revisions in the current procedures. The petition for recall should be validated by the Attorney General for its signatures, and the petition should then be turned over to the Selections Board to consider the charges against the editor. The Selections Board would then rule on these charges. The only valid grounds for recall would be libel, failure to put out a paper, or mental or physical illness.

If the Selections Board find the charges of the petition valid, then a special election for the editorship shall be held, and the incumbent editor may be a candidate without the approval of the Selections Board. All other candidates would appear before the Board as in a regular election. If the charges of the petition were found invalid, according to the previously mentioned criteria, there would be no recall election.

3) FINANCIAL ORGANIZATION:

The Committee found in its study of the physical facilities of the Daily Tar Heel that certain equipment needs to be replaced. The Daily Tar Heel needs a new truck and seven new typewriters to replace the well worn ones now in use. Five of the paper's twelve typewriters are either new or in good repair.

As a possible way to save money and insure the Daily Tar Heel's photographic needs are met, the Committee suggests 1) the purchase of a camera and accessories, 2) the annual purchase of film and darkroom supplies necessary for an entire year's photographic work, 3) creation of the paid position of Photography Editor, responsible for the paper's photographic needs. On the basis of the Committee's study, it believes that the cost of the necessary supplies and the Photography Editor's salary could be financed within the present photographic fund.



The Committee suggests the increase of the News Editor's salary, commensurate with the responsibilities of his office. To relieve the editor of some of the burdens of his position, we recommend that the Associate Editor become a salaried position in line with the other executive positions.

In order that the Daily Tar Heel become the best college newspaper, it is necessary to plan for the future. New ideas for improvement must continually be in the minds of those operating a campus newspaper. These new ideas must be bred in the feeling that there is an opportunity to implement them. This opportunity must be afforded each editor. The opportunity to implement these ideas should come from a certain degree of freedom in the financial operation of the paper. The Committee does not feel that the editor should be given a lump sum appropriation to be used at his discretion, but it believes through sound management of the paper, the editor may be able to get the necessary capital to implement his ideas. Therefore, the Committee recommends that the Daily Tar Heel retain its annual profits. These funds may be administered by the editor, subject to the approval of the Publications Board.

The Committee wishes to reiterate its feeling that these plans are for the betterment of the Daily Tar Heel, for the present and for the future.

February 6, 1958.

Respectfully submitted.

Open Letter To Santa

"Tito Calls on U.S. to End Arms Aid—Washington Views Action Calmly—Economic Help Expected to Continue"
—N.Y. Times

Dear Santa Claus:

We've been so good
We've wiped our noses when we should;
When Khrushchev snarls, we're mild and meek
And let him kick our other cheek.
When he cries "Sputnik!"—the big show-off!—
We whisper "Vanguard"—which won't go off.
We say our prayers, chant "Eli, Eli,"
And brush our molars three times daily.
When Nehru calls us dirty names,
We know he's only playing games;
And when he throws his sticks and stones,
We simply give him bigger loans.
Our hair is combed, our shoes are shined,
Our table manners are refined.
While North Korea stocks its warheads,
We don't complain. We won't be soreheads.
We send our troops to Little Rock
And go to bed by eight o'clock.
So, Santa, when you ride the drifts
On Christmas Eve to leave your gifts,
Please leave one present for our tree—
And, if you love us, let it be
A note from Tito: "Hail! Good cheer!
I'll take your arms again this year!"

Pat Adams & Charlie Pittman Head Symposium Physical Arrangements

By DAVIS YOUNG

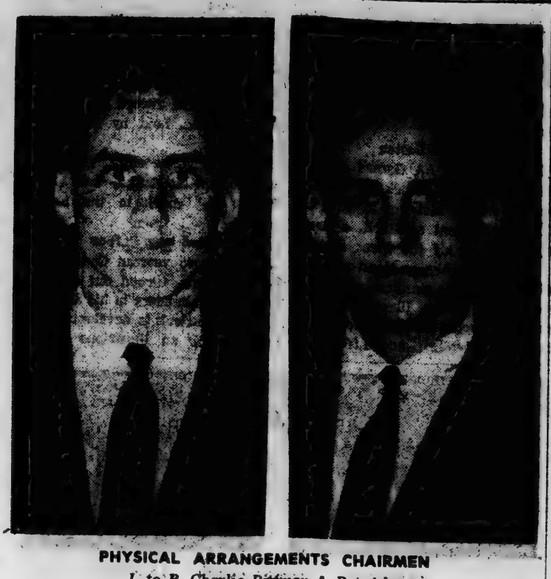
The Physical Arrangements Committee of the Carolina Symposium is proceeding with all haste towards the conclusion of its duties in preparation for the Symposium Week in the latter part of March.

The destinies of the committee are being guided by senior Pat Adams and sophomore Charlie Pittman. The main tasks confronting the group are completing final arrangements for buildings, stages, and radio and television coverage during the actual Symposium program.

Adams indicated that all morning programs would be held in Carroll Hall and that evening festivities would take place in Memorial Hall. However, changes may occur, for all television broadcasts, morning or night must originate from Memorial.

TV, Radio Coverage

Current plans call for television station WUNC to carry a major portion of the schedule and for radio station WUNC to do the same. In addition the committee is attempting to initiate an FM relay system on a statewide basis.



Earl Wynn, and John Young of WUNC have been instrumental in aiding the committee to date as have Chancellor Aycock and E. Z. Jones, president of the North Caro-

There is also some chance of limited television coverage from Durham or Greensboro and a national radio setup with NBC's Monitor. The committee will continue to work in close conjunction with the Program Committee of the Symposium asit nears the completion of its duties.

National Coverage

Adams, Pittman and the rest of the committee are now planning for the FM and national coverage and for information booths which will be distributed around campus.

Adams has been active in a wide variety of extra-curriculars during

Yesterday's Answer

UNC Grant To Aid Superior Students

the students have covered more ground than regular students have done—and have maintained better than Phi Beta Kappa averages.

The students and faculty meet together inside and outside of class. Most of the boys take part in extra-curricular activities, including sports.

The Pace

The underlying theme in the minds of those who have developed the program has been expressed: "The University has long recognized that our more able students frequently do not find in regular classes, where the pace and level of instruction are adjusted to the abilities of the average undergraduate, the stimulation and provocation necessary to the full development of their capacities. Often they lose their first flair for learning in a group which gives them no mental competition and lapse into patterns of mediocre performance unworthy of their superior ability."

The University for years has set up sections according to ability in English, mathematics, chemistry, physics and Romance Languages. There has been an honors program for seniors since 1917.

The main advance in recent years has been the "Superior Freshman" project. Classes are limited to 25—two classes with 25 in each class this year.

The students in this program have said that the accelerated rate of coverage and the sophisticated levels of presentation in the special courses have carried them farther and penetrated more deeply into the material than would have been possible in regular courses.

In the extension of what has already begun, the program for specially-qualified freshmen — 50 of them — will be continued.

'Our Own Effort'

RALEIGH, Feb. 1 (AP)—Gov. Leroy Collins of Florida said tonight that the South must be alloaed to solve "our sins of racial discrimination. . . . by our own effort and in our own time."

Racial reformers should be told, he added, to "take the heavy hand of coercion, whether by judicial order or bayonets, off the South."

But, he added, the South must be told that "the inevitable tide of human progress moves against racial discrimination" and "universal brotherhood must be our goal."

"We must abandon the defiant attitude of 'never,'" Collins declared. "We must say to Americans everywhere, 'We will move forward as, where and when it is reasonably sound to do so.' And mean it. And do it."

Education

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 (AP) — Sen. Alfott (R-Colo) fired a chrage of disgraceful conduct at Sen. Morse (D-Ore) today in a argument over aid to education.

The argument took place in the Senate Education Committee where Secretary of Welfare Folsom presented President Eisenhower's four-year, $1,200,000,000 school program.

Morse called the program completely inadequate, and said he was "shocked that the Administration doesn't know what the needs are."

Football Mgr. Positions Open

The football office has urged that all students interested in helping with the student management of the football team this year attend a meeting in room 304 Woollen Gym at 7 o'clock Friday, Feb. 7.

for our children to know Americans closely." Perez commented that "sometimes the idea others get of America is not the right one."

Like Tar Heelia

The family chose North Carolina for its relatively low cost of living, its climate and the fact that its educational institutions were good. Perez said he had also heard that "in the South, the people were very friendly."

The Venezuelans received a warm reception in Raleigh, where they first settled before coming to Chapel Hill. "We have really been happy here," Perez said.

"I feel that we owe a real debt to you Americans," he added.

The Perez son plans to continue his studies here for the remainder of the year. A daughter was recently married in this country.

Perez was asked his opinion of the recent criticism of American policy toward Latin American dictatorships. He feels that in the last few years U. S. policy has been based on establishing security in the countries.

U. S. Policies

U. S. policies have not always been the best for cordial relationships with the Latin American people, Perez feels. He mentioned the incident of a few years ago when President Eisenhower sent a medal to Perez Jiminez and a letter complimenting him on his leadership.

This kind of thing tends to "deteriorate the relationships between the two peoples," Perez said.

In conclusion, the former attorney general pointed out that it was hard for Americans to understand such a revolution since they have never had to face such a situation.

"We don't realize that there are millions of people fighting for freedom every day, and not just behind the Iron Curtain," Perez commented.

On Campus with Max Shulman
(By the Author of "Rally Round the Flag, Boys!" and "Barefoot Boy with Cheek.")

BE IT EVER SO HUMBLE

Today let us apply the hot white light of sustained thinking to the greatest single problem besetting American colleges. I refer, of course, to homesickness.

It is enough to rend the heart, walking along a campus at night and listening to entire dormitories sobbing themselves to sleep. And in the morning when the poor, lorn students rise from their tear-stained pillows and refuse their breakfasts and shamble off to class, their lips trembling, their eyelids gritty, it is enough to turn the bones to aspic.

What can be done to overcome homesickness? Well sir, the obvious solution is for the student to put his home on rollers and bring it to college with him. This, however, presents three serious problems:

1) It is likely to play hob with your wine cellar; many wines, as we all know, will not travel.

2) There is the matter of getting your house through the Holland Tunnel, which has a clearance of only 14 feet, 8 inches. This, of course, is ample for ranch houses, but quite impossible for Cape Cods, Georgians, and Saltboxes, and I, for one, think it would be a flagrant injustice to deny higher education to students from Cape Cod, Georgia, and Saltbox.

3) There is the question of public utilities. Your house—and, of course, all the other houses in your town—has wires leading to the municipal power plant, pipes leading to the municipal water supply and gas main. So you will find when you start rolling your house to college that you are, willy-nilly, dragging all the other houses in town with you. This will result in gross population shifts and will make the Bureau of the Census eross as bears.

No, I'm afraid that taking your house to college is not feasible. The thing to do, then, is to make your campus lodgings as close a seplica of your home as possible.

Adorn your quarters with familiar objects, things that will constantly remind you of home. Your brother Sam, for instance. Or your citizenship papers. Or a carton of Marlboros.

There is nothing like Marlboros, dear friends, to make you feel completely at home. They're so easy, so friendly, so welcome, so likable. The filter is great. The flavor is marvelous. The Flip-Top Box is wonderful. The tattoo is optional.

Decorating your diggings with familiar objects is an excellent remedy for homesickness, but it is not without its hazards. Take, for instance, the case of Tignor Sigafoos and Estabrook Raunch who were assigned to share a room last fall in the freshman dorm.

Tignor, an ice-skating addict from Minnesota, brought with him 44 barrels over which he had jumped the previous winter to win the Minnesota Jumping-Over-Barrels Championship. Estabrook, a history major from Massachusetts, brought Plymouth Rock.

Well sir, there was simply not enough room for 44 barrels and Plymouth Rock too. Tignor and Estabrook fell into such a violent quarrel that the entire dorm was kept awake for twelve days and twelve nights. Finally the Dean of Men was called in to adjudicate the dispute. He listened carefully to both sides of the argument, then took Tignor and Estabrook and pierced their ears and sold them to gypsies.

And now all is quiet in the dorm, and everyone sits in peace and smokes his Marlboro, whose makers bring you this column throughout the school year.

KING'S KORNER

DTH Sports Editor

A Letter From Ed Sutton

This writer was very pleased yesterday to receive a letter from a good friend who everybody on campus knows or has heard of. Ed Sutton.

Ed, of course, was one of Carolina's all-time outstanding football players and just a few months back completed his rookie season with the Washington Redskins after graduating from Carolina last spring. The former Morehead Scholar was one of the outstanding rookies in the National Football League last season and among the top halfbacks in the Eastern division.

Ed's real happy at Tennessee but he says he misses the "Hill" and all his old friends. The Tennessee Med School has the largest enrollment of any in the United States and you can take it from Sutton, "it's plenty tough."

Detroit Star Is Third Year Student

Sutton has just finished mid-terms but says there's still no let up. He will attend three sessions, the final ending on Sept. 24 and the pro season begins on the 28th — a real tight schedule.

Ed reports that Dave Middleton, Detroit Lion star, is in his third year at UT and has really been a great help to him. "It was nice to have a guy in my same position to be here ahead of me and give me the advice which he did," Ed writes. Middleton, incidentally, is getting married in March. He and Ed plan to fly out on the weekends to play in the exhibition circuit.

Things haven't been too lonely for Sutton in Memphis. He says he sees old acquaintances all the time and one of his Washington teammates, Will Renfro, and Andy Nelson, defensive halfback for the Baltimore Colts are living in Memphis.

"It's a very friendly place," according to Ed. "We have a swell group of guys and many of the townspeople have come out to ask if they could help me in any way."

Will Never Regret Decision

As for his decision to go into pro ball, "It's one I'll never regret. After I found my way around in pro ball, I enjoyed it very much." Ed wouldn't want Redskin owner George Marshall to know it but he enjoyed it so much that he would just about have payed the Redskins to let him play.

He will most definitely play two more years before he "retires" from pro ball and might go on even longer.

Ed sends his fondest regards to all his friends here. He'd like to hear from some of his old schoolmates. His address is: Box 240, Univ. Tennessee, Memphis 3, Tenn.

Quigg Will Play Next Year, If!!

Joe Quigg will play basketball next season if his knee heals according to expectations.

Joe will be back in school next year and has decided to play for one semester and for the whole season if the conferenc will permit. Quigg comes under the four years competition in a five year period ruling whereby an athlete is allowed to play only four years in a five year enrollment period. Joe played one semester as a freshman, thus he's only eligible for one semester next year.

Carolina officials have asked the conference committee to reconsider its ruling in Joe's case due to the extenuating circumstances of his injury. "I haven't heard anything from the conference," says Joe. "If my knee comes along okay I will play one semester and I hope the conference will allow me to play the entire season.

Quigg, injured in a pre-season scrimmage session, is out of his cast now and has been in a brace for several weeks. He'll be out pretty soon and then it will be a period of therapy and exercise for the big center who tossed in two free throws in the third overtime against Kansas to give Carolina the NCAA Championship last March. Here's hoping that the big fellow will be okay by the summer and will be able to resume a college career that was just blossoming into something great before his untimely injury.

Scurlock To Run In Millrose Games Sat.

Lanky Dave Scurlock, Carolina's All-American middle distance runner, rated as the nation's number 1 challenger in the 1,000 yard run, will participate in the Millrose Games at New York's Madison Square Garden, Saturday (Feb.8).

The long-striding Junior, picked by his coach, Dale Ranson, to eclipse the record of every distance runner in the history of the Carolina, will run the 880 in the nagazine as the number one challational field of competitive stars Saturday.

Won at Boston

In the Boston AA Games at Boston last week, Scurlock came from behind on the last lap to win the 1,000 yard event at 2:11.1, a tenth of a second off the meet record.

Scurlock, big, clean-cut and with tremendous stamina, was rated recently by Sports Illustrated Magalenger to record-holder Arnie Sowell in the half-mile and 1,0000-yard run. The world record for the indoor half-mile, held by Sowell, is 1:50.3.

In practice, recently, Scurlock was clocked at 1:52.2, only :02.1 off Sowells' mark in the indoor half-mile.

Illustrious Career

According to veteran Coach Ranson, who has turned out at least two Olympic runners in his 33 years at UNC, Scurlock is developing fast and predicts an illustrious career for the Greensboro, N. C. runner.

Scurlock has made progress also in the outdoor half-mile, shooting for the world record in the event held curently by Tom Courtney at 1:46.8. Scurlock's best effort in this event is 1:48.2.

On his way to national ranking, Scurlock won three events in the Atlantic Coast Conference Track Meet and third place in the 880 in the NCAA last year.

Sugar Bowl

He captured the 440 yard run in the Sugar Bowl at New Orleans, recently.

A personal tribute to Scurlock was his selection this month as "Outstanding Student-Athlete of the Year" by the Kiwanis Club in his hometown of Greensboro, where he broke the state prep record in the half-mile two years in a row.

On February 15, Scurlock will participate in the New York Athletic Association Meet at Madison Square Garden.

Mermen To Meet Fla. Here Sat.

The University of Florida's Southeastern Conference swimming champions invade Bowman Gray pool here Saturday at 4 p. m., tangle with Carloina's ACC titleholders.

It will be the biggest test of the season for Coach Pat Earey's Tar Heels, who have swept through nine matches so far with little difficulty. Number eight was over East Carolina, 53-33, when Walt Rose paced the team a 100-yard free style and two relay wins.

Bill Rugglie, who scored 91½ points for Florida last season, is considered one of the nation's best backstrokers.

The Gators last season lost only one meet, to Florida State, and then came back to defeat that team in the closing meet of the season They also swept and cleaned up in the SEC championships. Jack Crone is head coach of the Gators and his assistant is Buddy Crone, former Carolina diving star.

FROSH WRESTLING

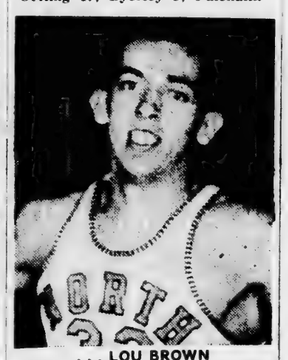
DANGEROUS MERMAN: Carolina swimming star Walt Rose is expected to be one of the leaders in the Tar Heel's quest for victory number nine against Florida here tomorrow afternoon. Rose has been a standout all season.

Frosh Down ACC

ROCKY MT.—The Carolina Tar Babies finally got back on the winning road here last night with an 85-71 victory over the Atlantic Christian College jayvees.

Lou Brown and Hugh Donahue broke up a 36-34 halftime score with a tremendous combined scoring punch in the second half as the Tar Babies pulled away for their first win in four games.

Brown had 33 points for the night, 17 of them coming in the second half. Donahue hit 21 after intermission and had 29 for the night. The big man also hauled in 31 rebounds to star under the backboards.



AAC wound up the ball game with only four men on the court as three of its players fouled out in the second half due to a full court press thrown up in an atempt to halt the rampaging Tar Babies.

Ken Rosemond emptied his bench before the night was over but ACC could do little to slow down the Tar Baby attack. The win somewhat avenged a licking at the hands of the N. C. State Wolflets here last night.

As indicated by the score, the first half was a see-saw battle with neither team being able to grab any kind of advantage but the Tar Babies opened up a fast break that was too much in the final half.

Carolina—Dunlap 4; Longnecker 1; Brown 33; Matthews 2; Donahue 29; Deaton 1; Hart 8; Craighill; Shuford 6; Hollers 1.

ACC—Shockley 10; Atkinson 7; Rogers 11; Bryan 7; Baker 11; Oetting 17; Byerley 8; Fulchum.

HAVING GOOD TIME—Up town, down town, and all around the town, there is a lot of talk these days about a local activity which has brought the old boys out, shedding weight and having a good time.

This is the University volleyball league, organized by physical education teacher "Pete" Mullis and designed for post-college age.

Teachers, coaches, merchants, lawyers, college administrators and others, are taking part in the play, scheduled in the Tin Can each Monday and Wednesday. University President William Friday is a member of one of the four teams, currently third in the league standings.

Thirty four are registered for play and at least 30 have been regularly showing up. The players also have their rooters, some of them grandbabies, which gives you an idea.

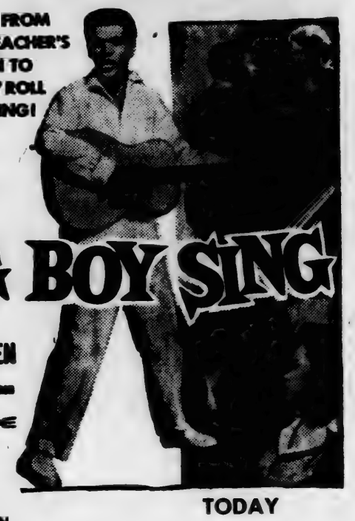
Wrestlers Meet VPI Tomorrow



Sporting a 4-3 season record, the varsity wrestling team enters the last month of the regular season with a good chance to finish the year with a winning record.

The Tar Heels list three more regularly scheduled meets this year before entering the conference championships at College Park, Md. on March 7 and 8. Tomorrow the grapplers take on VPI here. The following Saturday the Wake Forest squad comes to Chapel Hill to tangle with Sam Barnes' wrestlers. The final meet is Feb. 22 against Duke here.

In their last outing, the varsity took a 26-6 licking from the VPI keydets. In that meet only two Carolina grapplers were able to come off the mat with a victory.

In an effort to win the remaining meets on the schedule, Coach Barnes will bank heavily on the boys who have been most successful in their matches. Perrin Henderson and J. W. Welborn, consistent winners recently, will bolster the lighter-weight classes in the 137 and 147 divisions respectively. FACULTY COUNCIL ABOLISHES CUT SYSTEM

UNC Battles Duke In Home Contest

By BILL KING

The regional television cameras will invade Woollen Gym once again this afternoon and the objects in focus will be the defending Atlantic Coast Conference and national cage champs and currently the hottest team in the ACC.

It's the Carolina Tar Heels versus the Duke Blue Devils and a capacity crowd of over 5,500 is expected to pack every nook and cranny in the Carolina gym for the 2 o'clock tipoff between these ACC and Big Four rivals, meeting for the second time this season.

This is a must game for both clubs. They're currently tied for second place in the conference with identical 6-2 records, trailing N. C. State (7-2) by just one ball game.

The question on everybody's lips is can the Tar Heels put an end to a flaming win streak of six by the Durham contingents. The rampaging Blue Devils shook an early season dilemma by putting the whammy on West Virginia right after exams and since then Hal Bradley's veteran group has been the hottest club in the conference and probably in the South.

Duke Seeks Revenge

This game has all the flavor of a typical Carolina-Duke battle. Possibly the regular season conference title could be hanging in the balance. The Blue Devils should be especially "up" for this one since Frank McGuire's boys ran over them in the semi-finals in the Dixie Classic.

Carolina gets the favorite nod in this one but the bookies can get all the money they want on such a prediction. The Tar Heels have the home court advantage, the Dukers have the advantage of having played six games since exam layoff while the Tar Heels have played but one.

That once was a convincing 115-88 record-tying triumph over South Carolina last Saturday. Carolina had previously beaten Clemson 90-81 right before exams. Duke's last two conquests have also been over South Carolina and Clemson.

Duke's New Look

The difference in this Duke team today and the one which Carolona shellacked in the Classic is the "new look." Bradley has found his starting lineup now, the one which has carried the Blue Devils through six straight. In the Classic, the Blue Devils had no set lineup.

That new look consists of five veterans capable of going the full 40 minutes if necessary. It includes Jim Newcome, Paul Schmidt, Bucky Allen, Bobby Joe Harris and Bob Vernon and each is a stout scoring threat.

Lost To NCS

But Frank McGuire has the talent to counterpunch, although three-fifths of it is first year material. McGuire will send ACC scoring leader Pete Brenan (20.3) and sharpshooting soph Lee Shaffer to the forward posts, lanky Dick Kepley to center and senior Tommy Kearns and sophomore Harvey Salz will man the guard positions.

Sixth man Bobby Cunningham rounds out the nucleus of the big men for the Tar Heels, although there's plenty of talent waiting on the Carolina bench.

The Tar Heels have won all of their televised games in Woollen this season and have lost there but once since 1955. N. C. State beat them in their last game here, 58-57 in an overtime.

Legislature Has Busy Schedule

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

"The next two or three weeks are going to be very busy for us," said Student Legislature Speaker Don Furtado at the end of a bill-filled evening, Thursday.

A bill to abolish the present Honor Councils and set up a single body and a jury of nine was introduced by Al Goldsmith (UP) and Pat Adams (SP).

Parking Lot

Ralph Cummings (SP) presented a bill to set up a student committee" to administer and organize the rules for the Bell Tower Parking Lot upon recommendations of the Traffic Advisory Commission.

The committee will have the power to make changes in the original recommendation of the Traffic Advisory Commission.

The preface of the bill stated "there have been a very small number of volunteer applications for parking permits" for the Bell Tower Lot.

The "whereas" clauses also say "there is an obligation to restore the privilege of possessing an automoble to freshmen and sophomores without a "C" average."

Orientation Bill

Jerry Oppenheimer (UP) introduced a bill increasing the campus orientation committee by two members and at the same time putting both the men's and the women's program under a single chairman.

Formerly the Women's Residence Council has by tradition appointed four members of a women's orientation committee and a chairman.

"This bill is an effort to provide continuity in the operation of the committee." Speaker Furtado commented Friday afternoon.

The chairman of the Campus Orientation Committee may be either male or female. The bill continues the present procedure of including not less than five nor more than seven women on the Campus Orientation Committee.

Brooks' Bill

John Brooks (SP) introduced a bill "to define the term of office and composition" of the Publications Board and the Carolina Forum.

The bill states when Students Legislature representatives will be appointed to these organizations and how long they will serve.

Brooks also presented a bill to appropriate $100. to the Foreign Exchange Student Committee "for the specific purpose of defraying the additional expenses incurred in the Foreign Student Leadership Project . . ."

New Tar Heel Truck

Tog Sanders (UP) introduced a bill to appropriate $125. to the African Medical Trust Fund. Harold O'Tuel (SP) presented a bill to appropriate $1466.13 "for purchase of a 1958, sedan, panel truck for The Daily Tar Heel."

Herman Godwin Named Chairman Of '58-'59 Orientation Committee

Herman Godwin, a junior from Dunn, was chosen yesterday to head the Campus Orientation Committee for next year.

The committee is in charge of orientation of all new students entering UNC. Other members will be announced later following interviews with a bipartisan selections board.

Organization work is to begin immediately, with the new chairman meeting with administration and student body officials.

When the new committee is formed it will supervise orientation for both fall and spring semesters of next year. Freshman, transfer and new graduate men and women are to be included in the complete program.

Godwin was named to the post following interviews by Sonny Evans with several interested candidates.

Evans Comments

In announcing the appointment Evans said, "Herman Godwin is a person whose sincerity, depth of character, honesty and ability cannot be questioned. He possesses the necessary qualifications, experience and leadership to make a fine chairman and understands the importance of orientation in the University community.

"I am certain that he will do an outstanding job in every aspect of providing all new students an experience which they will cherish throughout their college careers."

'A Great Honor'

Commenting on his appointment Godwin said, "I accept the position of campus orientation chairman as a great honor, realizing at the same time the many responsibilities involved.

"It is my sincere desire and greatest objective to present the campus with a well-coordinated, practical orientation program."

The appointee is a former governor of Boys' State in North Carolina and a member of the Order of the Grail and Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity. A Morehead Scholar, he was a member of the Campus Orientation Committee for 1957-58.

In addition to other activities, he is executive secretary of the Carolina Symposium.

Establishes Class Attendance On Student-Instructor Basis

By ANN FRYE

The University Faculty Council yesterday abolished the cut system here, effective today, and placed the matter of class attendance primarily on a student-instructor basis.

The Council at a meeting yesterday passed a report that does away with the excuse system for absences.

Under the Council's ruling, class attendance will be a matter between the student and the instructor, with two exceptions and then attendance becomes a matter between the student and his dean. These exceptions are: when a student misses more classes than the instructor deems advisable.

The elasticity of this ruling provides for instructors' using different attendance policies toward the "A" student and "C" student. This also allows for the deans to take into consideration illness of students when sickness might cause them to miss three consecutive classes.

Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, said yesterday that the Infirmary will supply a list of all sick students as a matter of information to deans of all the schools and colleges.

This new class attendance ruling by the Faculty Council came with little debate and was passed without change or amendment to the report given by a specially appointed committee, under the chairmanship of Dr. James S. Ingram.

Council Report

The report states:

"Regular class attendance is a student obligation, and the student is responsible for all class work, including tests and written work, of all class meetings. No right or privilege exists which permits a student to be absent from any given number of class meetings.

"Instructors will keep attendance records in all classes. If a student misses three consecutive class meetings, or misses more classes than the instructor deems advisable, the instructor will report the facts to the student's academe dean for appropriate action."

Great Step Forward

In a statement from Student Body President Sonny Evans yesterday on the Council's ruling, he said, "I feel that this is a great step forward in the University's history."

Evans, Don Furtado, student body vice president; and George Ragsdale, chairman of Men's Honor Council, had appeared before the Council in January urging the group to consider applying the honor system to the excuse system.

However, the honor system will not be involved in the new class attendance regulations, since the excuse system has been abolished.

In his statement, Evans further said, "If you assume in the first instance that students attend the University to get an education, then you must of necessity assume that forcing him to attend a certain number of classes will not affect his ability or desire to learn in any way.

Not Children

"Students ought to be treated as mature individuals, and not as

The group meets Tuesdays and Thursdays at 1 p.m. in an upstairs room of Lenoir Hall.

According to Ransom Taylor, assistant professor of German, only German is spoken. "People drift in with a tray, a cup of Lenoir Hall's delicious, aromatic Turkish coffee, or just a trusty cigarette, a cheery 'Gruss Gott!' rings out, and conversation is enlivened by one more eager contributor."

Judicial Reorganizatio n Plan Doesn't Assure Ideal Justice

Several points about the Honor Council proposal submitted to the Legislature Thursday night need to be made clear in order that UNC students will understand the new plan.

First, the bill introduced Thursday would eliminate the current court system—the Men's Honor Council and the Women's Honor Council—and replace that system by a single court that would try both men and women offenders of the Honor Code.

It also would have these characteristics:

1. A jury, to determine guilt or innocence, composed of two permanent members and seven others selected from among the student body.

2. A six-member Honor Council Committee, of which three members would be elected in spring elections and three members would be elected in fall elections. Five members of the committee would hear cases involving Honor Code violations, with the sixth member available for service in absence of one of the other members. This Committee would hand down judgment after the verdict of the jury mentioned above.

3. Inclusion of a clause naming the Attorney General or a member of his staff as the person to introduce a case to the Honor Council Committee. He would merely present the case, and not be considered as a prosecutor, as such.

4. A second clause appointing a member of the Attorney General's staff as "counsel" for the defendant before the court, but not to serve as the defense, per se, for the accused.

The new judicial system bill, introduced jointly by the two political parties, is a stride forward for justice in that it consolidates the two courts now in practice into a single body which would try both men and women. Nowhere in our national or state judicial systems do we find a separation of the courts according to sex.

It appears now, however, that an amendment to the bill will be introduced at a later legislative session, calling for continued separation of the courts but operating basically under the single-court plan proposed Thursday night. Thus, there would be two courts like that described above, but separate for men and for women.

Opposition to the single court plan points out that a male student might talk more freely before a court composed of only male members. The presence of women on the court—and that is a provision of the bill—could conceivably curtail testimony by a defendant in the course of a trial. The same argument exists for women defendants.

Whether that charge is true is, at this point, merely speculative. But even if it were, it should not be allowed to supersede the equal administration of justice which would stem from the single court system. Law knows no distinction between men and women. A two-court system would not only bring about that distinction, it would as well recognize it.

There seem to be still other aspects of the judicial system bill which put a squeeze on real justice while attempting to extend equal and fair treatment to all parties concerned. Specifically, that squeeze lies in provisions set forth by the clause describing jury duty for a trial.

The bill makes jury duty highly selective, on the basis of "interest, sincerity of purpose and competence." Jurors would, in effect, be placed on trial before they, in turn, could try another charged with an Honor Code infraction. This practice overlooks the responsibility of every student in what is supposed to be a democratic society. It would deny a segment of the electorate the right to participate in the function of his government.

Of course, the primary purpose underlying this meticulous selection of jurors lies within the mystery and secrecy surrounding the Honor Council trial of students on the campus. The council, to be sure, is interested in the administration of justice, but it also is concerned with protecting the old practice of keeping names of students away from public knowledge.

That brings up the question: can justice ever be realized to the fullest so long as Honor Code trials are shrouded in secrecy? It seems that the student who knew his crimes would be public knowledge would think twice before he committed an infraction of the Honor Code. The current practice gives the offender a certain protection from public accusation which could bolster our entire court system.

If solons are inclined to the new court system, and if they favor a continued secrecy and mystery about the judicial activities, then they have little course but to vote for the selective jury. But if they want to assure the most democratic administration of justice, and let the guilty bear the brunt of their crimes, they will favor the use of all UNC citizens for action on the jury.

At the least, legislators owe it to themselves and to their constituents to study the judicial system bill with more fervor than is the norm. The courts have too long awaited an overhaul that they might better carry out their responsibilities to the student body.

We'd Rather Die Free Of Charge

The House Commerce Committee has voted overwhelmingly to ask the Federal Communications Commission to postpone tryouts for pay-as-you-go TV. The committee's reasons, we feel, are sound enough that the request should be met.

In stating that postponement would give Congress the time to study proposals for pay TV, the committee has in so many words reiterated the claim of free TV forces that the matter should be dealt with by the Congress, and not the administration.

If a decision on whether to grant the tryouts were arrived at by the FCC, claim free TV proponents, it would be coming from the administration while, considering the magnitude of the test's effects, it should be made by the Congressional representatives of the people.

Already thousands of letters are pouring into Congressional offices in Washington from all walks of American life. Primarily, they are united against the pay TV plan. These should be considered in any decision forthcoming from the FCC.

The pay TV proponents have openly stated their economic, profit-wise interest in the pay television industry. "We can," one of them said, "nickel and dime them (the public) to death."

Well, some of us would rather die free of charge.

CORRECTION

A report printed in yesterday's Tar Heel said the Newspaper Research Committee recommended the inclusion of "the chairman of the University Party" on the Selections Board. This should have read: "the chairman of the University Faculty."

The committee did, however, as reported, suggest that chairmen of each of the political parties also be included on the Selections Board.

J.Y.'S JAZZ

Church, Jazz Have Much In Common—II

Last Tuesday I ran a column in which I made a small attempt to fathom the great problem of the relationship between jazz music and the Christian religion. I had reached the point of saying that in order to know anything about the relationship a greater understanding of the elements of jazz would be necessary.

To me, the most important part of jazz is improvisation; it is this which distinguishes jazz any other form of music, and it is this which I feel brings jazz really close to Christianity. Admittedly, the great classical compositions are very close, but jazz too is in the realm of Christianity. Improvisation, at its best, is a spur of the moment expression of the greatest depths of the human soul. Some of the finest improvised solos are monuments of human expression, and of religious fervor. I am unable to play an instrument, and for this I will probably be eternally sorry. It is the ability of the jazz artist to throw his whole soul, body, and feeling into his horn that brings him close to God. From the gospel singer's inspired shout to Dave Brubeck's inspired "St. Louis Blues," the cry is the same—human feeling in note form.

Other than improvisation, there is the spirit that is jazz. This spirit is evident in the New Orleans jazz of Joe Oliver and in Lennie Tristano's explorations of Cloud 13. Spirit is one of the great foundations of Christianity; spirit and faith in the world. I know of few jazz pieces which do not express great faith in man. Even the bluest of the blues has a tingle of faith beyond sorrow, a sign of hope. No blues singer seems to be so unhappy that he or she cannot be restored to the normal, ideally happy life that Christianity advocates.

These are the two mutual aspects of jazz and Christianity which strike me most rapidly. There are many others, but I shall leave them to the reader's own thoughts. I hope that anyone with ideas will write and let us know. It is a fascinating problem.

I haven't reviewed many records recently, so I'd just like to mention a few that you should put a little extra listening time on—June Christy's wonderful "Gone For the Day;" Tony Bennett's swinging "Beat Of My Heart;" Gerry Mulligan's "Mulligan At Storyville"; Bob Brookmeyer's "Traditionalism Revisited;" and the whole Newport Jazz Festival set, ignoring some but giving special attention to the disks by Dizzy Gillespie, Count Basie, Teddy Wilson, Ruby Braff, and the All-Stars.

Capital Punishment Should Die

CURTIS GANS

The arrest of killers Charles Starkeweather and Frank Edward Wetzel brought out the cry for blood from several outraged upright citizens. Included among these, with respect to the Wetzel case, was The Charlotte Observer.

With this outcry for speedy retributive justice from a large number of the citizenry, it becomes necessary to show the opposite view — the view against capital punishment.

There is indeed considerable question of the punitive worth of capital punishment.

In its action, capital punishment removes another human from the face of this earth. This is all it does. This may be very harrowing to the accused, but after it's all over, he surely does not realize the seriousness of the crime nor the value of his punishment, for he is a long way from realizing anything. Moreover, it does not serve the function of a punishment, for a punishment is designed to teach the individual that he should not do his action in the future. Capital punishment makes the person unable to commit the crime again, only because he is unable to do anything either constructive or destructive in the future.

Furthermore, there may be a fairly good case made for the idea that capital punishment does not reduce the incidence of premeditated murders, although yearly it takes a fairly large toll of murderers. The reduction of the population of killers does not seem to prevent new killers from coming up, and it may be well to look to such countries as Russia, where murderers are treated with greatly lightened sentences, but from what is known, there is no higher rate of murders.

As far as redeeming society for the death of one of its upright members, it really costs society the expense of a trial, several days' room and board, and a large quantity of electricity and/or rope. Society gets absolutely no benefit, except for the feeling that this particular individual will not do the crime again. A far better method of insuring society that this person will not commit the crime again would be a sentence of life imprisonment, whereby the criminal would be kept from harming society and at the same time be working off his debt to society in terms of the life lost, as well as in terms of the room and board that the society is giving him. The ideal situation would be to make the criminal work and undergo rehabilitation until that point that society could be as sure of this individual as it could be sure of any other member that the crime would not be repeated.

As far as paying back the family and friends of the murdered, nothing will do that job, for that grief they unfortunately must bear. To kill another man because of his murder would only satisfy the desire for vengeance, which emanates from the hurt and grief, not the calm reasoned ideas, of those affected by the person murdered.

There is doubt to the validity of the idea of retribution in the form of "a life for a life." At first the murderer's life may be considered by society as being of lesser import than the life of one of its upright members. Secondly, to kill another person does not rectify the first killing, and indeed there is some doubt as to the moral rectitude of adding a second death to the first carnage. There is a strong question phrased here: "Can society, or any lesser group hold the power of life and death over any of its members?" The answer to this question should be no, for it is just as wrong for society to deny life to any individual, as it is for an individual to deny life to any other individual. Two wrongs, to use a much used cliche, do not make a right.

Capital punishment is an institution that has been with society a long time. The romance must end.

FROM THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Representative Points Out Pay TV Problems

(Following is an extension of remarks by Hon. John V. Beamer (Ind.) in the House of Representatives, January 30, 1958. His comments about pay TV are self-explanatory.)

MR. BEAMER. Mr. Speaker, on January 7, 1958, I introduced H.R. 9629 which would amend the Communications Act of 1934, so as to prohibit the granting of authority to broadcast subscription TV programs. This bill appropriately was assigned to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of which I am privileged to be a member.

Starting January 14 our committee held open hearings on this very important subject. All the members of the FCC, proponents and opponents, were heard in that order. It is anticipated that the committee will take some action in order to fully inform and protect the public.

Following these hearings of widespread interest, thousands of letters are being received, especially by members of our committee, from the general public that now has access to television to such a great degree. These letters almost unanimously are in opposition to the principle of pay television. The general tone of these letters and protests indicates that people do not feel able to bear the additional costs that would be involved if they are required to pay for television programs. Many of the letters are from families of very moderate means who principal entertainment comes from this modern miracle of this age.

Many of the letters are in great length and others are directly to the point. Included with these letters are many very interesting expressions. I ask under unanimous consent to include one poem which will help to summarize much of the thinking expressed by all of the other letters.

The poem follows:

We pay to see our own TV;
Now that isn't funny.
Did you ever try to stop and think
Just who gets that money?
Imagine a little child
Standing at your door,
Saying—we used to have TV
But we don't have any more.
Because daddy got a layoff
And we have very little bread—
So we can't see a picture now
Before we go to bed.
We have our own televisions
And they surely cost enough;
Now will you kindly tell me
Where do they get that stuff?
The TV service men
Will have to close their door—
There won't be enough TVs left
To work on any more
I bought myself a TV,
As nice as I could get
Now why should I have to pay
To look at my own set?
So I hope that they forget it—
I think it is a crime
The way some folks just sit and plan
Some way to make a dime.

FOR EDUCATION, ENJOYMENT

Symposium Plans Ready

By DAVIS YOUNG

In little more than a month, the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs will present its 1958 program to the campus, state and nation. This year's program gives every indication of living up to the caliber of previous Symposium and Institute for Human Relations presentations dating back to 1927.

What kind of a week will this be for the student body? With consistent attendance at the wide variety of events being presented for your education and enjoyment, you, the student, should gain a clear insight into the theme of the Symposium's program-"survival". This insight will have as its derivation, ideas formulated by many of the outstanding minds in the country that will be here during the week March 16-23.

The Executive Committee of the Symposium feels fortunate to have positive confirmations from fifteen leading figures in such widely diversified fields as politics, finance and science. These will be the main speakers for the week, some appearing in the morning at Carroll Hall and others in the evening at Memorial Hall.

Other events scheduled for the busy week include banquets, seminars and lectures in classrooms, press conferences, fraternity and sorority receptions, and exhibits scattered around the campus.

Publicity will be complete with most state papers as well as campus publications present. Radio and television will also be seen in operation and there is some prospect that a national publication will give some type of a limited general coverage.

The exhibits will include photographs and brochures as well as all published materials compiled by the speakers. For easier interpretation of the week's proceedings there will also be a complete handbook with biographical sketches of the speakers and an explanation of the program.

The basic structure of the program is now complete and final arrangements are being made. By March 16 the General Symposium Committee will have done all within its power to make the presentation of Symposium Week a successful reality.

At this time it will be your turn to show the interest by attending and cooperating in every way to increase the success of the Symposium and to enlarge the Symposium's national prestige. With sincere interest on the part of the public, numerous benefits will be reaped.

Chi Omegas Use Valentine Theme In Presenting Fall Pledge Class

Hearts and cupids set the scene for the annual Chi Omega pledge dance Friday night in the ballroom of the Carolina Inn, where the 1957 pledge class was presented.

Prior to the dance ,the chapter honored its pledges with a banquet at the Inn. At this time the outstanding pledge award was presented to Dee Dee DeVere of Morganton .

The scholarship award was presented to Fran Merry of Augusta, Ga. Vice-President Peggy Funk made the presentations.

Pledge Officers

Pledge Class President Es Bruner of Knoxville, Tenn., with her escort Dick Taylor of Oxford, led the pledges into the ballroom. Other pledge class officers and their escorts were Secretary - Treasurer Doug Kellam, Belle Haven, Va., with Gary Early, Charleston, S. C., and Social Chairman Sally Armfield of Greensboro, with Jimmy Jones, Greensboro.

As the pledges were introduced, they stepped between two white columns adorned with pink cupids. The class was introduced by Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs.

Pink Bouquets

All the pledges wore long white ballgowns and carried sprays of pink carnations. After the presentation the pledges formed the sorority's Greek letters and knelt while the actives sang the traditional Chi Omega song,"My One Chi O Girl."

Decorating the ceiling of the ballroom were 45 valentine mobiles of pink, red and silver hearts of various sizes.

A large red heart and pink cupid formed the backdrop for the bandstand where Jim Crisp and his orchestra played.

Bridge Results Announced; Students Win In Tourney

Bridge Tourney

Math undergraduate major, Malcolm Clark, psychology graduate student, Dan Duke, and Yack Editor, Gene Whitehead, were all winners in the Spring 1958 Mid-Atlantic Regional Bridge Tournament in Winston-Salem last weekend.

Clark and Duke teamed to win their section and to place third overall in the Consolation Session while Whitehead teamed with Duke history graduate student, Narvel Crawford, to win second place in their section of the Consolation Session.

Public Service Fellowships Being Offered

Students interested in public affairs and public service careers who will receive their B. A. in June have been offered an opportunity to appyly for fellowships to study at three different universities. The fellowships grant $1,500 a year plus college fees. Each fellowship approximates $1,950 in total value.

Beginning this June fellows will serve with a public agency such as TVA or a department in a city or state government. In the 1958-59 school session they will take graduate courses at the universities of Alabama, Tennessee, and Kentucky.

Completion of the twelve months training period entitles fellows to a certificate in public administration. They can be awarded a masters degree at either of the three universities upon completing a thesis and passing examinations.

For eligibility requirements and other information students should write the educational director, Southern Regional Training Program in Public Administration, University of Alabama, University, Alabama. The deadline for submitting applications is March 10.

Introductory Hebrew Course Offered By Correspondence

An interesting opportunity to learn introductory Hebrew by correspondence, with four credits available to students at UNC who get a "C" or better in the course, is now offered by the University of Wisconsin.

The student is allowed to proceed at his own rate, finishing the course, if he elects, in 5, 10, or 18 months.

If as many as 10 students enroll for the course from UNC, Rabbi Rosenzweig, director of the Hillel Foundation at UNC has been authorized to act as either consultant or tutor to this class.

If there are students or others who are interested in learning Hebrew but not for credit, Hillel will organize a class, with charge only for text, plus a nominal registration fee.

Neville Rubin, South African student leader, explained how the students of the University could help in his university's fight against segregation enforced by the government.

He said that letters from student communities all over the world had been helpful in the fight to keep the two integrated universities in South Africa from being segregated.

The government has postponed for 18 months a move to segregate his university.

He said students could help by giving money for scholarships for non-white doctors. Any student who enters before the ban is declared can remain until he completes his work.

Therefore, the university will be integrated for six years after segregation has been put into effect.

There are only 60 African doctors for nine million non-whites. Rubin also said that the facilities for the Negroes were not equal to those for the whites.

"Mental Lift" Is Question This Afternoon

An important question will be answered in Woollen Gym this afternoon. It concerns just how much of a mental lift a basketball team can receive from an outstanding feat.

The team is Duke. The feat was the Blue Devil's great victory over West Virginia in Durham a few weeks back. Since that night when the Devils knocked off the previously unbeaten Mounties from the hills of West Virginia, they have been a different ball club entirely.

Hal Bradley's club was floundering before the West Va. game. Something was definitely wrong because the Blue Devils were rich in veteran material. Then Bradley made a few lineup changes, the Devils flittered by the Mounties and there's been no stopping them since.

This afternoon, Carolina will attempt to puncture that little white cloud upon which the boys from Methodist Flats have been floating since West Virginia. This is going to be the biggest test since that game for Duke and it remains to be seen how Bradley's boys will react.

Three Little Men In Backcourt

The previously mentioned lineup change by Bradley was simple enough. He took three little men, all guards, but full of scoring punch and put them in together. Then he put two big men up under the basket and immediately he had a racehorse ball club that could play with the best of them.

Thus, you'll see three men in the backcourt for Duke today. Bucky Allen, Bob Vernon and Bobby Joe Harris are the boys. And tending those goals will be big Jim Newcome and Paul Schmidt. You can look for Vernon to go the corners occasionally since his deadly jump shot has been effective from there in the past few games.

Carolina had better be prepared to run because the Dukes are plenty fast. They move that ball around without any hesitation and Newcome is plenty good in that pivot. Frank McGuire has seen the Devils in action seven times this season, however, and you can bet your sweet life he's got something good cooked up to slow down the Blue Devils.

Should Be Racehorse Battle

Should Duke open up a running attack, McGuire will probably sub Bobby Cunningham for Dick Kepley early. With Bobby, Tommy Kearns, Pete Brennan, Harvey Salz and Lee Shaffer in there the Tar Heels should be able to move right along with their old rivals.

Possession tactics are not predicted. Should either or both of the two clubs decide to hold the ball, a few lineup shifts might be in order. But that type ball is very doubtful today. In all probability you'll see plenty of fast action. If so, look for Kearns to have himself a real good afternoon.

We predict Carolina will win by about three. The Tar Heels have been at their scoring best in their last two games. Duke is tired after a hard grind over the past week; the Chapel Hillians have had a full week's rest, if practice everyday can be considered rest. In any event, look for a real ding-dong battle.

Pro Scores Go Up, College Scores Go Down

It's still basketball but pretty soon you wont be able to tell it. We're speaking of college versus professional basketball and brother there is a difference.

The two levels of the hardwood game are becoming more and more dissimilar. Besides being a lot rougher, professional ball has put the emphasis on scoring, while college ball seems to favor the descending trend in scoring.

For evidence, the executive committee of the National Basketball Committee has recently recommended a proposal to "eliminate all free throws for a common foul until after the offending team has committed six (for college) personal fouls in each half." (At present, a single free throw is given until after 6 personals, after which a bonus shot is awarded).

The proposal is contained in a questionnaire to all college basketball coaches. The committee will weigh the results in its meeting in Louisville, Ky. March 23-24.

The idea might have its virtues. Seems to us, however, that they're taking the "basket" out of basketball. We favor the big scores and this proposal doesn't seem like a step in the right direction. We'd like to see the 30 seconds rule enacted in college ball; then the above plan wouldn't make as much difference.

Swimmers Meet With Fla. Today

By Mac Mahaffy

Carolina's undefeated swim team gets its first real competition this afternoon immediately following the basketball game, it meets the University of Florida team. The swimmers have had relatively little trouble in racking up their nine victories.

The team's attack will be spearheaded by All-American co-captain Bill Roth. Roth, who was one of the top ten sprinters in the country last year, will swim the 50 freestyle and the freestyle relay. With him will be All-American Bill Zickgraf, and All-American co-captain Walt Rose. These two have been undefeated in the freestyle events this year.

Distance man and All-American Tony Schiffman will swim the 220 and 440 freestyles. Tony has turned in some of the best times in the country this year.

Paul Wachendorfer, Carolina's sophomore ace, will test his ability against a former Carolina star, Phil Drake. Drake, who won the Nationals in 1955 for UNC, will give Wachendorfer his best race for the season.

Ned Meekins and Pete Reynolds, the always competent, ready divers will do the board work. Add to these stars the depth offered by juniors Jeff Zwicker and Rob Turner, and senior Kelley Manass, along with the up-and-coming Carolina backstroker, Brent Nash, and you have a team Florida will find tough to handle.

The Florida team is on a tour which included meets with Maryland and West Point, and should be in shape to give Coach Pat Earey's mermen a run for their money.

OPPOSING GUARDS: Carolina guard Harvey Salz (left) and Duke's Bucky Allen will be in the starting lineup this afternoon as the two old rivals collide for the second time this season. Both are outstanding backcourt men.

Tar Heel Runners At VPI This Afternoon

By DAVE WIBLE

Carolina's tracksters have traveled to Lexington, Virginia, where they will participate in the VMI Relays, to the held there this afternoon.

This is the third year that Carolina has sent a team to this indoor affair which will feature teams from V.M.I., Virginia, Maryland, Duke, State, and William and Mary. However, no team champion is decided, just individual winners in each event.

Carolina will have entries in all of the distance relays, the hurdle relays, the 2-mile run, and in two field events.

Relay Entries

In the 2-mile relay the Tar Heels will run Everett Whatley, Cowles Liipfert, Howard Kahn, and Neil Chappell. This quartet plus Doug Henderson, Frank Sirianni, Alex Coffin, and John Fox will make up a 4-mile relay team. Coach Joe Hilton will use a combination of these runners to make up a distance and a sprint medley relay team.

Tar Heel hurdlers Lyndon Debord, Ward Sims, Lou Glascock and Charlie Sowers will joint forces for a shuttle relay team and they will also run individually in the 60-yard high hurdle event.

Carolina's Dave Scurlock has flown to New York where he will compete in the Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden tonight.

Scurlock, who made his debut on the big-meet boards at Boston last Saturday by winning the Boston AA 1000-yard run, will attempt to turn the trick again tonight—this time in the 880.

Carolina track coach Dale Ranson, who made the trip with Scurlock believes his star pupil will be in better shape tonight than he was at Boston. On leaving, neither knew whether or not 880 indoor record holder Arnie Sowell would be entered tonight. Should Sowell not make it, the man for Scurlock to watch will probably be Tom Carroll, a Yale University freshman. Carroll, record holder of the high school 880 mark, finished second to Scurlock at Boston.

Matmen Challenge VPI

By ELIOTT COOPER

Carolina's varsity and freshman wrestling teams will be the definite underdogs tonight when they tangle with the grapplers from Virginia Polytechnic Institute in Woollen Gym.

Coach Sam Barnes' varsity will be trying to end the Gobblers dual-meet winning streak of twenty-six straight matches extending over a four year period.

In an attempt to halt the Gobbler victory strong, Coach Barnes will start a lineup composed of mat veterans. Curt Champlin, Henry Rhyne, Perrin Henderson, and J. W. Welborn will wrestle the four lighter-weight bouts. Team captain Kenny Hoke will be at 157 followed by either Jack Gray or David Atkinson at 167. The 177 match will be wrestled by Gray or Atkinson depending on who is selected to go into the 167 bout. Rob Boyette will wrestle heavyweight.

After tonight's match the wrestlers will have two weeks to prepare for the Duke meet on February 22.

The freshmen, idle yesterday due to the cancelation of the Pfeiffer meet, will take on the VPI frosh at 7:30 prior to the varsity match.

Tar Babies Meet Blue Imps

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Babies will be out for revenge here this afternoon as they try for the third time this season to knock off the powerful Duke Blue Imps.

Duke has previously beaten the frosh twice: 71-68 in the second game of the season, and 80-55 last week.

The Tar Babies finally snapped their three-games losing streak Thursday night as they trounced Atlantic Christian College jayvees 85-71. The freshmen's season slate now reads nine wins and four losses. The four setbacks came only at the hands of Duke and State.

Lou Brown scored the highest number of points in a single game for any Tar Baby this season against ACC when he poured in 33 to lead the attach. Hugh Donahue added 29. The Christians kept it close in the initial half, but Carolina roared back in the second stanza, using their lightning fast-break to full advantage.

Carolina fans who stick around after the varsity tilt will see plenty of action, as Duke fields one of the best freshman teams in the ACC and the Tar Babies' season record is a good indication of their progress on the hardwood.

Duke's big threat to opponents is towering center Jack Kistler. The only trouble the Imps have had this season has been with the flashy State College Wolflets, who have also beaten Carolina twice. The last State-Duke frosh battle saw the Wolflets pull a tight one out of the fire in overtime.

Coach Ken Rosemond has had his troubles since exams. Several boys have dropped off the squad due to scholastic troubles and spring football practice, including high scoring Doug Moe.

N. Y. SCHOOLS

NEW YORK, Feb. 8 (AP) — The problem of what to do with 644 or more trouble-making pupils ousted from public schools confronted city officials today.

No one had come up with a solution that would keep them from remaining idle at home or roaming the streets, but state and city officials were hoping for an answer next week.

The mass suspensions yesterday stirred a chorus of protests from parent and other organizations, accompanied by a demand for a legislative investigation of the city school system.

The pupils were suspended yesterday in a Board of Education crackdown on juvenile delinquency. The 644 total was incomplete, as some schools had not reported their figures. There was no breakdown of the figures by race or sex.

ATLAS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Feb. 8 (AP)—Did interference by a radio signal cause destruction of the two million dollar Atlas Intercontinental Ballistic Missile (ICBM) in flight?

That was a remote possibility explored today by the Air Force and the manufacturer of the 70-foot-tall missile which exploded into what observers said was "nothing" less than four minutes after launching yesterday.

Instruments aboard the giant missile sent back data recorded on thousands of feet of tape and this might provide clues as to the cause of the explosion.

Blue Devils Down Carolina, 91-75 For Seventh Straight Cage Victory

Durham Club Pulls Away In 2nd Half

By BILL KING

Duke's racehorse Blue Devils showed a large regional television audience and 5,500 fans in Woollen Gym that their recent upsurge in the Atlantic Coast Conference was no fluke by handing Frank McGuire's Carolina Tar Heels a 91-75 defeat yesterday.

A victory was even more deserved because the Devils did it the hard way, playing the last seven and a half minutes without their two big men Jim Newcome and Paul Schmidt who fouled out within a minute of each other, leaving the chores to their fine backcourt men Bucky Allen, Bobby Joe Harris and Bob Vernon plus three larger subs.

Nor did the Devils falter in those waning minutes. In fact, they continued to run over the Tar Heels as Bob Lakata, Hayes Clements and Jerry Robertson alternated with the little men to keep the Duke machine running along with maximum efficency. It was the seventh straight win for Duke.

Third UNC Loss

It was conference victory number seven for the Devils against two losses. For Carolina it was defeat number three against six wins in ACC play. The victory moved Duke momentarily into a tie with N. C. State for the league lead, depending on the State-South Carolina game last night. Duke is now 12-5 for the season; Carolina is 13-4. It was the second straight home loss for the Tar Heels after 24 straight victories. State beat Carolina in the last Woollen Gym contest.

The Tar Heels suffered "five fouls" losses late in the contest as Bobby Cunningham, Pete Brennan and Harvey Salz all went out but the damage had been done by that time and Duke was the undisputed victor of this speedy Big Four clash.

Duke made it quite evident that it meant business when Bob Vernon hit a jump shot after 13 seconds of the second half to put Duke ahead, 37-36. A lead that had changed hands no less than ten times in the first half was thus pulmelled as the Durham visitors never relinquished the advantage again.

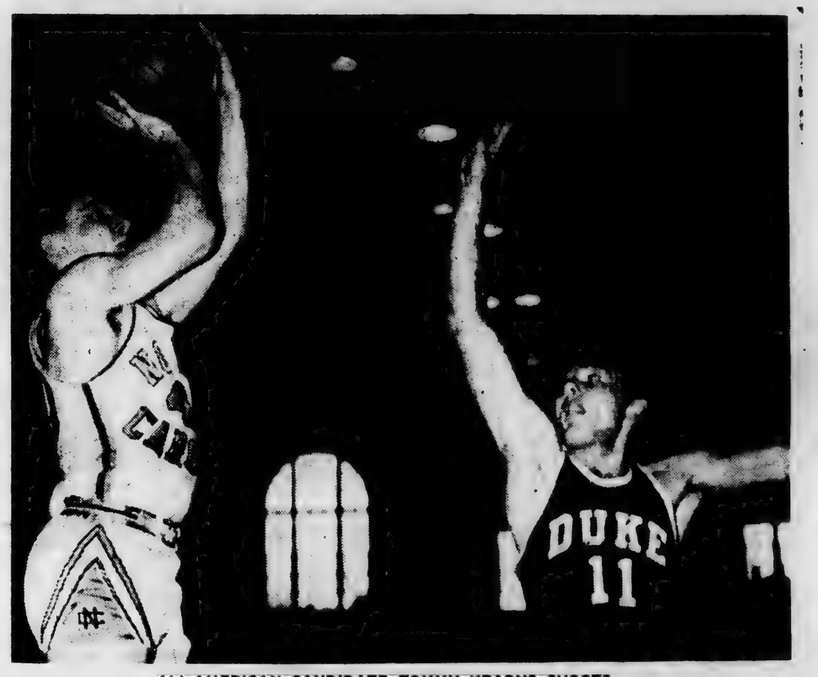
Carolina Outscored

For the next few minutes Duke was as hot as Carolina was cold, and considering a late Duke rally in the first half, the Devils actually outscored the Tar Heels 20-4 in just a matter of a few minutes.

Newcome was the big man in the second half assault as he tallied 12 points before fouling out with 7:06 left. Schmidt had previously fouled out at the 8:11 mark after scoring six points in the second period.

Duke managed to maintain a lead of at least five points the rest of the way, though the Tar Heels never stopped fighting. Everytime Carolina would rally to close the gap a little, the Blue Devils would race right back on one of their frequent hot streaks.

Short Rally



After Newcome and Schmidt left, the Tar Heels moved the count to 64-59 on a field goal and free throw by Pete Brennan but Duke quickly pulled away again, building a 71-61 lead in the minute and a half.

McGuire played the final 1:15 with

Kappa Expects 150 At First Rush Party

Over 150 coeds are expected to attend the first party of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority's rush program Monday night in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Building.

Kappa is the seventh and newest sorority to begin colonization of a chapter at Carolina. The actual installation of the chapter will be held in the fall.

Invitations to the first party were sent out to girls who participated in the fall, 1957, rush program and to new students here this semester.

Two Other Parties

After Monday night's party (from 7:30 to 9 o'clock), two other parties have been planned for rushees. Invitations to the second and third parties will be delivered to each girl's room by Stray Greeks. The bids will be sent out shortly after the third party.

The second party will be held in Smith parlour Wednesday night, and the third party has been scheduled for Sunday night, Feb. 16.

At a luncheon meeting yesterday of Kappa Kappa Gamma Chapters in this area, details were decided for conducting the three parties. Alumnae and Kappa members from Duke and the four members here will be present at all the parties.

Colonizing Details

Mrs. Frank Alexander, national director of chapters, will discuss some of the details involved in colonizing a chapter here, at the first party tomorrow night.

Some of the problems which are being considered at the present time include purchase of a house for the sorority and the immediate problem of a place for social events for pledges after this week.

Any coed who did not receive an invitation to the first party and wishes to attend may do so by merely going to the party and giving her name at the door.

Appropriate dress for the occasion has been designated as dressy woolen dresses and heels.

Duo-Harpists Join Soprano For Petite Musicale Tonight

Ethel Casey, soprano from Raleigh, assisted by Emily Kellam and Suzann Davids, local duo-harpists, are planning a group of Spanish numbers for tonight's Petites Musicales.

The program, first in the series for the second semester, will begin at 8 o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

Miss Casey is to present seven popular Spanish songs by Manuel DeFalla. The duo-harpists will perform Bach's Sixth French Suite, Rameau's "La Joyeuse," and Granado's Spanish Dance No. Five, in addition to providing accompaniment for the soloist.

Tonight's recital, as the others in the series, is sponsored by GMAB and is open to the public without charge.

The next program of Petites Musicales will feature Paul Doktor, violinist, and Raphael Puyana, harpsichordist. It is planned for Wednesday, March 5, in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m.

Horse Is Dead, Three Injured In Accidents

A horse (or mule) is dead and three Carolina students were injured as a result of two automobile accidents early Saturday morning.

Howard McAllister, sophomore from Maiden, who was injured in the car-horse (or mule) accident, said the animal just came out in front of the car and couldn't avoid getting hit.

[illegible] said the animal's death although this fact has not been confirmed by the proper authorities. Yesterday afternoon, the owner of the horse had not been located.

McAllister was treated at the Infirmary for an eye injury and released yesterday.

Two other occupants of the car, Paul White from Hickory and Willie Jones from Morganton, were not injured.

The accident occurred around 4 a.m. Saturday on Highway 70, five miles outside Burlington.

In a one-car accident around 3 a.m. Saturday, Stuart Butler, freshman from Charlotte, sustained a fractured jaw and lacerations. He was in Memorial hospital yesterday in what his doctor described as a "good" condition.

The Butler accident occurred on Highway 86, three miles from Chapel Hill, when the car went off the side of the road and overturned. It is believed that Butler apparently went to sleep before the accident occurred.

CAGE BRIEFS

Carolina coach Frank McGuire called the tremendous Duke spurt at the end of the first half and in the first few minutes of the second, "one of the mysteries of the game." Carolina was outscored 20-4 in just a matter of minutes during that period.

McGuire thinks Duke is a much better ball club now because "they have that veteran starting lineup and it makes them real solid."

The Tar Heel chieftian thought Duke did some spectular shooting. He also remarked that "they were hard to press because they have three very fine dribblers" (Harris, Allen and Vernon).

Duke mentor Hal Bradley lauded his club for "their scrap and hustle. It was a nice feeling to win; it makes the game worth while again. We made many mistakes in the first half and had to change the offense."

"Today's game was just opposite from the Classic," Bradley continued, "this time we had the lead and they had to come back. We caught up with a man to man defense but shifted to the zone when Kepley (Dick) came back in."

New Cut Rule 'Probably' Strikes Out 75 Per Cent Attendance Regulation

By ANN FRYE

The new class attendance ruling abolishing the cut system here probably supersedes the 75 per cent attendance regulation as stated in the University catalogue.

Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, said yesterday that although there may be differences of opinion concerning the 75 per cent rule, it seems that this ruling no longer applies to attendance regulations.

The Faculty Council in a meeting Friday afternoon passed a new attendance ruling abolishing the cut system, but the ruling did not include any mention of the 75 per cent regulation.

Accreditation Standards

A general belief on campus was that the University had been required to incorporate the 75 per cent attendance rule in its class attendance regulations so as to meet accreditation standards of a university and college association.

Members of the special committee, that submitted the report on class attendance to the Faculty Council, said that so far as they could find, the 75 per cent attendance had nothing to do with the accreditation of the University.

Concerning the former policy of double cuts taken in classes before and after holidays, Dean Godfrey said there is no such thing as a double cut under the newly-adopted system, since cuts have been abolished.

This new ruling voted by the Faculty Council places attendance primarily on a student-instructor basis. The report says in part; "If a student misses three consecutive class meetings, or misses more classes than the instructor deems advisable, the instructor will report the facts to the student's academic dean for appropriate action."

Dean's List

In another area of interest affected by the new ruling, the "dean's list" will carry no significance in so far as attendance privileges are concerned.

In the last two decades of the University's history when various systems of class attendance have been tried, no system was ever placed so strictly on an instructor-student basis ,and no system ever allowed for more than 25 per cent cutting of classes.

The flexibility of this new ruling allows instructors to deal differently with "A" students and "C" students in attendance requirements. Since the Infirmary will supply lists of sick students to all deans, the deans may take such information into consideration in dealing with students.

One Dissenting Vote

When the special faculty committee submitted the class attendance report for action to the Faculty Council Friday, there was little discussion before the report was passed without any amendment. In the voice vote taken, there was but one dissenting vote.

Around 75 members of the Council were present for Friday's meeting. The Council is composed of 36 ex-officio members, 60 elected members and around 30 other members from standing committees.

Enrollment Drops 316 This Term

Enrollment for the spring semester at the University of North Carolina is 6,722 students, according to a report released yesterday by the University Records Office. The enrollment for the fall semester was 7,038.

In addition to this figure there are 110 graduate students in Public Health, 45 in Library Science and 51 in Social Work.

The report also showed that of the total enrollment 5,275 students (78.4 per cent) are from North Carolina.

The number of coeds now enrolled is 1,261; while the number of males enrolled is 5,461. The ratio of male to female students is slightly larger than five to one.

Foreign students enrolled number 84 from 40 foreign countries and U. S. possessions. Canada has the largest representation with seven students. There are six students from India and Egypt and five from Thailand.

Enrollments in the schools and colleges here are:

SP To Discuss Honor Council At Meeting

Student leaders will discuss the proposed revisions in the Honor Councils at the Student Party meeting Monday, 7:30 p.m., in Graham Memorial at Roland Parker Lounges 1and 2.

Sonny Hallford, attorney general of the student body, George Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, and Paddy Wall a member of the Women's Honor Council, will be at the meeting.

"I would like to present a point of view and to explain the new proposal to the best of my ability and to allow questions which are pertinent to the understanding of the bill," commented Sonny Hallford.

There is one Student Legislature seat vacant in Dorm Men's H which will be filled at this meeting. The party will also elect a new sergeant-at-arms.

Around 200 notices have been sent to students asking them to attend SP Chairman Pat Adams said.

New Cut Regulations Place Responsibility On Students

The University Faculty Council is to be commened for its far-sighted action in abolishing the cut system Friday. At the same time, however, warning is in order for students who might forget that learning begins in the classroom.

Under the Council's action, class attendance now is a matter between the student and the instructor. In some cases stringent requirements will continue to exist; in others, instructors will be more lenient in class attendance regulations.

The elasticity of the new plan, while recognizing students as mature individuals who should not be forced to learn, could result in the cancerous ruination of those who fail to discipline themselves in class attendance. For that reason a new responsibility has been thrust upon the student.

In order that students can realize the education for which they are paying, it becomes paramount that they not exploit the new system to such an extent that the classroom becomes only a place for tests and examinations. It must continue to exist as the backbone of the University through its presentation of material necessary to an education.

At the same time, however, a plea is in order to instructors to put into action the elasticity which the new system provides. Particularly as concerns the honor student should they apply the new system, expanding leniency as concerns class attendance.

In approaching regulations instructors should take into consideration the character of a University education, paid dearly for by students whose privilege it is to capitalize on their investment or to let it escape unused. That privilege demands a system free of stringent regulations.

Student Body President Sonny Evans stated it clearly and wisely when he said:

"Students ought to be treated as mature individuals, and not as children in whom you can inject knowledge by simply sitting him in a classroom by regulations."

Too, the University should be treated as a mature institution where education is ultimately tested in the classroom—the very place where it begins, passes through adolescence and finally matures for the student who is consistently present.

Car Ownership Regulations Should Soon Get The 'Axe'

A bill presented to the Legislature by Ralph Cummings (SP) Thursday night points out that "there is an obligation to restore the privilege of possessing an automobile to freshmen and sophomores without a 'C' average."

Indeed, there is. If not a moral one, there at least seems to exist a legal obligation to erase the outright discrimination against first and second year students at the University who, because of their grades and classes, cannot have cars at UNC.

The current regulations base ownership of vehicles at the University on grades and year. Combined, these determine who can and who cannot use state property in the same manner as is enjoyed by their fellows of higher marks and further education.

Such regulations, we feel, are in violation of state law. He who pays his automobile tax and contributes to the upkeep of the highway system through further taxes on gasoline, should not be discriminated against in the use of an automobile anywhere in North Carolina.

We have eliminated racial discrimination. All students at the University are virtually equal in the many phases of campus life. Let us now extend this equality by erasing this most base of the continuing discriminations at UNC.

Godwin's Choice Is Good For UNC

Student Government has assured itself a highly successful orientation program in selecting Herman Godwin, junior from Dunn, to head the Orientation Committee for 1958-59.

Godwin, a Morehead Scholar with a fine record of extracurricular participation in his three years at the University, combines the unbounded energy and fine character needed for the job.

We wish him the best of luck in carrying out the program for the new year. That program will surely reflect the ability of the man who is to head it.

GUEST EDITORIAL

Foreign Language

Marion B. Folsom, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, has made public a report revealing the disturbing fact that the United States is probably weaker in foreign language study than any other large nation. Only some 15 per cent of our high school and college students study any foreign language, and of the twenty-four major tongues, each spoken by more than 20,000,000 people, only Spanish and French are studied to any extent in our schools and colleges. Languages such as Chinese, Arabic, Hindi and Indonesian are rarely taught at all. Particularly significant is the fact that while approximately 10,000,000 Russians are busy studying English, only some 8,000 Americans are studying Russian.

Fortunately, the United States Education Office is planning to support foreign-language institutes for teachers and provide training centers to teach the languages now seldom taught here. However, unless the American people generally, and our students in particular, awaken to the danger inherent in our linguistic ignorance, efforts to improve the situation will fall far shot of success. In a world growing ever smaller it is clear that inability to communicate with other people is a major weakness.—The New York Times.

LETTER TO EDITOR

Old Cut System Said Incentive To UNC Scandal

Why in the name of hell doesn't the University of North Carolina grow up? Oh, the great scandal, isn't it just awful that a student would actually purchase a false excuse and present it to his instructor for his fourth absence to prevent failing the course? However, I rather think that the student was simply a very determined person—determined to cut a class that wasn't worth attending.

Has it ever occurred to the University that its attendance regulations are simply childish. There comes a time when a person must learn to handle his own affairs without being told what to do by some big brother over his shoulder. He must learn to think for himself and to take care of himself. By the time a person reaches the college level he should have learned this. If he hasn't it is the colleges job to teach him "to go it alone."

The point is that a student shouldn't have to be told to go to classes a certain amount of times or that he cannot have but so many cuts. If he's a bright boy he'll never make that mistake again, but if he's so stupid that he doesn't know any better let him fail again and again until he drops out of college. There is no sense in wasting time with him.

Every student will agree that it is a waste of time to attend some classes. The usual explanation for this is that the instructor is a "drone," and though he may be trying to get the material across, he is only succeeding in putting the class to sleep. I'd rather stay in bed and sleep and read the book when quiz time rolls around, because his quiz will come straight from the book.

The University, with its high-schoolish regulations, has brought this so-called fraudulent excuse "scandal" down on their own necks. I'm sure that there would be no more "scandals" of this type if the University would change the attendance regulations so that all students could have unlimited cuts. There would be several advantages in having an unlimited cut system. They are:

1. It would make the student think and act on his own initiative.

2. It would do away with roll-calling, thus saving a lot of valuable time.

3. It would prevent future fraudulent excuse "scandals."

4. It would force the instructor to prepare and present better lectures, that is, if he wants a good class attendance.

Something has to be done or we may have more "scandals." Heaven forbid!

(Editor's Note: The new cut system announced by the Faculty Council Saturday should erase Mr. Bratten's discontent for the cut system described above.)

Use Of Alcohol Up To Individual

To the Editor:

I couldn't help but see that Rev. Robert M. Hardee, pastor of the First Methodist Church in Troutman, N. C. is a little distorted in his thinking. It appears to me that he is misinformed or very narrow-minded in regards to liquor or other alcoholic beverages.

Rev. Hardee states that the North Carolina liquor stores were brought into existence because people became mightily interested in the revenue that it would bring this state. How about the "moonshiners" sir? Is the state of N. C. receiving much revenue from them? It appears to me that if N. C. were an entirely wet state, then the boot-legger would lose out a lot and also more revenue would be coming into the state which could be used for many good purposes. I imagine that much money is spent in combating the illegal whiskey trade.

Alcohol produces alcoholics, but aren't there many reasons why a person turns to alcohol as an excape from his problems? It appears to me that only the weak-willed people suffer from the evils of alcohol. A strong person can drink in moderation and never become the victim of alcoholism. People do drink for a purpose. The weak people drink as a means to excape from reality or their problems; the strong people drink to relax some of their tensions from a hard days' work. It is more for their physical needs rather than for their mental needs. Strong people also drink for social reasons, and this to me seems okay as long as they do it in moderation.

Being a preacher I am sure that you are aware of the fact that Christ turned the water into wine at the wedding feast. If Christ were a total abstainer from alcohol, would he have changed the water into something else? Perhaps milk or ice cream would have been enjoyed back in those days like they are today. The majority of the people who drink alcoholic beverages also drink milk and eat ice cream. And soft drinks are not the enemy of liquor. In fact, soft drinks are its friend—they make excellent chasers.

Mr. Hardee, if you would spend as much time telling people about the love of Jesus as you do telling them about the evils of alcohol, you would certainly help those poor unfortunates who are not strong enough to help themselves. Why not accent the positive from now on and eliminate the negative?

Rev. Hardee, moderation is the answer to healthful living for body mind and soul. You can overdo anything, even reading of your Bible. When a person overdoes anything he becomes a fanatic and no one likes a fanatic. Christ was not a fanatic—he was the most normal person that ever lived. He is perfection personified. And we all should look into Him, the author and finisher of our faith. I may be my brother's keeper, but I can't be responsible for his actions of weakness. He alone is responsible for himself. If I worried what "everyone would say about me if I did this or that, then I wouldn't be able to live my own life." Everyone has a free will and they can do what they please. No one has a right to put a halter on one's free will. It is the most precious of my freedoms. Our free will is a gift from God, and it's up to us how we use it. We can use it for good or for evil. As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

A Play: What Really Do Commies Believe?

By BARRY WINSTON

(As the curtain rises, we see a solitary figure seated at a desk. His brow is furrowed in concentration as he reads a book spread before him. The only other furniture in the room consists of another desk and chair, and two rather uncomfortable looking bunk-type beds. The walls are nearly covered with pictures, most of them being landscapes clipped from Playboy and Nugget.)

JOT: Hey, Al, listen to this. It's a riot, man!

(At this point, it becomes obvious that there is another person in the room. Al, Joe's roommate, lifts himself up on one elbow and lies, waiting attentively, on the bed down-stage right.)

AL: I'm listenin'.

JOE: Well, there's this traveling salesman, see? And he's driving down this old country road, and his car breaks down. So he gets out and starts walkin' and pretty soon he comes to this farmhouse and he decides that he'll see if they'll put him up for the night. So he walks up to the front door and knocks, and the farmer answers and the salesman tells him about his car, and asks him can he spend the night there. Well, the farmer scratches his chin for a minute and then says "O.K., sonny, I guess we can give you a place to sleep tonight, but you'll have to sleep with . . . . .

(There is a knock at the door, up-stage left.)

JOE: So come on in. It ain't locked!

(The door opens, and a man takes a few tentative steps into the room. His appearance indicates that he is reasonably well-to-do and probably about fifty years old.)

STRANGER: How do you do. My name is Michael—A. Michael. My firm is conducting a survey and I wonder if you would mind answering a few questions?

JOE: Sure! Pull up a chair, Mike old boy, and fire away. Me and my roomie here'll be glad to help you out.

MIKE: First of all I'd like to know what you think.

AL: Think about what?

MIKE: Just what you think, that's all. Not what you think about anything particular. Just what you think about.

JOE: Man, what are you talkin' about? What kind a question is that? "What do we think about?" What do we think about WHAT?

MIKE: No, no. I' m afraid you don't understand. I don't want your opinion on any specific topic. I'd just like to know what sort of thing you think about when you're just sitting around thinking. You do think, don't you?

AL: Sure we think! We think all the time, don't we, Joe? But we think about all sorts of different things. I mean, where do you want us start? There's so many things I don't know where to begin.

MIKE: In that case, maybe you'd better restrict it to the things you think about most. Just start anywhere you please.

JOE: Well, let's see . . . .if we're going to be honest about it, I guess one of the first things would be sex. And then there's movies, and basketball, and TV, and dates, and classes. . . .

AL: Aw, knock it off, you jerk! The old boy's got a job to do, and he doesn't need any of that jazz. Let me think a minute, Pops . . . .let's see . . . hmmm . . . there's all sorts of things . . .politics . . .and, ummm . . . music . . .and . . .all sorts of things!

MIKE: Well, what about the area of politics? What are some of the things that go through your mind when you're thinking about politics?

AL: Mmmm . . .well . . .the usual stuff, You know—foreign policy, an' atom bombs, n' the Middle East, n' Communism . . .all that sort of stuff.

MIKE: Could you be a little more specific about any of those things? For instance, precisely what do you think about Communism? What do you know about it, and how do you feel about what you know?

JOE: Yeah, tell us everything you know, man, and I'll hold my breath.

AL: (ignoring his roommate) Communism, huh? Well, let's see . . .It's the kind of government that the Russians have got. . .and they don't believe in free enterprise or private property . . .they think everything should belong to the state, or something like that . . .and that guy—what's-his-name—Marx . . . he made the whole thing up . . .I guess he was a pretty smart cat.

MIKE: But do you have any idea how they plan to put their ideas into effect?

JOE: What difference does that make, anyhow? It's just another political party. Besides, ain't you heard? We got co-existence now. No sweat. They'll tend to their knittin', and we'll tend to ours.

MIKE: I'm afraid that's not the case. But I have to leave, now. Maybe you'd like to read this. (puts book on desk and exits)

JOE: Well! He sure took off all of a sudden. What's that junk he left on your desk?

AL: Just some quotations from a few big-wig Commies. Here's one from that guy, "We must . . . be ready for any and every sacrifice, and even if necessary, to practice trickery, to employ cunning, and to resort to illegal methods, to sometimes even overlook or conceal the truth. . ." Here's another one by him: ". .the time has fully matured when it is absolutely necessary for every Communist Party systematically to combine legal with illegal work, legal with illegal orgmization. . ."

JOE: Eh, so what? Like I was sayin', the farmer scratches his chin for a minute, and then he says to the salesman. . .

substitutes and the Duke lead mounted. Salz was the last to foul out with 1:16 to go.

Salz and Brennan paced the Carolina attack with 19 and 18 points respectively. Tommy Kearn's 15 was good for third and Lee Shaffer had 12. High man for Duke was Newcome with 21.

Carolina made 24 of 74 shots from the floor for a 32.4 percentage. Duke hit 29 of 64 for a 45.3 mark. Carolina had 27 of 43 foul shots (62.8) and Duke had 33 of 43 (76.8). The Blue Devils got the rebound advantage, 58 to 53.

First Half

The lead see-sawed back and forth with monotonous regularity in the first half. The Tar Heels were able to gain a substantial lead toward the latter part of the half, but a tremendous Duke rally in the last three and a half minutes closed a nine-point gap to the 36-35 halftime margin.

After five minutes of the first stanza the lead had changed hands three times and it sashayed seven more times before intermission.

It was largely through the 12-points effort of sophomore Salz that the Carolinians were able to keep the Durham invaders on the move. That along with the fact that the Tar Heels broke a 27-27 deadlock at the 4:19 mark on a goal by Brennan and dropped in nine straight points to grab a 37-29 lead. But then Duke came roaring right back and held the Chapel Hillians scoreless while it racked up eight quickies to put things back on almost even terms as the half ended.

The statistics were real close during the first 20 minutes. Both clubs got 29 rebounds. Duke hit 13 of 33 from the floor and the Tar Heels were good for 13 of 36. Duke was 9-16 from the charity line, Carolina was 10-18.

A VALENTINE MESSAGE TO A SHY CHICK-A-BIDDY

Wee Sleekit cow'rin' tim'rous beastie, though life be dull and dreams be yeasty, this missive tells you how you can hog-tie and brand yourself a MAN.

Man (homo sapiens), though not, precisely speaking, roaring hot, still serves to put you through your paces and flaunt in other ladies' faces. He can be trained to fetch and carry, and speak, and beg, and even marry.
But ere the creature can be taught he must, alas, somehow be caught.

One thing there is about the male that makes a thoughtful girl go pale. Although his mind can grasp the far gyrations of the evening star, he's slow at love, and never sees a miss get's possibilities. Unless you others raise a fuss he's only aware of brazen hussies.

A wise and older dame opines the best reply is Valentines. Send scads of witty ones and gay, that say the things you dare not say, until the poky thing perceives that you're the loveliest of Eves!

Brent Nash Stars In Ninth Win

By MAC MAHAFFY

Junior Brent Nash led the Carolina swimmers to their ninth straight victory yesterday afternoon before a capacity crowd of about 1,000 in the Bowman Grey Indoor pool. The Tar Heels took every event but one to soundly swamp the University of Florida team, 57-29.

Tony Schiffman was the individual high point scorer of the meet with first in the 220 and 440 yards freestyle events. But the pleaser of the day was Nash who touched out Florida star Bill Ruggie in the back stroke. Nash also starred as lead-off man in the medley relay.

Other firsts for Carolina included Bill Roth in the 50 freestyle, Walt Rose in the 100 freestyle, and Telfair Mahaffy in the 200 yard breaststroke. Ned Meekins won the diving, and both the relay teams left the southeastern champs far behind.

Former Carolina star Phil Drake won the 200 butterfly for the only Florida first.

Freshmen Records

The undefeated freshmen swimmers, not to be outdone by their varsity teammates, won nine of the ten events in their meet against the Richmond Y. The freshmen set two UNC freshmen records.

Harry Bloom set a record of 1:33.4 in the 150 individual medley and the team of Hunter, Hamill, Dodson, and Kalkhurst won the 200 medley relay with a time of 1:52.6. Other Carolina swimmers were Simonton, Guerrant, Kalkhurst, Dodson, and Hunter.

Jimmy Jamerson, son of Coach Dick Jamerson, set a new state high school record in the 200 freestyle with a time of 2:05.8. Friday, the Frosh Swim Stanton and Ga. Military and the Varsity meets Wake Forest.

Frosh Lose To Duke, 69-67

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Duke's Blue Imps made it three in a row against Carolina's Tar Babies for the season here yesterday as they pulled a real battle out of the fire to win 69-67 in the final eight seconds.

It was a real heartbreaker for the Tar Babies, as they played their best game of the year. It was a much closer and more interesting contest than that of last week, which Duke swept 80-55.

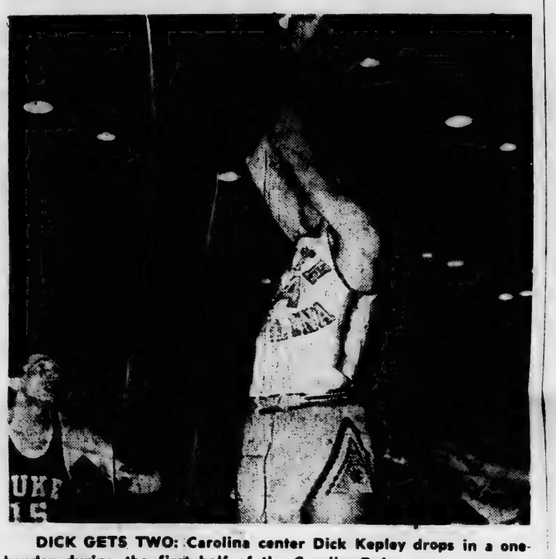
The Tar Babies started fast and kept a lead throughout most of the initial half. Hugh Donahue set a torrid pace by hitting for 17 while Lou Brown had 10. The Dukes went ahead with 8:50 left when Jay Beal hit a layup to give the visitors a 29-27 advantage. Carolina kept it close until the closing minutes of the first half when Duke put on a late spurt to pull away to their intermission margin of 45-38.

2nd Half Rally

Carolina roared back after halftime and rallied steadily, finally tying the count at 54-54 on Lou Brown's jump shot with 12:08 remaing. The score then see-sawed back and forth for the rest of the game, with neither team able to pull away by more than 2 points.

With 3:27 left, Brown hit a push shot to pull Carolina within one at 64-65. Then Duke began working an outside weave, trying to use up all the time possible. But Billy Dunlap stole the ball, drove the length of the court, and layed in his shot to give the Tar Babies a 66-65 lead with only 1:62 left.

Lose in Final Seconds



Duke converted on two charity tosses to regain the advantage at 67-66. Russ Hollers hit a free throw to tie it again with only 48 seconds to go. But Duke was not to be denied, as Howard Hurt hit a lay-up at 8 seconds for the final count of 69-67. Carolina got the ball but couldn't find the right opportunity and the horn sounded with the frosh on the short end once again.

The loss gives the Carolina frosh a 9-5 season slate. The closeness of the battle may be shown by the fact that the score was knotted 12 times.

THE SUMMARY

Carolina—Longnecker 1, Donahue 20, Dunlap 7, Hart 9, Hollers 8. Brown 22, Shuford.

Duke—Hurt 11, Wallace 2, Kistler 10, Kast 18, Frye 15, Beal 13.

Spring Gridiron Drills Open

The Carolina football Tar Heels, who rounded out a highly successful 6-4 record last season, begin their first work for the 1958 campaign Monday when they open their allotted 20 days of off-season practice.

More than 90 candidates, 18 of them lettermen, have been issued equipment and hope to put in in a good conditioning period before next fall's pre-season drills and rugged schedule on which new teams are Notre Dame and Southern California.

Co-Captain and tackle Phil Blazer heads the group of candidates. The other co-captain quarterback Curtis Hathaway, who broke his arm late last season, will not be available for early work but is expected to join the squad later. Guard Jack Lineberger, who suffered an injured neck last season, will not practice until fall. Among the returning veterans off the team which gave Navy its only defeat last season and also turned back Duke, Miami, Clemson, South Carolina and Wake Forest are backs Jack Cummings, Emil DeCantis, Jim Schuler, Ed Lipski, Don Coker, Daley Goff, and lineman, Fred Swearingen, Ronnie Koes and Don Deeding.

Other lettermen who will swing into the four-day weekly practice sessions Monday, which will wind up with the Blue-White squad game on March 15, include backs Wade Smith, Nelson Lowe, Bob Shupin and linemen Ralph Steele, Paul Russell, Jim Davis, Ed Furjanic and Don Kemper.

End Mac Turlington and tackle Don Stallings, both lettermen, are not in school this semester and will have to miss spring practice, but are expected to be with the squad next fall.

On the squad will be many promising newcomers off last year's freshman squad and other 1957 varsity squadmen who did not participate or were used sparingly last season.

End John Schroeder and guard Fred Mueller, ineligible last season, rank high on the list of candidates as the result of highly creditable performances in practice last fall.

Carolina's coaching staff remains intact from last year. Head Coach Jim Tatum again will have as his assistants Emmett Cheek, Ed Kensler, Pat Preston, Jim Hickey, Fred Tullai, John Murphy and George Barclay. Freshman Coach Bud Carson and Ernie Williamson, who doubles as executive secretary of the Educational Foundation, will also assist with the spring work.

VPI Grapplers Stomp Carolina Mat Teams

ELLIOTT COOPER

Carolina's varsity and freshman wrestling teams were overpowered in their meets last night in Woollen Gym by strong squads from Virginia Polytechnic Institute by scores of 30-0 and 20-12.

In the varsity meet the visitors from Blacksburg extended their dual-meent winning streak to twenty-seven straight. Gobbler Coach Frank Teske handed Tar Heel mentor Sam Barnes his second shutout loss of the season.

In picking up their latest win, the Gobblers put together a series of three falls and five decisions to rack up the thirty points. VPI took the opening two bouts by falls when Mike Grindstaff and Mike Ruddo both pinned their Tar Heel opponents. The other VPI pin came in the final bout of the evening where Bernie Visneski flattened Rob Boyette.

Three of the Gobblers four Southern Conference Champions were held to a decision victory in their individual matches. In the 137 pound bout VPI's Joe Heller took a 7-2 decision from Perrin Henderson. Sherman Vandevender and Don Vaughan, also tourney champs, were unable to get pins in their bouts.

Scurlock Wins Close 880 At Millrose Games

By ED CORRIGAN

NEW YORK, Feb. 8 (AP) — Dave Scurlock, a towering junior from Carolina, fought off challenge after challenge to win the 880-yard run in 1:52.5 in the Millrose games in Madison Square Garden tonight.

Scurlock, who stands 6 feet 5 inches, thus scored his first Garden victory. To accomplish the feat, he had to first pass Poland's Zbigniew Orywal, then fight him off, and finally, lunge over the finish line with Tommy Carroll, a Yale freshman hot on his heels.

Scurlock's margin over Carroll was less than a yard. The latter, came on fast in the final lap to overtake Orywal.

Orywal led at the start, but managed to stay in front for only a little more than a lap of the 5½ lap race. Then Scurlock took over and no one could do a thing.

Orywal, who is getting used to boards, made a good race of it and less than two laps from home tried to pass Scurlock, but the future Olympian just turned on a burst of speed. And the Pole fell back.

Scurlock said he was disappointed in his performance, which was only two seconds off Arnie Sowell's world indoor records. "I had hoped for a real fast time," he commented after the race. "But I just wasn't myself, I had a stitch during a warmup and that might have had something to do with it."

UNC Officials Clear Lambda Chi In Misconduct Charges

By ANN FRYE

Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity was cleared officially of all misconduct charges today after investigation of an alleged "pajama party" in the early morning hours Sunday at Jack's Drive-In.

All that remained of the highly publicized incident was resentment by the local fraternity as it continued denial of accusations made by a state ABC agent and Durham County law enforcement officers.

But even the state agent, ABC man John Buck, had earlier recalled a previous statement that he saw 20 to 25 couples "in various stages of undreds and intoxication" when he and other officials arrived at the roadhouse between here and Durham.

No Misconduct

After a meeting with University officials and fraternity members in Chancellor William Aycock's office Monday night, Buck issued the following statement:

"I saw no student involved in any misconduct. I saw nothing that indicated immorality.

"Two deputy sheriffs were with me and no arrests were made because no violation of the law by the members of the party was observed in our opinion.

"The purpose of the investigation was to check on the complaint in regards to possible illegal activities at the establishment."

Buck and two Durham County sheriff's deputies had gone to the roadhouse on a tip that illegal activities were being carried on there.

Loudspeaker Warning

Buck had said that he and the deputies arrived at the roadhouse about 3 a.m. Sunday and that as they were entering the establishment a voice on a loudspeaker warned, "Get rid of your bottles right now, the inspector is coming!"

Curtis Fields, president of Lambda Chi Alpha, said that to his knowledge no announcement over any loudspeaker was made.

Fields, in commenting on the dress of the 40 people present at the party, said that the girls wore Bermuda shorts, slacks and sweaters. Some of the girls, he said, were wearing over their other clothes night shirts which were given as favors to the girls during the pledge dance of the fraternity Saturday night.

Fields said some of the boys were wearing pajamas over their other clothes.

The three law enforcement officers walked into the room where the party was being held, brandishing flash lights, and then left after five minutes, Fields said.

First Information

The first information the fraternity members had of the first statements of Buck to the press was when Chancellor Aycock summoned some of the boys to his office Sunday.

The students denied implications in the first statements by Buck. Then Buck retracted some from his first remarks. But the misinformation already had been given to the State Press.

By the time the revised story was released, the Associated Press had already sent out an account containing the original statements by Buck, and this story was used in the first editions of several state newspapers.

In a joint statement last night, Fields and Bill Redding, Interfraternity Council. President stated that they regretted that "the news stories were released as they were.

"We realize that publicity such as this brings a bad name to afraternity, and in any such future cases, we hope that all the correct information is obtained before anything is printed," said Fields and Redding.

The two fraternity officials declared that "the publicity was not correct when first released. We also hope that the corrected versions of the story will be carried by the state papers which did not contain the true facts in the first releases of their stories."

Redding said that no action would be taken against the fraternity by the IFC or IFC court becauses "no action is warranted in this case."

Sam Magill, director of student activities, said yesterday there was no evidence found of any misconduct. However, he said, "This doesn't mean I necessarily approve the propiety of holding a late party at a place like Jack's. This indicates some lack of judgment."

UP To Hear Honor Discussion

The University Party will discuss the Honor Council bill introduced in the Student Legislature last week at its regular meeting tonight.

The meeting will be in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2 at 7:15 p. m.

Party Chairman Syd Shuford said yesterday George Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, and Sonny Hallford, attorney general, will attend and discuss the bills with members of the party.

Bill Proposals

The bill, tossed in the hopper under the sponsorship of both campus political parties, proposes to abolish the separate Men's and Women's Councils and include jury trials for students accused of violating the honor code. The new council, if established, will be composed of five members and nine jurors and will have original jurisdiction on code violations.

The bill is scheduled to come out of committee for possible action Thursday.

Shuford said, "It is seldom that a subject of such fundamental importance to us as students is brought up." He added that "every student should make it his duty—as it is his privilege—to participate in policy-making, especially when it affects his everybody life as this does."

Urges Attendance

Shuford urged each dorm, sorority and fraternity to send representatives to the meeting, and he declared that any interested student could represent himself at the discussion.

The party chairman added: "It is party policy to air any and all issues that come within the realm of student government, for it is through uninhibited discussion that the wisest choice is ultimately made."

GLADIOLAS — A highlight of the Winter Germans will be the presentation of the well-known singing group, the Gladiolas, who are accompanied by a five-piece combo, who are best known for their popular hit "Little Darling." The group will be one of the features at the Winter Germans dance this Saturday night.

Outstanding Composer Performs Here Tonight

By WESTBROOK FOWLER

A noted Australian pianist and composer, Percy Grainger, who was chosen by Edward Grieg, Norwegian composer, to perform his Piano Concerto in A Minor on an important occasion in 1907, will appear here in joint concert tonight, at 8 o'clock in Hill Music Hall.

Grainger, playing with the UNC Symphonic Wind Ensemble, conducted by Herbert W. Fred, and the University Chorus, directed by Walton Mason, will be the soloist in the first movement of Grieg's famous concerto. Compositions written or arranged by Graniger himself, will compose the greater part of the program.

Child Prodigy

As a child prodigy, Grainger, born in Melborne, Australia, toured Europe giving many piano concerts. During this period Grieg recognized him as a performer of outstanding ability. The young artist went on to become one of the most popular pianists of the early 20th century.

Many of Grainger's compositions, both vocal and instrumental, are based upon English folksongs collected by him since 1805. His works, recognized for their use of irregular rhythms, have been performed frequently in this country and abroad.

Music Series

Currently Graingers is coediting an important music series, English Gothic Music. He is doing this in addition to his regular concert appearances.

The concert Tuesday night which is open to the public, is being sponsored by the Department of Music and Graham Memorial.

Y Discussion Groups Begin

The first of three-day discussion groups on opportunities for summer work will be held today in the Council room of the Y Building from 2 to 5:30 p.m.

Members of the Y staff and students who have attended workcamps here and abroad will be on hand to discuss the work involved and the opportunities for securing such work.

Several agencies will be represented in the session today. All students interested in summer work have been invited to stop by the Council room sometime between 2 and 5:30 p.m.

These discussion groups are being sponsored by the Campus Christian Council, in conjunction with the local Y.

Mary Morgan, chairman of the special Y Commttee holding the sessions, said yesterday that activities of students in workcamps, such as excursions, study and discussion groups on prevalent topics, in addition to the regular work, will be discussed today by Miss Anne Queen of the Y staff and students Pooh Jones, Don Wells, Southerland and, Tom Ray.

Three Beauties Grace Local Women's Store

A local clothing store was triply graced Saturday morning with the presence of Elaine Herndon, Miss North Carolina, and Cecile Martin and Dottie Bull, the November and January Miss Fashionplates.

All three appeared at Robbins clothing store in connection with the showing of a special collection of spring dresses designed specifically for Miss Herndon.

Elaine, a lovely and vivacious brunette who attended summer school at Carolina last summer, graciously handed out roses at the door of the store as Dottie, a slender red head, and Cecile, a pretty blonde, drifted among the customers.

Official Duties

When asked what her official duties now consisted of Miss Herndon said, "I do some modeling, visit civic groups, speak sometimes, and visit church parties and ladies' nights, and sometimes I entertain."

She explained that she entertained by singing and dancing or by sometimes reciting while playing the piano.

When asked how she developed her talent, she grinned and said, "I guess I inherited what little I have. My grandfather was a Meth-

Paddy Wall, Ragsdale And Hallford Discuss Honor Council Revision Bill At SP Meeting

By Pringle Pipkin

Three student leaders gave varying opinions about the bill to revise the Honor Councils at a meeting of the Student Party last night.

Sonny Hallford, Attorney-General of the Student Body, said that he considered the bill a "work sheet" and not in its final form. There is a difference between violations of social rules and of the Honor Council, he said.

The attorney-general asserted that even though under the proposed system the attorney-general's staff investigates a case, the jury decides a verdict, and the Honor Council renders a sentence, these groups would function as a single council.

Compromises

He said, "I would agree to make compromises as long as we all agree that the compromises are good." What we are undertaking is an experiment," he commented later in the evening.

Miss Paddy Wall, a member of the Women's Honor Council, claimed that the student body needed to feel a definite responsibility to the Honor System, and that the student do not now feel this responsibility.

Anyone on the campus should be subject to jury call, she said. The idea of having a combined men and women's administration of the Honor System was not, she said, in the Women's Honor Council's opinion a good one.

A Single Case

Miss Wall stated that she did know of "a single case" where boys and girls had been implicated that different sentences had been given. This type of case is the minority by a ratio of about 25 to one, she commented.

There are important facts, she said, that a girl would not bring out before a mixed council. She said that many social violations often involved Honor System violations.

"Think about it, and put yourself in the offender's place," she urged.

George Ragsdale, Chairman of the Men's Honor Council, said he did not like the idea of having a single male and female administration of the Honor System.

Amendment

He stated that he was going to try to have the bill amended so that there were two administrations of unmixed sexes.

Ragsdale claimed that a mixed jury would cut down on the amount of the more personal testimony that an offender might give.

While thistestimony might not be helpful in deciding guilt, he asserted it would be important in making a sentence which would be "corrective."

He told the students to put themselves in the position of the offender and asked for a "separate (men from women) but equal system here."

After the talks the speakers answered a number of questions.

Phi Society To Debate Work Laws

Right-to-work laws, the national intercollegiate debate query for this year, will be debated by the Philanthropic Literary Society at its regular meeting tonight.

Warren Coolidge, chairman of the ways and means committee, has announced that the bill resolves: the requirement of membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment should be illegal.

The bill favors right-to-work laws, which have been enacted by 18 states, Rep. Coolidge disclosed.

Members of the University Debate Squad have been invited to 8 p.m. meeting, which will be held in Phi Hall on the fourth floor of New East.

New Feature

A new feature of the organization this year, the invitation to a faculty member who is an authority on the topic of the evening, will be inaugurated. A member of the economics department will serve as guest critic.

Tonight's bill states that the McClellan Committee has uncovered ilegal practices in labor unions, and that compulsory membership in private organizations should not interfere with an individual's right to follow any of the common occupations of life.

Jess Stribling will preside over the meeting.

Mardi Gras To Be Held As Planned

By CHARLIE SLOAN

Carolina's Mardi Gras weekend will be held as scheduled.

Last week the Mardi Gras commitee was told that they could not use the Tin Can for the dance because the building would be unsafe for a large number of people.

Saturday a state building inspector looked over the Tin Can and has declared that its floor is safe. He said some alterations on the lights and doors will be necessary.

When the inspector announced his findings, Phys. Ed. Dept Chairman O. K. Cornwell approved the Mardi Gras Committee's request to hold the dance in the building.

Mardi Gras Chairman Gerry Boudreau said he hoped this "small incident will show campus leaders and administrators the dire need for a permanent place to hold large dances."

Officers' Conduct Demands Apologies To Lambda Chi's

ABC Inspector John Buck and Durham County law enforcement officers had better check up on their law and keep their stories straight before they crash any more UNC fraternity parties.

A classic example of how these protectors of the state sometimes go about their business is seen in the felonious and contradictory reports growing out of a raid at Jack's Drive-In in the early morning hours Sunday.

According to one newspaper, Beck allegedly noted "20 to 25 couples in 'various' stages of undress an dintoxication'" when he and two Durham deputies arrived . . . . "We found two or three couples dancing with practically nothing on," he was quoted as saying.

Well, these are pretty serious charges despite their basis of fact. But they become even more serious when the same ABC agent later retracts his previous statements and holds that:"I saw no student involved in misconduct. I saw nothing that indicated any immorality."

This, of course, came too late to escape the embarassment and public humiliation of Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity which followed newspaper reports throughout the state. Buck and his associates, it seems, imagined a front page story which never occurred at all. Yet in the public eye the fraternity was having an orgy.

Facts, from all we can gather, point to the contrary. And even an investigation by Chancellor William Aycock turned up information "refuting Buck's story of 'undreds and intoxication'," said one newspaper—on which played the alleged misconduct and made little ado about the refutation.

Not only were we surprised that state ABC agents go around making false accusations, but we were also somewhat amazed that they could enter upon private property without first having read a search warrant. Reports here said that the officers did not produce a warrent before they crashed the early morning party.

We've searched several North Carolina statutes and have yet to find a provision that officers, under these circumstances, can enter upon private property without first having read a warrant. Despite the public nature of the property, it had been rented exclusively by the local fraternity. In that sense it was private, and hence deserves certain rights against encroachment.

The seriousness of charges against the Lambda Chi's demands explanation and apology by the officers who reported the allegations to the North Carolina press. Steps also should be taken to insure that never again will such ill-based accusations be made against a UNC fraternity.

Perhaps at 3 a.m. of a Sunday morning college boys should be home in bed. That, apparently, would have been a good place for the unexpected visitors of the Lambda Chi's.

Women Can't Be Excluded From University Training

Four North Carolina educators, we noted in The Charlotte Observer Monday, have agreed that a proposal to keep women out of college as a solution for overcrowded universities "was a very shallow approach to a complex problem."

Among the educators were: William C. Friday of the Consolidated University; Dr. William O. Harris, Wake Forest College; Dr. J. O. Manly, Pfeiffer College; and Dr. Norman Gutman, Duke University.

The proposal was advanced by Philip Ward Burton of Syracuse University in the Sunday newspaper supplement, "This Week Magazine." He named two reasons why "women students will need to sacrificed" if overcrowded conditions become critical:

1. "Men need the college degree more than women need it—in order to get good jobs and advance in them.

2. "Most women have less sensible, or less demanding, reasons for a college education—they view the campus as a 'marriage mart.'"

Well, Dr. Harris best answered Burton's proposal by asserting that "the purpose is not to serve technology or to assure success in a job, but to broaden the horizons of the individual by developing the human intellect-the whole man."

The charge that college for some coeds is a 'marriage mart is obviously a sound one, not excluding coeds at the University of North Carolina. But we must remember that many coeds meet their future husbands at college — suggesting that even men aren't always intent on solely getting an education.

Indeed, to eliminate all women from American universities would be to eliminate a number of so-called husband hunters as well. But the result would be to weed out the plants with parasites. So many talented individuals would thus be eliminated that results of the entire practice would be adverse.

Where would be our Gertrude Steins? What would happen to our Clare Both Luces? Who would supply demands of our already understaffed schools, colleges and universities? In a word, who would remain to perform all those duties for which college education has prepared our women of today?

Men, and this may be contested, we're the chosensex. But this doesn't make women completely dispensable. They, too, have attributes which higher education is capable of developing.

Scientific Secrecy To Be Discarded

Not many, mind you. Just enough to release, for public and professional use, Soviet scientific documents that are being compiled and translated at the rate of 50,000 a year.

Heretofore, all all have been marked "secret" by each of the agencies involved and kept securely safe from inspection by, for example, American scientists who could make good use of such data.

In a recent investigation, it was disclosed that some of the documents had been translated by seven different agencies, each unaware that the others were similarly engaged.

The practice embodied absurdity. The information had been openly published in Russia and in the West European countries.

It demonstrates, however, the mania for secrecy that has clutched official Washington in its classified grip.

Call the case "finalized"—none too soon.—The Charlotte Observer.

LETTER TO EDITOR

Jimenez Aided Venezuela, Too Reader Asserts

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the article "Ex-Venezuelan Attorney General" which appeared Friday in The Daily Tar Heel. In my own personal opinion I feel that the criticism of Ex-president Marcas Perez Jimenez has been one-sided Granted, some of his policies could not possibly be tolerated in this country, but the fact must be realized that he is Venezuelan and that he was dealing with Venezuelans with no history of "democracy".

All through his administration Jimenez remained on very friendly relations with the United States, and this fact has been to both countries a great benefit which can not be overemphasized. Sanitation departments, schools, slum area clearances, and many other civic reforms have raised the standard of living. People have moved from thatch roof huts to beautiful apartment buildings erected at government expense in Caracas. Multi-million-dollar highways have been built in the past several years to take the place of roads once built by the slave labor of Gomez. Beautiful beaches and recreation facilities have been developed for the labor class. These are a few of the wide range of public projects.

I have lived in Venezuela for nine years and every time I returned there were amazing evidences of the continuous prosperity and development under Jimenez's government. Indeed he was a dictator, and as Americans the word for us has vivid connotations which bring to mind another Hitler, or Gomez. But how can one suddenly institute a living democracy with a large portion of the population living in the jungle with limited education and communication? Venezuela is still an underdeveloped country on the whole as compared to a lot of other countries. But it is a young country with great potentialities. A child can not be expected to act like an adult because he does not have the experience on which to base his judgements and decisions. He must be guided by his parents who for the most part assume the role of dictator and this role was Jimenez's. Venezuela is merely growing from childhood to adolescence, and as everyone knows, the adolescent stage is the most difficult. I sincerely hope that the new president has a successful term in office and manages to stay alive.

Judicial System Needs Revision

By CURTIS GANS

The judicial bill facing the legislature currently has the right idea, but neither pushes the idea far enough nor provides for a unified justice system as well as the responsibility of the citizenry that should be attendant to it.

To unify the honor court is fine, but what should go with it is the unification of the campus code courts—the IDC court and the Women's Residence Council. This would provide for fair and equal justice to both men and women. To object to this on the grounds that some people will be "unwilling to talk" in front of a mixed court is a ridiculous absurdity in any judicial system. The legal name for this type of action is contempt of court.

Under this system, there would be one court with original jurisdiction, and the Student Council and the Student-Faculty Council would stand as appelate courts, in the case of the Student Council, as in the case of the Supreme Court of the United States, it would serve as an apellate court as well as the court which rules on the constitutionality of the various bills passed by the Student Legisture.

The second big revision needed in the judicial system is the basic necessity to codify the laws of the campuses, for no court of law ever rules on the vague legeal structure that is ,the current Honor and Campus Code.

Perhaps the initial revision to be made is to discard the Campus Code. This document says that a person is to act like a gentleman or a lady as the case may be at all times. Under this, rulings have been made concerning drinking, liquor in rooms, necking in parlors and all other such rot. There is no universal conception of what it is to be a gentleman or a lady, nor should there be, since many of the greatest contributors to the community have turned out to be, in the view of the narrow minded, not gentlemen.

From codification, one must make a long step to responsble citizenry. The bill in front of the legislature provides that a group of interested students be chosen for jury duty, but in the concept of a responsible citizenry, all cititzens, and in his case all students, are responsible for jury duty. From this roll, the attorney-general should select twenty-five, and the two opposing lawyers run the number down to nine. There should not now or ever be any permanent jurors, and this method of appeasing those members of the honor council that would be unable to serve should be discarded.

The people who drew up the bill had a good idea when they thought of the separation of powers among the legislative, judicial, and executive branches, but when they put it into action they went too far. First ,they stripped the court of the functions of prosecution and investigation. This was good since these are executive functions. However, when they made the Attorney-General the judge of the validity of the objections to certain jurors serving, they put the power of trying the case into the executive hands.
This should not be.

Furthermore, no court of law restricts its jury to sex qualifications, and any such restrictions, such as at least two jurors should be male or female, should be stricken from the bill.

There is a final objection to the current legal system that must be corrected. This is the shroud of secrecy that curently envelopes the judicial process. For the protection of the student body at large, there needs to be the check of the public on the methods of justices. This would protect the student body from malfeasanceon the part of these officials, and moreover it would eliminate the current "secret police system" that is now in existence. The need to eliminate consorship, the need to edify and protect the public, and the necessity for an open and fair trial are all necessary to a good judicial system.

Now that the legislature has started to take much needed action, let it carry it out to its logical conculsion.

NOBEL PRIZE WINNER

First Book On Camus Appears In America

For those interested in the works of Albert Camus, recipient of the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1957, a recent literary portrait of the French author and his writings was published by George Brazziller, Inc. (ALBERT CAMUS: The Invincible Summer. By Albert Maquet. Translated from the French by Herma Briffault. 224 pp. New York. $3.75) It is the first book on Camus to appear in America and, as such, commands a reasonable amount of attention.

If the reader is looking for an explicit, perspicacious essay which will reduce Camus' ideas to the layman's plane, this certainly is not the book. We were disappointed with the ineffective translation which, at times, gives the presentation a rather lepidote covering and is distracting to one's reading. The author's efforts already contained several structural difficulties as well some lack of continuity. This reviewer much preferred Robert De Luppe's critique (ALBERT CAMUS. By Robert De Luppe. 122 pp. Paris: Editions Univereitaires. 1952) which demonstrated a better organization of material at the author's disposal. Unfortunately, this latter work has not been translated from the french.

M. Maquet's efforts, however, are more recent and have not been in vain. We would not hesitate to recommend it to any of our readers who entertain the same concern that we do with the writings of Albert Camus. If, as Maquet observes, "the work of Albert Camus. If, as Maquet observes, "the us to be worthy of it," we can only profit from an objective reading of this literary biography.

The author's intent was to faithfully describe the "double experiment, lyrical and intellectual, of (Camus), and (to show) the stages of evolution that become apparent." A certain amoutn of this description is achieved in the Maquet biography.

The book is divided into three main sections: (1) The Man And His Struggles; (2) The Writer And Thinker; and (3) The Aesthetician And Artist. Completing the work is a bibliography of the works, books, and articles of Camus. The main problem here seems to be that we have a philosophically inclined author who attempts literary biography along with his interpretation of Camusian ideas and who falls into some confusion in his presentation.

Maquet does admirably well in the first and third sections (Writer & Thinker, Aesthetician & Artist), but the confusion seems to arise in the longest section (Writer & Thinker, 153 pp.). We may sympathize with him in that he had a difficult task in trying to interpret the intellectual and moral development of Camus' thought. The author points up in this section, however, many of the false impressions and invalid interpretations which have become manifest since the appearance of "The Stranger" in 1942. One of these is the misrepresentation of Camus' atheism as the "impossibility of God" rather than a "refusal of God" as is the case. Another faulty interpretation, mostly on the part of the young romantics who are looking for an escape at any price and who swear a haute voix that they are not romantics, is the idea that just because the world is absurd to Camus all is despair and hopelessness. On the contrary, Camus quite definitely states that our absurd freedom demands that we have hope and live "not . . .better but . . .more." There must be a struggle in the mind which is "eternally renewed, eternally on the alert." The author succeeds in focusing our attention on these apparent inequities.

Yet another fine point of the biography is the section devoted to "Reflexions Sur La Guillotine," an essay which appeared in June and July of last year in successive editions of La Nouvelle N.R.F. published in Paris. (This essay is now available in English translation—Evergreen Review, Vol. 1, No. 3, a quarterly published by Grove Press, Inc.) The synopsis of Camus' arguments is well represented and the observations by Maquet are extremely interesting. This work, along with Arthur Koestler's "Reflections on Hanging," has been received with enthusiasm both here and abroad. In the essay, Camus asserts again that there is a coming Renaissance in Europe, but wisely observes that "the death penalty . . .is a disgusting butchery, an outrage inflicted on the spirit and body of man. Neither in the hearts of men nor in the manners of society will there be a listing peace until we outlaw death."

Maquet does convey his insight into the works of Albert Camus and is obviously a man greatly concerned with the problems raised therein. As I said before, the biography is worth its price though one would have wished that M. Maquet had taken the time to completely rewrite it. Those of us in this country who have read Camus' novels and essays and have watched from the sidelines while he has grown intellectually and reformed his thoughts through his writings were anxiously awaiting this literary biography and anticipate many more to come. Maquet's work rightly observes that Camus' works respond to one another and that this man is struggling with himself sincerely and uninhibitedly to ascertain the present condition of man. The confirmation of this literary theory of investigation initiated by Camus came last year when the Swedish Academy awarded him the Nobel Prize "for his important literary work which illuminates, with conscience in the contemporary world."

pentrating purposiveness, the problems of the human

And now we have been guilty of M. Maquet's error—lack of continuity. But we share the same urgent concern with the writings of Albert Camus. "When all is said," writes Maquet, "the award of the Academy at Stockholm merely heightens the brilliance of Camus' well-founded fame. It confirms, in effect, only that he has arrived at 43 years of age, in the full flower of his creative genius, Albert Camus still awaits his future, secure in the harvest he has already reaped."

BRUSSELS BOUND — TO WORLD'S FAIR

It's Off To Brussels For These Lucky Coeds

By MARY MOORE MASON

"I was really thrilled when I got the notice from Gov. Hodges saying that I had been chosen from North Carolina as one of the United States' representatives to the World's Fair in Brussels," said pretty blond Marion Hays, an Alpha Delta Pi pledge from Durham.

"Yes, me, too," echoed Beverly Bailey, a vivacious brunette, "And, do you know that it opens on my birthday."

Beverly, also a junior coed and ADP pledge from Clarksburg, W.Va., was chosen by Governor Underwood of that state as one of its representatives. She and Marion, along with Nancy Greene, a coed from Augusta, Ga., who has already gone home, have dropped out of school this semester to make preparations for their exciting seven-months stay in Brussels.

How Chosen

When asked how they got awarded this honor, Marion explained, "Each state could send 10 girls as representatives. These girls were picked from applications or recommendations sent in to the governor. Some states are not sending any representatives, some are sending just a few."

"Texas, naturally, is the only one sending all 10," chimed in Beverly.

The girls also have to be able to speak French fluently, and both Beverly and Marion have to pass a French test before they can leave. They will also be tutored in German for several weeks before they sail for Europe March 27.

Official Duties

On being asked what their official duties at the Worlds' Fair would be, they explained that they would be official staff members of the U. S. delegation and would act as guides through the U. S. exhibit. They also will be walking information bureaus for tourists and visitors to the fair.

In order to be sure that they will do a good job in the latter capacity, all the girls will go through an orientation period when they will be briefed on the fair, the different exhibitions, and the history, museums and the interesting sights of Brussels and surrounding territory .

"We will wear gray uniforms with badges all up and down one arm," said Marion," one badge tells what country we are from, another what state, and others what languages we can speak.

While There

The girls will all live in one motel, leased by the U. S. government, and will work 14 hours a day. They get paid $150 a month, and have to pay their own transportation over and back. However, they both hope to get sponsors who will help them pay their other expenses.

When the fair is over in October, they plan to do some traveling through Europe on their own. "We may be able to travel a little while the Fair is going on;" said Beverly, "however, we won't be able to go too far from because we just have two days off a week, and these days might not be together.

Then second semester of next year, three excited girls will come back to UNC with scrapbooks full of memories from Europe and minds full of exciting experiences from the Brussel's World Fair.

odist minister, and he used to sing and cut up. Of course I did have three months of dance lessons when I was in the sixth grade. When I went to Duke I tried out for the "Hoof and Horn," the college song and dance group."

Elaine, now a junior and member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority at Duke is currently just taking two courses so she can keep up with her other obligations. She plans to go to summer school this summer so she can catch up and graduate with her class in June, 1959.

Beauty Contests

When asked how many beauty shows she has been in Elaine said, "The first real contest that I have ever been in was the Miss Durham contest which took me on to the North Carolina contest and on to Atlantic City." There she was in the finalists for the Miss America title.

However, Elaine won quite a few honors in high school in Durham. Here she was Queen of the Christmas Dance, in the contest for Homecoming Queen, and in the court for the Junior-Senior prom.

Nine Minutes And That's All She Wrote

Frank McGuire about summed it up when he called it "one of the mysteries of basketball."

He was referring to a nine minute period over the last of the first half and beginning of the second when his Carolina Tar Heels were outscored 20-4 by Duke here Saturday—the factor which most people agree was the deciding point in the Blue Devil's victory.

You may recall that Carolina broke a 27-27 tie with 4:19 left in the half and by the 3:20 mark had run it to 36-27 only to have Duke come right back for four straight baskets to make it 36-35 at half.

The visitors picked up right where they had left off as the second half got underway. In less than five minutes the Dukes had dropped in six baskets while holding Carolina to a couple and that was your ball game. After that, Carolina could never regain its equalibrium and Duke had won its seventh straight.

Duke demoralized Carolina. The Durham club kept swatting down every Carolina challenge. It was a fine team victory for the Blue Devils; they played their hearts out.

Much has been said about the fact that Carolina was out-rebounded 58-53 by the smaller Blue Devils. But if you think about it a minute, there wasn't really a lot of difference in height.

After all, the Tar Heels ran Tommy Kearns, Harvey Salz and Bobby Cunningham most of the way and they're no taller than Duke's little men, Bucky Allen, Bobby Joe Harris and Bob Vernon. Actually, the only time Carolina had much advantage in size was when Dick Kepley was playing instead of Cunningham. Otherwise, it was Lee Shaffer and Pete Brennan against Jim Newcome and Paul Schmidt under the baskets.

McGuiremen In Suicide Seat Now

It must come as quite a shock for ACC fans to see the Tar Heels in fourth place in the conference standings. It's been a long time since that has occurred. Actually, it's only conclusive evidence that the ACC is a solid organization—there's not a lot of difference in between the first four clubs, State, Duke Maryland and Carolina. And don't count out the rest of the conference either.

The Tar Heels cannot afford to lose another conference tilt and still expect to finish atop the regular season standings. And even if they go undefeated the rest of the way, there's no assurance of first place. Tournament-wise, the position which they now occupy might be called the "suicide seat." That would infer that the fourth team will more than likely meet the top team in the semi-finals.

With a full slate going this week in the conference, the prognosticators will lay low until Saturday night because the final outcome is as hard to predict now as the number of warts on a cumcumber. By Sunday, however, some indication of the tourney pairing might be forthcoming.

Two Big Tests This Week

Carolina has two very important conference tests this week. The first is tonight against Virginia in Charlottsville and the second against Wake Forest in Winston-Salem. The McGuiremen go outside the conference Saturday night against Notre Dame in Chicago. It will be the nightcap of a doubleheader which featuers Kentucky and Loyola in the opener.

Biggest game of the week from the standpoint of deciding the regular season champ comes tonight in Raleigh when Duke puts its win streak on the line against the team it started the skein against—N. C. State. State could put a strong clamp on first place with a victory. Should Duke win it, the Devils will take the lead.

State is definitely favored to finish first now, since all four of its remaining games are in Raleigh. Of the top four teams, Carolina is at the biggest disadvantage as far as home courts are concerned. The Tar Heels have one game at home and four on the road (not counting the Notre Dame game). Duke has three left at home and two away and Maryland three at home and three on the road.

Gridders Postpone Off-Season Preps

The unusually cold weather has prompted football mentor Jim Tatum to postpone the opening of spring football drills until next Monday.

Tatum and his aides decided yesterday that since the ground had been frozen over it would be unwise to risk having to practice in the mud when the ice melts so he's decided to wait until next week to begin.

Cagers In ACC Tilt At Virginia Tonight

By BILL KING

Carolina's Tar Heels haven't had much luck with the home court lately. Maybe a change in scenery is needed. Frank McGuire's group will get that change tonight against the Virginia Cavaliers in Charlottsville, Va.

The Tar Heels have lost three of their last five games and two of them were on their own stomping grounds—Woollen Gymnasium. Now they'll try to gain back a little of the prestige which recent conference losses to Maryland State and Duke usurped.

This is a most important contest for the Tar Heels because they face a steep uphill battle to move back into contention for the regular season title. This is the first of two big conference games for Carolina this week. The next is against Wake Forest in Winston-Salem Thursday night; Notre Dame follows Saturday night in Chicago.

LEE SHAFFER
Carolina Forward

This is the second encounter between these two clubs this season. The Tar Heels stopped the Virginians, 82-66 here Jan. 9. The Cavaliers are in fifth place in the conference behind Carolina but their 3-6 record offers no positional challenge to the 6-3 mark of the Tar Heels. Carolina is seeking only to move up the ladder now since there is little chance that the last four teams will make the first division before tournament time.

The main concern for Frank McGuire and Co. will be to stop the Cavalier's big center, Herb Busch. Busch, along with Tar Heels Pete Brennan and Tommy Kearns will give the folks up Charlottesville way a look at the top three scorers in the ACC. Brennan is first, Busch second and Kearns third.

Busch is considered the big man in the Virginia attack but he's definitely not the only of potency in the Cavalier camp. Paul Adkins, a six foot guard and 6-5 forword John Siewers are also men to watch. The rest of the starting Virginia lineup should consist of Dick Stobbs and Bill Metzger.

Carolina, anxious to get another crack at the ACC's "leading three", State, Duke and Maryland, will have to play it cautiously to avoid an upset at the hands of the troublesome Dominion five. Virginia has a 7-9 seasonal won-lost record while the Tar Heels are 13-4.

McGuire will go with his relatively new starting lineup again tonight. It's the same one he's had all season except that he's moved sophomore sensation Harvey Salz into the starting lineup in place of Bobby Cunningham. Cunningham is still the most valuable defensive man on the squad but Salz is a bigger scorer, something the Tar Heels need badly.

Almost Broke Record; Tied For Award

LEXINGTON, Va., Feb. 9—Carolina's Wayne Bishop failed in his effort to set a new record in the two-mile run Saturday night in the VMI relays but he was impressive enough to tie in the voting for the outstanding track competition award.

Bishop won the two mile in 9 minutes, 40.9 second — more than four seconds over the record set by Carolina's Jim Beatty in 1955—and then ran a leg on North Carolina's winning four-mile relay team.

Maryland's Ed Cooke and West Virginia's Dave Tork set two of the nine new records for the meet.

Cooke, the ACC record holder, threw the shot 53 feet 4 7-8 inches and Tork pole vaulted 13 feet, 7¾ inches. Tork was picked the outstanding field event competitor in the meet by the coaches of the 22 college teams participating.

Other meet records included Navy in the mile relay, at 3:30.1; VMI in the spring-shuttle relay at 25.2 seconds; Georgetown in the two-mile relay at 8:10; and Duke in the sprint-medley relay at 3:41.8.

George Verdisco of Georgetown clipped off the ¾-mile freshman race in 3:15.1 to better the meet record. Bob Stom, both of William and Mary, tied for a new record in the high jump at 6 feet, 3⅜ inches.

Bishopp, who was handicapped in his bid to set a new record in the two mile by a field of 37, lapped everyone in the field but the second and third-place finishers.

Cold Weather Forces Halt In Grid Plans

Carolina's 1958 spring football drills have been postponed until next Monday due to cold weather and wet grounds. The football office announced yesterday that the practices, scheduled to begin yesterday, had to be postoned due to the inclement weather.

Changes in the team's schedule were also announced. The club will now practice five days each week, omitting Fridays and Sundays.

A VALENTINE MESSAGE TO A SHY CHICK-A-BIDDY

Wee Sleekit cow'rin' tim'rous beastie, though life be dull and dreams be yeasty, this missive tells you how you can hog-tie and brand yourself a MAN.

Man (homo sapiens), though not, precisely speaking, roaring hot, still serves to put you through your paces and flaunt in other ladies' faces. He can be trained to fetch and carry, and speak, and beg, and even marry.
But ere the creature can be taught he must, alas, somehow be caught.

One thing there is about the male that makes a thoughtful girl go pale. Although his mind can grasp the far gyrations of the evening star, he's slow at love, and never sees a nice gal's possibilities. Unless you others raise a fuss he's only aware of brazen hussies.

A wise and older dame opines the best reply is Valentines. Send scads of witty ones and gay, that say the things you dare not say, until the poky thing perceives that you're the loveliest of Eves!

Kappa Continues Rushing Program With Party Tonight At Smith Dorm

The second party in the current rush program of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority will be held tonight in Smith parlour between 7:30 and 9 o'clock. Invitations to this party were delivered at the doors of each girl yesterday by Stray Greeks.

Local coeds—numbering almost 100—attended the first rush party of the new sorority on campus Monday night in the Morehead Building.

Since there are only a few Kappas already on campus, the sorority was aided by Kappas from Duke, local alumnae, Stray Greeks and Panhellenic Council members in conducting the party.

Mr. Frank Alexander, national director of sororities, spoke to the rushees about the sorority and its function on the UNC campus.

In the receiving line at the party were Mrs. Alexander and Sophie Martin, undergraduate counsellor at UNC for the sorority.

The third party in the rush program has been scheduled for tomorrow night at the home of a Kappa alumna, Mrs. Joseph D. Page, of Chapel Hill. Bids will be sent out shortly after the third party.

Kappa is the seventh national sorority to come to the UNC campus. This sorority was invited after student and administration groups acted on an expressed need for the establishment of another sorority here.

Senator Humphrey's Speech Tonight Will Open World Affairs Conference

WUNC-TV Slated To Telecast Speech

The 8th annual Conference on World Affairs will open here today with a public address by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall Auditorium.

Sen. Humphrey, who is a member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and chairman of the Special Subcommittee on Disarmament, will speak on "Mutual Understanding in the Nuclear Age." His speech will be telecast from 8 to 9 p.m. over WUNC-TV, the University's educational station, channel 4.

The chairman of the conference planning committee, Mrs. E. P. Gibson of Laurel Hill, will preside, and Dr. James L. Godfrey, dean of the faculty, will introduce Sen. Humphrey.

A reception honoring the senator will be given in Graham Memorial Student Union following his speech by the Carolina Forum, non-partism speaker agency of the student government.

Some 250 persons are expected to attend the conference discussions to be held all day Thursday on the UNC campus with the first session set for 10 p. m. in Carroll Hall auditorium.

During registration from 9 to 10 a. m. there will be a showing in Carroll Hall of United Nations films, presented by Kenneth M. McIntyre, director of the UNC Bureau of Audio-Visual Education.

Foreign Panel

A Panel of foreign students will discuss the mutual understanding [illegible] for Emeritus Robert B. House will moderate.

Others on the morning program will be Chancellor William B. Aycock, who will welcome the visitors to the campus; Dr. Leslie W. Syron, president of the N. C. Division of the AAUW; Mrs. Gibson, who who will explain conference aims; and the Rev. Harvey L. Carnes of Chapel Hill, who will give the invocation.

The N. C. Council of Women's Organization will hold its annual luncheon Thursday at the Carolina Inn, to be attended by 150 leaders of the 20 statewide organizations affiliated with the council.

Luncheon speaker will be Miss Gabriela Roepke, Chilean educator, poet and playwright, who is studying this year at Carolina.

ABC Board Won't Charge Fraternity

By ANN FRYE

Charges will not be filed against Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity in connection with an early-morning party Sunday, but the owner of Jack's Drive-In —where the party was held—will be called before the State ABC Board.

That was disclosed yesterday as Durham County officers exhonerated the local fraternity of alleged violations of the law and said no legal action would be taken against the group.

However, State ABC Board Chairman William S. Hunt confirmed an earlier report that John S. (Jack) Hopkins, the drive-in owner, will be called before his board to give cause why his beer permit should not be suspended or revoked.

State law prohibits the presence of whiskey at any establishment which has been granted a license to sell beer or wine, Hunt said.

The action in calling Hopkins to appear before the ABC Board was taken by Hunt after he received a report from beer inspector John Buck, who with two Durham County sheriff's deputies raided Hopkins drive-in Sundays.

"Misquoted"

Buck said, in his report, that he and the two deputies found a party in progress, being held by members of Lambda Chi Fraternity and their guests.

In early newspaper accounts of the raid, Buck had been quoted as implying that misconduct was observed by himself at the party.

However, Buck later issued a statement, after meeting with UNC administration officials and members of the fraternity, that he had observed no misconduct. And in his report, Hunt said, Buck reported that published records of the raid had "misquoted me as saying several of the persons present there were intoxicated and that two or three couples were dancing with practically nothing on."

Members of the fraternity have consistently denied any misconduct and intoxication. Sam Magill, director of student activities, said yesterday that he had confidence in the fraternity.

Hunt said that "until something is brought before me to refute what he (Buck) said, I'm accepting his report. I think that is the only fair way to treat any employe."

The ABC Board will not be concerned in any way with the UNC fraternity, Hunt said, since this board is primarily a control board and not a law enforcement agency.

University Party Debates Bill On Proposed Honor System Revision

By SARAH ADAMS

At last night's meeting of the University Party, the two sides to the debate on the proposed bill to revise the Honor Council system were presented.

The bill, as it now stands, call for a three-branched judicial body, composed of an Attorney-General's staff, a nine-member jury and a 5 member Council. Each branch would have distinct functions, but would work in co-ordination with the entire body to promote the greatest amount of justice for the individual.

Sonny Hallford, attorney general of the student body, presented the idea that this judicial body be of a mixed nature, that both men and women would serve in the respective branches and that cases concerning both sexes would be brought before this body. This body would be primarily concerned with Honor Code violations.

Hallford said that there is a difference between violations of social rules and of the Honor Code, therefore he said that he was preparing an amendment to be presented to the Ways and Means Committee last night to the effect that in the case of women's honor discretion of the individual as to whether her case would stay within a Council of her peers, such as Women's Residence Council, or go to the larger, mixed body for judgment.

George Ragsdale, Chairman of Men's Honor Council, was opposed to the idea of a single male and female administration of the Honor System. He said that he prefers two administrations of unmixed sexes, and was prepared to propose an amendment to the bill to implement this.

Ragsdale claimed that a mixed jury would cut down on the amount of the more personal testimony that the individual would be willing to give.

Both speakers stressed the reason for the proposal for change in the present system was spurred by the need for more education on the part of the stdeunt

Legislature Calls For Special Meet Tonight

A special session of the Student Legislature has been called for tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of New East.

The bill to revise the Honor Councils will be debated section by section. The Student Legislature will also meet Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Before the meeting the UP legislators will hold a caucus at 6:30 p.m. in the Grail Room in Graham Memorial. SP law-makers will meet at 6:30 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge 1 to discuss the work of the evening.

Attendance requirements for legislators at this special session will be the same as those for regular meetings. Student Legislature Speaker Don Furtado said that a fraternity or sorority meeting would not be a valid excuse.

He said that anyone who feels they have a legitimate excuse should contact Lucy Forsyth, chairman of the rules committee.

Open To All Students

This meeting is open to any one who wishes to attend to hear the discussion.

"Because of the importance of this proposal it is mandatory to have this additional session of legislature. I hope that all the legislators will seriously consider this bill previous to the session and will be prepared to objectively discuss it," Furtado commented yesterday.

The Speaker said that he did not think that any final action would be taken on this bill at this session though it was possible.

Y Offering Student List Supplements

The Campus Christian Council and Y-sponsored summer work discussion sessions continue today with emphasis on several areas of industrial, institutional and church work.

These discussions will be held between 2 and 5:30 this afternoon in the Council room of the Y building.

The purpose of the sessions is to acquaint the students with information which otherwise would not be brought to their attention. This information includes the types of summer work available, contacts and applications for entering the work.

On hand to discuss summer jobs being covered by the sessions (the sessions began Tuesday and will continue through Thursday) will be students and members of the Y staff who have experienced work in various areas.

The discussion on Thursday will concern International Student Work, experiment in international living and excampment for citizenship.

The chairman of the Y committee that is co-sponsoring the sessions is Mary Morgan.

Students Interested In Trip To Europe Set Meet Today

By MARY MOORE MASON

UNC will go to Europe this summer in the form of a moderate priced student tour, the first of its kind ever sponsored by the University.

All students who are interested in the tour have been invited to a meeting this afternoon at 4:30 in the YMCA building, at which time the tour will be discussed and plans will be made for meetings during the spring for the purpose of learning about the countries included in the tour.

A group of Carolina students have spent the last three months making plans for the tour under the leadership of Dick Stoker and Tog Sanders, co-chairmen of the YMCA-YWCA European Seminar Committee.

Claude Shotts and Jim Carse, directors of the YMCA, have been the advisors for the group. They have been assisted by Andre Bonard of the United States National Student Association Educational Travel, Inc., who helped to arrange the student seminar tour and by faculty members Drs. Ransom Taylor, Walter Arndt, A. C. Howell and Shepard Jones.

83-Day Tour

The tour will last 83 days and will cover major points of interest in central and southern Europe and England, allowing time for seminars in the major cities like Berlin, Rome, and London.

There will be a two-day rest stop at Rimini, an Italian resort center on the Adriatic Sea.

The purpose of the tour is for UNC students to have a chance to travel abroad at not too much cost, for them to meet European students, and for them to see and study places of historic and artistic interest.

The tour will leave on the MS Italia from New York on June 7 and will return to New York Aug. 29.

Graduation Invitations

The Order of the Grail announces that senior graduation invitations will be on sale in Y Court today, tomorrow and Friday from 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. Members of the Grail will assist seniors in selecting invitations and cards.

Loan Group Cuts Red Tape

By PARKER MADDREY

The Student Loan Fund Committee has disclosed four major revisions in its policy and a report showing that funds available for student loans are rapidly diminishing at the University.

As a result of these changes, some "red tape" is being cut, Prof. C. O. Cathey, of the History Dept., chairman of the University Scholarship Committee, said yesterday. The University has already "a more lenient" policy in granting loans to worthy students in need as compared to other institutions in the state.

The four changes made within the past year are:

1. That no assignment of life insurance is required in negotiating a loan, but it is now entirely optional with the borrower. If a student has trouble obtaining sureties to sign his application for a loan, he is advised to take out life insurance with the Loan Fund as beneficiary so as to show his potential bondsmen his good intentions. Cathey said that persons are not as reluctant to sign as sureties when the borrower takes out this insurance.

2. That the Student Loan manager has the discretion to approve loans, without certification from the clerk of court if he knows the signatures of the sureties and that they are solvent for the amount of the loan. However, for sureties not well known to the manager, the signatures must be attested by the clerk of court in that county.

3. That the preparation of a loan application has been changed from Director of Student Aid Ed Lanier's office to Manager of Loan Funds Harold Weaver's office. A student seeking financial aid will first come to the director of Student Aid for the possibilities of a scholarship, self-help job, or a grant-in-aid. If these assistances are not available to him and it is not advisable for him to take a self-help job, he is directed to the loan manager where application process begins.

Borrowing Encouraged

Cathey said a student is encouraged to borrow money rather than overload himself with self-help jobs. He added a student must have some time for recreation, activities and relaxation.

4. That a committee on Student Loan Fund has been established. This subcommittee meets at least once and sometimes twice a week during the regular term to consider and to approve loans. Members are W. A. Terrill of the Business School, chairman; Dr. Horace Crockford, Chemistry Dept.; J. A. Williams, University attorney; and Loan Manager Weaver. This group reports all actions to the University Scholarship Committee of 15 members.

Some debate had arisen in state newspapers that too much "red tape" discouraged borrowing from the Student Loan Fund. In January Governor Hodges issued a statement that his attention had been called to a backlog of unused student loan funds because the students were reluctant to borrow money.

Reserve Dwindling

However, Cathey said that more money is being loaned than accounts receivable for the same period which indicates the reserve is fast dwindling. The reason the committee is able to do this, Cathey explained, is because of the number of veterans repaying their loans after World War II and the Korean Conflict and also because of veteran school benefits which has reduced the requests for loans.

During the period from July 1, 1956 to Feb. 1, 1958, the total loaned out was $261,834.33 which included both long and short term loans. In the same period, total collections were $142,833.09. This is a difference of $119,001.24 between collections and loans.

Cathey also defended the "red tape" in securing a loan to impress the student "not to take it lightly." Also the Loan Fund is operated on a revolving plan and students "should feel the responsibility to repay his loan" to maintain the fund for future students.

He said that student should not feel reluctant to borrow from the fund for his education. "It's strange that when he graduates he doesn't hesitate to go through red tape and into debt for a new car."

The basic purpose of the Loan Fund is to provide aid to those students making "satisfactory

Y Discussion Continues

The YMCA-YWCA Publications Board announced today that the spring supplement of the Student-Faculty Directory is available for listribution.

The supplement, containing the names and addresses of new students and any address changes of the Fall Semester students, can be picked up free of charge at the YMCA office.

Don Herring, chairman of the YMCA Publications Board, stated that work has begun on the 1958-1959 Carolina Handbook. Members of the University administration are helping the Board to evaluate last year's edition.

The handbook was sent to all entering freshmen and transfer students. The publication was completely re-worked to give a more complete picture of the Carolina way of life. This work was made possible by a grant of $1200 from Student Government.

Report Of Fraternity Party Points To Need For Reform

Publicity about the Lambda Chi Alpha party early Sunday morning should go a long way toward bringing about needed reform in certain areas of social life at the University.

Unfortunate though it may have been, the publicity takes on a semblance of good in pointing out the obvious disrespect of social behavior and unconcern for the peace of others characteristic of most fraternities at UNC.

Despite the innocence of the Lambda Chi's, it does not sit well in the eves of the state that young college men and women are allowed to be "whooping it up" at 3 a.m. on a Sunday morning. We doubt that any parents of the parties concerned would endorse such practices.

Nor would shorty pajamas, in the public scrutiny, appear as mere tokens given to all the coeds at a fraternity pledge party. At least, they are suggestive; with Greek letters of a particular fraternity they are more so. And that is precisely how the public would view them.

Mix with the late hours and shorty pajamas a shot of whiskey, and the potent drink of misconduct and immorality is strong enough to make some wonder. It doesn't look good, and it isn't good for the University of North Carolina or the state as a whole.

Already national magazines have called officials here to get the lowdown on the so-called scandalous affair read about in the papers Sunday. What are they to say? That facts were misrepresented, but the University does permit parties until 3 a.m. that combine loud music, suggestive antics and liquor drinking?

Are they to answer that this was "just another party" which typifies social activity at the University? Or that the University takes no concern in student behavior once the final class bell has rung? Maybe they could say: this is outside our realm of authority.

Obviously, none of these answers would suffice. The truth is that the University's reputation has been forced to bear the brunt of public criticism through its permission (doubtful it may be) of such social functions involving UNC students. In the public's eye, no one is more to blame than the University.

But the University is not responsible for such activities. It has, in fact, relinquished that responsibility to student government which, through a system of courts, holds the control over student activities and possesses the power to punish those among us who have a disrespect for the law.

For too long now we have overlooked our responsibility as students to control social activities before they ever reach the state of violation. Instead, we have our parties and disturb the peace, hoping all the while that Ray Jeffries soon will not be there. Yet still he is kept busy performing a police job for student government.

In order to avert future adverse publicity on a nationwide basis, the time is ripe for stringent regulations to be placed on social functions at UNC lest we be represented as an isolated haven where mixed drinks, pajama parties and Sunday morning undress and intoxication are the general run of things. And if we don't discipline ourselves, we can be sure that someone else will.

Publicity which the Lambda Chi's received following their party Sunday undoubtedly has been unfair and unfortunate for the local fraternity. At the same time, however, it could provide the stimulus for needed reforms in our social behavior.

Subcommittee Members Should Hang Out Laundry

It ceases to be a matter of only Congressional significance when first a legal counsel is fired and then a chairman quits his post on a House subcommittee probing alleged misconduct in federal regulatory agencies.

Causes for such action demand at once public explanation through open hearings where everyone hangs out his laundry to be seen by the taxpayers. Then we'll see just where the misconduct is.

What we are referring to, of course, is first the firing of Dr. Bernard Schwartz and then the subsequent resignation of Chairman Morgan M. Mouldef of a subcommittee currently probing White House "influences" on the Federal Communications Commission.

Schwartz has asked that a public investigation be held to probe the actions of the subcommittee. Maybe they could create a sub-subcommittee to look into the matter, and if that doesn't work they can create a sub-sub-committee.

In time, the probers would be on about the same level as recent FCC official action has appeared to be.

Party Programs Good For Solons

It is indeed encouraging that both political parties at the University are conducting programs of explanation on key topics surrounding present and future campus life.

The Student Party inaugurated the practice recently when it invited Ray Jeffries, assistant to the dean of student affairs, to explain the pressing traffic problem here. It has since continued in the presentation of the programs.

The University Party now is participating in similar programs, starting last night with first an explanation and then discussion of the Honor Council bill proposed last week to the legislature.

Only through such self-informing practices can members of the respective political parties prepare themselves for intelligent action on bills when they come up for vote within the legislative body.

Not only do we applaud the parties for programs held thus far, but encourage them to continue the practices well into the future.

J. Y.'S JAZZ

Dance To Jazz Begins Return To Popularity

One of the most common misconceptions concerning jazz is that it cannot be danced to. The attitude of our current Germans committee towards bands such as Ellington and Gillespie is ample evidence of that fact; although Ellington was here in, I believe, the spring of 1955 and Armstrong in the winter of 1956, the recent attitude has been one of disbelief in the danceability of jazz. I have heard a number of records recently which only serve to strengthen my opinion that jazz is the best dance music there is, and that in other parts of the country people are finally discovering that fact.

The most notable of these records is a new Capitol release by the great Stan Kenton entitled "Rendezvous With Kenton" (T 932). The Kenton aggregation, which has long been considered an ultramodern outfit incapable of playing decent dance music — though it has been thriving on ball room fare for eighteen years now —comes through with the most danceable album of the year. The tempos are slow-medium, and the musicianship is excellent. Standout performers are alto saxophonist Lennie Niehaus and tenor Bill Perkins. The latter's lush, sensual, solo on "This Is No Laughing Matter" is final proof of this young man's great potential.

If the Kenton record is the most danceable of the year, the Duke's "Ellington Indigos" runs a close second. The album was made specifically for dancing purposes, and that it also succeeds as a musical experience is a reflection on the genius of Ellington, the master. Usually it is the section and solo work of Duke's sidemen which distinguishes the band, but on this recording it is the amazing piano skill of the man himself. His soulful work on "Solitude" and "Willow Weep For Me" in front of saxes and muted brass is describable only by that overworked adjective beautiful.

In previous columns I have alluded to an album by the Kai Winding Septet called "Trombone Panorama". Most of one of the disk is occupied by a long, informative, and very musical history of the trombone through the last fifty or more years, handled humorously and delicately by the group. There are, however, a number of first rate dance selections on the other side which lead me to believe that this group might be better than any other I know for a college dance. The rollicking "Preacher" is excellent for the physical exercise crowd, while "Come Rain Or Come Shine and "The Party's Over" are just what we lazier dancers want as the evening draws to a close. The musicianship is more than good; it is first-rate blowing. Get all three of these records, and I can guarantee that your dances won't drag—man, how could they?

"A Thousand Apologies, Gentlemen. He's A New Man"

Judicial Bill Needs Much Study

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

At the last Student Legislature meeting a bill was introduced to reconstitute the Men's and the Women's Honor Councils.

The bill provides for a single Honor Council which shall be "composed of five members and jury of nine students." The jury would declare a verdict and the council would declare "questions of law and questions of procedure," that is, act as judge.

The jurors except for two permanent members would be chosen from "a list of eligible jurors" who would be selected after interviews to determine their qualifications. The council would include both male and female students.

These points are only some of the more essential ones of the bill, and the bill includes much more than I have stated.

The principle of the bill, as I understand it, is to increase student participation in the Honor system. This end is achieved by having the seven non-permanent members of the jury.

Another purpose of the bill is to provide a single system of justice with respect to Honor Code Violations. Should a boy and a girl both be implicated in the same case, their trial under the proposed system would be fairer, I think.

The "potential jurors" will be selected "on the basis of interest, sincerity of purpose and competence." Therefore, in effect, this bill does not alter the principle of having a "closed" Honor Council, which is under the exclusive care of one limited group of students.

In other words, the "privileged" class (those now elected to the Councils) of administrators will be broadened though still existing as a special class.

(The care of the Honor System, however, is now and will remain as a responsibility of all students.)

It is obvious that the attributes the jurors must have in order to be selected are commendable ones. They would assure the smooth functioning of the new system.

However, a number of questions are raised. First, how many students are interested in being jurors and thereby giving up precious time?

Are not the attributes of "sincerity of purpose and competence" a more subtle way of saying, "Do you really abide by the Honor System and believe in the necessity of its existence?"

To me such a question implies that some students do not believe in the Honor System and do not follow it though it is quite probable that these students like the Honor System and its privileges and are themselves honest.

It is plain to see that, if a student serving as a member of the jury felt that it was all right to cheat, he would hardly pronounce another student guilty of that act.

So the problem comes to this conclusion — if all students believed in the Honor System, then without exception all should be required to be on the jury. (I assume there would still be one or two violators; otherwise, there would be no need for the jury.)

However, such a situation does not exist; consequently, it becomes necessary to "select" the jurors if the system is not to become a Justice which peeks from time to time.

The problem is more complex than just the selection of the jury. The fundamental questions are deeper than just the formation of an Honor Council. Ultimately, the basic point of argumentation may be, "Is an Honor System necessary, and if so, how effective can it be made?"

In conclusion it must be remembered that, considered in its entirety, the bill strives to increase student interest and participation in the administration of the Honor System and to provide a more equitable system of justice for all students.

For trying to make these corrections to the present Honor Councils the student community owes a great deal to Student Body Attorney-General Sonny Hallford and those who helped him write the bill.

I have examined only one aspect of this proposal. The ways and means committee of the Student Legislature must examine every fine point and its ramifications.

Then the Student Legislature will have to discuss the bill.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Tax Slashes Proposed For College Expenses

(Following is an extension of remarks made by Hon. Edwin H. May, Jr., of Connecticut, in the House of Representatives on February 6. He calls for tuition tax exemption for parents of college students.)

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring attention to H. R. 10548, a bill which I introduced yesterday. This bill, in effect, would provide a tax deduction up to $600 from gross income for any single year for parents who are financing the higher education of their children and for self-supporting individuals who are pursuing college-level work. Expenses for which such deduction would be allowed would include tuition payments and entrance fees.

If the Congress should see fit to pass this bill, I believe that it will be a significant accomplishment in our overall purpose to see that those who are capable of doing college-level work have the oppportunity to do so. Too often in the past have talented young people had to forego a college education because their parents have not been able to afford the costs involved. This bill will greatly relieve the financial strain on parents and will give added insurance that we do not waste the talents of our more capable young people.

It is a known fact that a high percentage of those in the upper half of their high school graduating classes do not go on to college. It is also known that a considerable number of them have the proper motivation but find that they are unable to go on because of financial reasons. When a person has the ability and desire to go on to college, it is a national disgrace that ways are not found to make it possible for that person to develop to his full potentially. Not to find such ways is to waste a natural resource, the utilization of which may very well determine the final outcome of the struggle between the forces of communism and freedom. On the other hand, even did this struggle not exist, it is high time that we made some effort to minimize the financial burden to parents at all income levels whose children are in college.

Although this is only one area requiring remedy in the field of education, it is, nevertheless, a most significant area. You will recall, Mr. Speaekr, that early in 1957, during the 1st session of the 85th Congress, I introduced H. R. 7037, which would grant to teachers a tax deduction up to $600 from gross income for any single year for expenses incurred in the pursuit of graduate studies. That bill and the one I now propose, are two very important steps we can take toward rectifying the many inequities in our system of education.

You are aware of my interest in education from my activity during the debate on the school-construction bill last year, at which time I offered an amendment. The bills herein mentioned are the result of a continuing study that I am making of the American education problem. I shall propose further legislative remedies in the near future.—The Congressional Record.

Letter To Editor

To The Editor:

In your editorial of February 6th you quote Governor Clement of Tennessee saying "I want them to leave us alone (meaning the North) in Tennessee and I'm going to leave them alone in their troubles. We must all try to learn to live in peace."

In America today—and on the international scene—a "leaving alone" policy is dangerous, destructive and deplorable. To achieve lasting and effective peace internally and internationally, we have to work together with good will and humility in trying to solve our problems.

Feeling the need for fellowship and brotherhood with all human beings in this world regardless of creed, color or race, I for one would plead: "Don't leave us alone but let us work together with understanding and love for the true peace which is based on our togetherness and dependence upon each other!"

Press Club Hears Charlotte Observer Promotion Manager Talk At Meet

The promotions department of a newspaper is a new and opportune agency, since a good newspaper is no longer a guarantee that it will be a financial success, David Henes, promotion manager of The Charlotte Observer told members of the Press Club Monday night.

Henes said that if a paper is good, it must say so; and this is a function of the promotion department.

The actual purpose of the promotion department is to increase the net profit of business of the paper through more advertising and circulation, he said.

In giving some advice to Press Club members about qualifications they should have for going into promotion work, Henes mentioned that ability, interest and willingness to spend time are significant.

MY CLOSEST SHAVE by Bill Bridgeman
Douglas Test Pilot

"My closest shave was during the first try at a speed record in the fantastic Douglas Skyrocket," says Test Pilot Bill Bridgeman, author of The Lonely Sky. "A special B-29 dropped me like a bomb at 30,000 feet . . . I turned on my rockets and climbed to 40,000 . . . when suddenly all power failed. Rocket power, cabin pressure, heat—everything went—and the window frosted over so I couldn't see. Finally I got the radio going on an emergency battery . . . and a pilot in a chase plane talked me down to a blind landing!"

Loan Fund Policy

progress" and needing financial assistance. "Students meeting these requirements are not turned down," he added.

237 Loans

In the period from July 1, 1956 to Feb. 1, 1958, there were a total of 237 loans granted to students of which 539 were long term and 376 were short term.

There were only 77 loans rejected during this period. They were turned down primarily because the requests were for non-educational purposes or not essential to keep the student in the University.

Here is a list of a few of the reasons why some were rejected: failing to maintain a minimum academic requirements for a loan, personal resources available but poorly managed, family financially able to finance education, to finance cost of automobile, wedding expenses, Christmas vacation and trips.

"We aren't in competition with commercial credit agencies. For that car, wedding or trip, we can't be of help. But if the need is an educational one, we'll be happy to make the student's application," Cathey said. "Our interest is not in making money, but helping those students who need help."

Long term loans have a flexible ceiling. Ordinarily, a medical or a dental student may borrow up to $2,500 during his entire curricula. Other students may borrow up to $1,500. Cathey said these figures have been lifted in cases where a student showed excellent progress and the addition would prevent his dropping from the University. On the other hand, students who have not shown satisfactory work have had their loans cut off before it reached the maximum.

More Lenient

Cathey said the Student Loan Fund here is "more lenient" than in other institutions. Some comparisons are:

1. Loans are made anytime during the year. Other schools set time limits when loans will be applied for and granted.

2. Loans are available to all students here who are worthy and are in need. Other schools require a student be an upper classman be from a certain area, or be of a certain religious faith.

3. Maximum amount of loan here exceeds the maximums of other institutions.

Numerous letters of appreciation are received by the committee from graduates when they repay their loans.

Heels Hit 8 To Win In Final Spurt

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Carolina's Tar Heels scored a field goal and six free throws in the last minute and a half here tonight, overcoming a one-point deficit and nipping Virginia's Cavaliers 73-66 in an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball game.

Despite their victory, the defending national and ACC champions didn't improve their conference standing. They now rank fourth with a 7-3 record behind Duke 8-2, Maryland 6-2 and N. C. State.

Virginia, which now has a 7-3 ACC mark, trailed by 40-37 at halftime but rallied after intermission and carried a 66-65 lead into the last minute and a half.

At that point, Bob Cunningham hit on a driving layup that sent the Tar Heels in front by 67-66.

Germans To Wear New Look

Mark Cherry, German Club president, stressed that all men attending the two day event would be required to wear dark suits. No one will be admitted in light suits.

Council Head Disagrees On One Proposal

Kit Whitehurst, chairman of Women's Honor Council, yesterday issued a statement supporting all but one provision of Honor Council revisions bill currently before Student Legislature.

This exception is the provision for joint Honor Council. She maintained that separate councils will best serve the purpose of a strengthened Honor system.

In summarizing her reasons for support of retaining separate councils, she said: "Separate councils will be able to hand down more just sentences based on more open testimony from the person accused.

Corrective

"Our Honor system is corrective as well as punitive, and to give a corrective sentence, the Council must necessarily know a great deal about the individuals who come before this body. I feel that certain facts in the individual cases would never be revealed before a joint council.

"I see no advantage in a joint council except in the administration, which in itself is not so important as the assurance of fair trials."

Supports Jury

Miss Whitehurst supported the jury provisions of the bill because she believed a jury would present the possibility of bringing students closer to the Honor system.

Miss Whitehurst has worked for several months with a group of students toward revisions for improving the presnt Honor Councils.

Philadelphia Show Features UNC Artist

The work of Robert Howard, sculptor in the UNC Department of Art, is included in the 153rd annual exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts in Philadelphia.

Contemporary American oil painting and sculpture is shown in the exhibition, designed to show a cross-section of current art throughout the nation.

The exhibit will remain in Philadelphia until Feb. 23, when it moves to Detroit where it will be on display at the Detroit Institute of Arts through April 13.

Another Howard sculpture, entitled "Landscape II," was recently purchased by the North Carolina Museum of Art and is now on exhibition at the Museum in Raleigh.

Howard is also included in an exhibition of contemporary sculpture organized by the Art Center, Kalamazoo Institute of Arts in Michigan, which is currently traveling to various colleges and galleries in Wisconsin and Michigan.

Kappa Rush Program Ends At Party Tonight

Kappa Kappa Gamma's rush program for the spring semester will be completed tonight with a party at the home of Mrs. Joseph D. Page, a Kappa alumna of Chapel Hill.

The second in a series of three parties was held last night in Smith parlour.

Bids to UNC coeds will go out probably on Friday.

Kappa Kappa Gamma, the new national sorority on campus, is in the process of ironing out certain problems connected with colonizing the Epsilon Gamma chapter here. The period of colonization will continue through this semester until the installation in the fall.

Sorority House

The securing of a house for the sorority is currently being attended to by Mrs. Frank Alexander, national director of chapters, who has been in Chapel Hill this week for the rush program.

Mrs. Alexander said yesterday that Kappa will definitely be able to move into a house by fall, and she hopes that the sorority will have a house ready by April.

The immediate problem of a place to hold weekly sorority meetings has been solved. These meetings will be held every Wednesday night at the home of a Chapel Hill girl, Sophie Martin, who is the undergraduate counselor for the sorority.

Socials

Social get-togethers will be held with the Duke chapter of Kappa Kappa Gamma in Durham. Other social activities will be held at home of local alumna.

Mrs. Alexander said that the sorority will be able to send only a limited number of bids because of the limited physical facilities.

GM SLATE

The following activities are scheduled for Graham Memorial today: Independent Women's Council, 5-6 p. m., Grail Room; UP Caucus, 6-7 p. m., Grail Room; Rules Committee, 3-5 p. m., Roland Parker 1; SP Caucus, 7-7:30 p. m., Roland Parker 1; GMAB, 4-5 p. m., Roland Parker 2; Chess Club, 7-11 p. m., Roland Parker 2; High School Honor Commission, 7-8 p. m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Finance Committee, 4-5 p. m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Tri-Iota, 9-11 p. m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Cavalcade of Talent, 4-5 p. m., Rendevous Room.

Campus Group Observes World Day Of Prayer

The annual World Day of Prayer will be observed on the Carolina campus Sunday, Feb. 16, under the sponsorship of the Campus Christian Council.

The local group plans to unite with the World Student Christian Federation in an international organization in celebration of the day which is set aside each year in honor of those working to spread Christianity among young people.

A special service at the Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church is planned for 7:45 p.m. on the day of the observance.

Y Discussion On Job Field Closes Today

The final discussion group on summer work will be conducted this afternoon in the Council room of the Y Building.

The discussion will emphasize summer work in the fields of international student work, in experiments in international living and in encampment for citizenship.

The sessions began Tuesday and are being sponsored by the Campus Christian Council in conjunction with the Y.

Taking Part

Participating in the sessions are students and members of the Y staff who have taken part in the type programs which are being discussed.

The purpose of the sessions are to provide information for interested students on the types of work, contacts and applications for entering the work.

Discrimination Issue Ends With Tie Vote

Should the University have the right to direct sororities and fraternities against discrimination? This question was debated by the Dialectic Senate Tuesday night in New West.

The bill for debate stated: The University should not enact or enforce any legislation which would infringe upon the rights of fraternities and sororities to discriminate.

Gerry Boudreau, president of the Senate, introduced the argument for the positive side. He said, "A fraternity is a private club, which should have the right to discriminate. Usually the discrimination is not because of race or religion."

The negative side argued that fraternities are an integral part of the University and therefore should be subject to restrictions.

The vote resulted in a tie, four-four.

Next Tuesday the topic will be, "Walter Reuther's Profit-Sharing Plan." The following Tuesday Dr. Frank Klingberg of the History Dept. will speak on, "The Effects of Southern Conservatism on Southern Progress."

Graduation Invitations

The Order of the Grail announces that senior graduation invitations will be on sale in Y Court today and Friday from 9 a. m. to 2 p. m. Members of the Grail will assist seniors in selecting invitations and cards.

Senator Outlines Ten Point Program

Law-Makers Vote For Single Council

Move To Separate Court Voted Out

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Student Legislature accepted a single Honor Council for all students last night.

The body defeated by a vote of 27-13 an amendment to have separte councils for men and women. At the close of the meeting the Student Legislature had discussed and acted on the first two articles of the bill to revise the Honor Councils.

Debate began after Gary Greer introduced for the Chairman of the Men's Honor Council an amendment to retain two judicial systems separated on the basis of sex.

Under his proposal the Women's Honor Council would continue to try social violations but the composition of the jury and the council of five would remain as specified in the bill.

Hugh Patterson, a member of the Men's Honor Council, asked the Legislature to consider the problem with regards to reality. He cited the problem of getting the offender to reveal all the testimony before a mixed administration.

He asserted that members of one's own sex would be better able to judge an offender. As each case is considered singlely, he said that "maybe unity in sentences is not a problem after all."

Claiming the students live in a "special" society, Ragsdale did not favor duplicating the civil law courts. He said that it is difficult to render a just sentence unless all of the intimate details are known.

"Entirely Punitive"

If a man was reluctant to speak he said that it was posible to read [illegible] that was only "just on paper." He said that all was not known then the system might be "entirely punitive."

Gary Greer (SP), who said he did not favor the amendment he introduced, claimed that a single court provided" the greatest degree of justice." He said that the offender was a boy or girl but the question was not whether an other they cheated.

Charlie Huntington, chairman of the Honor System Commission, said that question concerned the ability of the council to handle Honor violations rather than social rule violations.

He claimed that the bill did not necessarily point to a civil court system. The offender must have complete confidence in these hearing the case, he said.

Unity of justice

He said he did not believe there would be many matters which would not be fought out before a mixed council. Defending a single council, he stated that it would provide a unity of justice and the would be more just.

Nancy Adams, a member of the Women's Honor Council, claimed that those cases which were closely connected to the personal lives of the offender were the majority of those cases which came before the Woman's Honor Council.

She said she did not believe that students of different sexes were qualified to judge each other because they were not familiar with the conditions under which the other six lived.

John Brooks (SP) claimed that people would admit facts to mitigate their sentences. He suggested that the Legislature consider the majority of cases and accept the fundamental principle of having a single council.

Sonny Hallford, student body attorney general, asked that the legislature see how a joint system would operate. Dot Pressly secretary of student body said that the judgement depended on the individual rathe than whether the person was male or female.

She favored a single council.

Humphrey Talk Opens Conference

The eighth annual World Affairs Conference, opened last night with a speech by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn), gained momentum today.

Natives of six foreign nations who are currently studying or working at UNC will participate in a panel session of the conference.

Moderated by Chancellor Emeritus Robert B. House, the panel will discuss the conference's central theme, "Mutual Understanding in the Nuclear Age" this morning.

A full day for discussion sessions has been scheduled for today. Five discussions have been scheduled which center around the "Mutual Understanding" theme.

Leaders of the discussions will be: Dr. John Gulick, UNC anthropologist, "Middle East-Uneasy Truce; Dr. Wiley D. Forbus, Duke Medical School pathologist, "The United States and the Far East;" McNeill Smith, Greensboro attorney, "Delicate Friendships-A Struggle to Win the Uncommitted Nations;" and Dr. Paul Marrotte, Davidson College historian, "Current Streams in American Foreign Policy."

The six natives of foreign nations who will compose the panel are Jean Pierre Boissavit, law graduate of Bordeaux, France; Tawfik Tassan, an Egyptian working for a master's degree in regional planning; Miss Midori Sasaki, Hiroshima, Japan, graduate student in English education; Miss Sylvia Hinnom, refugee from Estonia who is bibliographer for the Medical School's Pathology Department; and Miss Sipra Bose, native of Calcutta, India, who is a Carolina undergraduate and Dr. William L. Barton, British senior medical officer from Zanzibar, now in the

Furtado To Assume Votes Post

Robert Furtado, a junior from Garner, has been named chairman of the Elections Board by Student Boby President Sonny Evans.

"Bob Furtado brings to the Elections Board chairmanship two years of experience and a conscientious and outstanding job," Evans commented.

"His integrity is unquestionable, and he is a person of excellent ability and sincere leadership," Evans concluded.

Furtado will be filling a position which was vacated by the resignation of Arty Sobel, a senior from Neponsit, N. Y.

The new chairman is a member of Phi Gamma Delta social fraternity and Alpha Phi Amega service fraternity. In the past he has served with the Elections Board, the Audit Board and the Glee Club.

An Arts and Sciences major in English, Furtado is a Naval ROTC Regular.

Phi Approves Labor Laws

The Philanthropic Literary Society passed a bill approving "right-to-work" laws Tuesday night, 9-7.

A vote of both members and guests ended in a 11-11 tie.

Rep. Don Jacobs, selected the evening's outstanding speaker, declared. "The right to work is a vital part of the constitutional right to live. I plead for the future of our country—that unborn Americans shall have the inalienable right to work."

Joel Fleishman, ex-president of the Di, said he had forsaken his own society's meeting for the second time in six years to speak out against this bill.

Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee Warren Coolidge introduced the bill and related how "monster-like" big business was brought under public control. He continued, "Now the monster of trade-unionism must be destroyed."

Rep. Tom Long refuted Coolidge's charge of corruption in unions in saying, "Communism and corruption is not typical—they are the exception."

The Phi's guest critic, Dr. William L. Ivey of the department of economics, praised the debaters for hitting both the logical and emotional arguments that are used in discussions of this topic.

Atomic Age Tactics Is Conference Topic

By DAVE JONES

Senator Hubert H. Humphrey opened the eighth annual Conference on World Affairs last evening in Hill Hall before a capacity audience and the cameras of WUNC-TV. His topic was Mutual Understanding in the Nuclear Age.

"America's foreign policy needs the inspiration of Works of Peace—not merely words of peace," Declared Senator Humphrey, as his main point.

"Before we can expect to reach lasting agreements with the Soviet Union on such fundamental issues as arms control and political settlements, mutual confidence must be built up through the acceleration of private and public contacts on all levels, for building better international relations involves more than action by government alone."

"Each of these people-to-people contacts contributes to the total impression which the United States makes abroad. Let us accept the challenge of competitive co-existence—but let us be sure to compete," the Senator urged.

Senator Humphrey went on to set forth "the essential elements of a revitalized foreign policy for the United States based on Works of Peace." He called for:

1. Marshalling and expanding our resources of science and engineering—not only pooling of NATO efforts, but also the 'vast untapped source of collective strength here in the two American continents."

2. [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] ed concept of massive retaliation."

3. While keeping our guard up, also keeping open the bridges of possible agreement with the Soviets on specific terms.

Quick Results Fetal

4. Adopting a "long-range perspective" on the world. "It will be fatal," Senator Humphrey warned, if we insist on quick results" in foreign policies.

5. Breaking out of the holding operation atmosphere of our present policy.

6. Respecting the neutrality of new born nations. "They are not pro Soviet, they are pro themselves."

7. Making greater use of our economic strength. "At the moment the Soviet is increasing while this country is lagging."

Expand U. N. Assistance

8. Stepping up our Point Four Program of technical assistance and helping to expand UN technical assistance programs. "In NATO, he said, "we should be thinking in terms of Coordinating technical assistance and economic aid programs for the underdevelopped areas."

9. More active, constructive and imaginative use of our food and fiber bundance.

10. Continuous exploitation of "all possibilities for agreements to control armaments."

Rush Manual Editor Soon To Be Selected

Union girls have been reminded that the deadline for applying for rush manual editor is Wednesday, Feb. 19.

Before this time, any interested girl must submit a "dummy" containing her suggested theme for the manual and any suggestions for improvements. This "dummy" must be turned in to Mrs. Martha Deberry, whose office is on second floor, South Building.

Interviews with girls will be held after the Feb. 19 deadline for applications.

Correction

Paddy Wall, member of the Women's Honor Council, was incorrectly quoted in Tuesday's Daily Tar Heel as saying that she knew of "a single case" where boys and girls had been implicated with different sentences being handed down.

What Miss Wall said that she did not know of one case.

Warning: Check Cuts

Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, yesterday issued a warning to students to find out what their instructors are requiring in regards to class attendance.

Since the new ruling on class attendance has been placed primarily on a student-instructor basis, students are responsible for attendance regulations from all instructors, he said.

"The [illegible] each class in the hands of the instructor of that class," Dr. Godfrey said.

Since it is likely that the instructors will vary in the requirements they make of the student, he continued, "Students will be well advised to find out from their instructors what requirements they intended to make for class attendance.

Academic Obligations

"Beyond this precaution, students should keep in mind the fact that the present policy rests upon their maturity and responsibility in meeting their academic obligations."

Under the new class attendance ruling, there will be no excuses given for any reason. However, certain provisions have been made to take care of circumstances that would ordinarily merit excuses.

Students who must be absent for legitimate extra-curricular activities will have their names on lists in the director of student activties office.

Extra-Curricular

Sam Magill, director of student activities, said yesterday his office will no longer make recommendations for excuses, but he has requested that all student extra-curricular organizations submit lists of students who are forced to miss classes because of out-of-town or local responsibilities.

This information will be on hand for the benefit of all deans. Under the new class atendance ruling, the instructor turns the name of a student in to his dean when the instructor thinks the student has cut excessively or has missed three classes in a row.

In the latter case, the dean will be able to take into consideration the reason for the absences.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Judicial Bill Amendment Could Improve Proposal

We already have endorsed the one-court system proposed by a bill now pending before the legislature for equal administration of justice under the Honor Code. Today we want to show how such a system could work even though, as some argue, a coed might tend to restrain testimony before a mixed court.

Take, for instance, a case cited by a member of the women's Honor Council who favors a two-court system. It involves plagarism by a coed who, it was made known in the course of her trial, was pregnant and without a husband.

The Women's Honor Council, finding the coed guilty of plagarism, took into consideration the girl's pregnancy and put her on probation instead of suspending her from school. The reason: she was in her final semester as a student and probably never again would have the opportunity to complete her education.

It was, we believe, a fair judgment. But it is one which the two-court system proponents argue might never have been rendered under the one-court system since, in the presence of the mixed council, the coed would have been reluctant to admit to the pregnancy. And under present proposals that might be true.

But let's amend current proposals to show how, in the interest of justice under the one-court system, the pertinent testimony could have been made known despite the presence of male jurors and male council members.

First, the purpose of the jury under the proposed one-court system is solely to determine whether the defendant is guilty as charged. In the above instance, its only duty would have been to determine the coed's guilt or innocence of the plagarism charge. The second factor, the pregnancy, would not have concerned the jury. It therefore could have been retained from the jury and made known to the council alone.

The allowance for ready admission of such factors to the council is where in lies the need for amendment to the one-court proposal as it now exists. This should be effected if our legislators and our judiciary are sincere in their efforts to protect the individual from embarassment while at the same time employing all pertinent data to render a fair judgment.

Here is the amendment: Set up the one-court council so as to allow for three women members in cases where a coed is on trial. This would retain two male members for the trial. When a male is on trial, revert the practice and have three male and two female council members.

Then proceed with the hearings. When the jury has rendered its decision on the charge as stated, dismiss the jury and then let the council consider all data which for some reason might have an influence on its decision. Take, for instance, the fact of pregnancy in the aforementioned case.

Obviously, the presence of two males on the council would again, if we accept the two-court system proponents' arguments, influence testimony of the defendant. Here is where the amendment lies, with an eye to protecting the individual but yet allowing full benefit of pertinent data:

The defendant could make known to a female member of the council that personal circumstances exist which she would prefer not discussing before the male members of the council. Upon such notice, the male members could dismiss themselves to permit open discussion between the existing members—and, incidentally, the majority—of the council.

When testimony before the women members was completed, the defendant could be dismissed and the male council members re called for a full council discussion of the personal data. The decision of judgment then could be made and reported by the council to the defendant. And a fair trial would have been insured, by virtue of the majority of female members on the council.

This, at least, is a suggestion for those who believe in the one-court system. We believe it pacifies the arguments of two-court proponents and offers a workable plan for those advocates of the one-court proposal who are willing to compromise.

After all, compromise is the key to our present system of government.

Gimmick Seen In Postal Hikes

Well, the gimmick has finally been exposed in the administrative proposal for increased postal rates. It appears, after all, to be a profit-making deal.

You'll remember that after Summerfield closed post office doors once last summer he began an urgent campaign for increased rates in order to make ends meet within the postal department. Either give us more money, he said, or we'll stop delivering on Saturdays.

The campaign hit high gear when President Eisenhower, in his State of the Union address, proposed that three cent stamps be hiked to five cents thus providing the additional revenue needed to run the postal department—in the black, that is.

So now, the nation experiences an economic slump, millions are unemployed, and the President proposes a $2 million program "to modernize post offices and postal services." It would, Press Secretary Hagerty said, "afford greater job opportunities in every section of the country."

The only thing wrong with the program is that—if Ike can be believed—the current employment slump will be over long before the President's proposal could be approved by the Congress. Then we'd have another $2 billion program to finance at a time when the government is already spending in the red, and there would be no reason for government action to raise employment—after all, it will pick up in March.

The real gimmick, however, lies in the way which the administration would finance the program. You guessed it—through the increase in postal rates—a tax on every widow, orphan and little businessman in the nation.

If the administration wants to modernize post offices and the postal department, we suggest that it so state in its request for additional funds instead of citing the lack of resources for paying the mailman as reason for closing down post offices on Saturday. If they want money to carry out a renovation program that's one thing; if they need it to get the mail to the poorest citizens, then that's another.

It would appear to us that improvement of federal edifices could wait until improvements in the nation's economy, which might then supply the revenue for the job. Meanwhile, let's keep on sending three-cent letters.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Conformity Is Defended Here By Conformist

By Whit Whitfield

During the past few years the favorite topic of the writers on college papers has been conformity. You've read it until you're sick of it, but this is a new twist. We'd like to defend conformity. We might as well; we're victims of it.

We conform. Why? We have to, if we don't, we're dead. How many non-conformits are successful? How many non-conformists are well liked? Right! None. How much chance does a beard, a ducktail, pegged pants, or dungarees have in a society of conformists? Right again. None.

How far can a person go if he expenses opinions that are contrary to those of his peers? As far as the next country if he's lucky.

So, we conformists are faced with self presevation, the oldest of man's common laws. It's either conform or be annihilated, so if you can't beat 'em, join 'em.

Mr. Conformer or Mr. Averageman is typically like this:

He goes to whatever church is the largest in his neighborhood.

He reads Life, Look, Time, you know, the type mags in the dentist's office.

He reads the sports section and the funnies, sometimes the rapes and murders if he has time. (He is always busy.)

He wears whatever is fashionable, regardless of how many old clothes he has in his wardrobe.

His favorite interests are channel 5, channel 2, channel 11, and Poker. (In that order.)

This is the man whom the writers propounding non-conformity constantly harass. Why? He hasn't done anything—nothing at all. He never does; he never will. Why bother him?

If you ever get the chance, look at the writer on non-conformity. He dresses like the rest of us. You can't blame him. He wants to live, too. You'll find him watching TV, at a flick, or criticizing Luce's handiwork.

He has to enjoy the worldly pleasures too. He's human. The fact that he is following the trend in college writing by writing on the same topic (and conforming meanwhile) doesn't bother him-he's a non-conformist.

God Bless Conformity.

"I Hear We're In A—Puff Puff—Breathing Spell"

COMES FROM VENEZUELAN

Jimenez Appraisal Draws Fire

Dear Miss Greenfield:

I hate to argue with you because I heard you are one of the prettiest girls on the campus, and I would like very much to escort you to the "jungle" when you go back to Venezuela. Being a student here, as you are, I suppose that you know that a jungle is, by definition, an impenetrable thicket or tangled mass of vegetation and that with the knowledge you boasted to have about my country, you ought to know that all the population of Venezuela dwells in the mountains and plains regions. As you may soon day discover, the jungle is an uninhabited region, unless we take into consideration the very few tribes of savages that live there.

According to your letter to the editor which appeared last Tuesday in this newspaper, it seems that the fathers of the constitution were mistaken when, in 1789, they tried to secure the blessing of liberty by establishing a democratic government to govern the rules of rural society which the United States was at the time; and that only adult societies, not those which, as you say, are in the state of adolescence, have the right to be ruled by democratic governments. I wonder what the prestige of the United States would be in the world, should the rulers of the U. S. always follow the ideas expressed by you in your letter and which you seem to be so fond of.

From the scarce knowledge that I have of United States history, and from what I have read in American newspapers about the recent political events in Venezuela, I infer that fortunately most of your fellow citizens do not share either your ideas or your sympathies toward the ex-dictator's regime. It is true that we have not had a "history of democracy" as you mentioned in your letter; it is also true that we have had many dictators in my country, but if you have ever read our history, you would know that our people have carried on a continuous and never-ending struggle for freedom since the time it obtained its independence, when it gave freely in its blood to help four other brother countries obtain theirs. These are our democratic traditions, and following them, my people, unarmed, lavished again their blood in the streets of Caracas and other cities to regain the freedom that was taken away from them nine years ago by your beloved Perez Jimenez.

According to your letter, a good government would be that which maintains good relations with the United States, and which is able to carry on a wide range of public projects. Without any doubt, the relations among our peoples were not better during Perez Jimenez's dictatorial regime than they were before it or than they are today. Besides, I can assert that neither the students nor the professors, doctors, lawyers, engineers, businessmen, laborers, farmers, clergymen and, in general, all the people who took in the riots against Perez Jimenez, would use the same yardstick you use to appraise the fitness of a ruler. Even Jimenez's companions were against him.

You say that my father's criticism of ex-president Marcas Perez Jimenez has been one-sided. You are right, my dear girl, because in Venezuela there are two sides. On one side is Perez Jimenez, and on the other, the people. The latter side is the one and the only one to which my father belongs, which is the reason why his opinon might be said to be one-sided.

I regret that our people have so unnimously shown their feelings against the ideal type of president which you have chosen for us, that is to say; Perez Jimenez.

Hoping that your ideas concerning the type of government we should have will someday change, and sincerely looking forward to meeting you, I am, respectfully,

Martin Perez, Jr.

French Aristocrat Looked Into Future

"There are, at the present time, two great nations in the world which seem to tend toward the same end, although they started from different points," wrote Alexis de Tocqueville 125 years ago. "I allude to the Russians and the Americans . . ."

The young French aristocrat, examining strengths and weaknesses of democratic institutions, was startlingly prophetic. He recognized, even in 1832, that a democracy is most vulnerable in the field of foreign policy; it must hammer out its decisions for its own citizens and all the world to see. In the process it can tolerate little secrecy; its people are inclined to blow hot and cold — demanding too much armament one minute and not enough the next. "If the Supreme Court is ever composed of imprudent men or bad citizens the Union may be plunged into anarchy or civil war," wrote de Tocqueville of another important facet of American government.

But de Tocqueville's comments about the relations of the 20th century's two goliaths—the United States and Russia—are appropriate for the New Year, a time of summing up and prediction:

All other nations seem to have nearly reached their natural limits, and only to be charged with the maintenance of their power; but these are still in the act of growth. All the others are stopped, or continue to advance with extreme difficulty; these are proceeding with ease and celerity along a path to which the human eye can assign no term. . . . The Anglo-American relies upon personal interest to accomplish his ends and gives free scope to the unguided exertions and common sense of the citizens. The Russian centers all the authority of society in a single arm. The principal instrument of the former is freedom, of the latter, servitude. Their starting points are not the same. Yet each of them seems to be marked out by the will of heaven to sway the destinies of half the globe . . .

How prophetic, indeed, for a philosopher writing 125 years ago — long before the final triumph of the industrial revolution, long before two world wars or the Red Revolution, long before sputnik and the confrontation of the two giants, glaring at each other across the rim of the seas.

What would de Tocqueville write today if he could see the fulfillment of his 19th century prophecies?

Would he note that the United States, under the impetus of the New Fair Deal and Modern Republicanism, has moved a good distance from its reliance on "personal interest to accomplish (its) ends" and toward Soviet statism?

Would he note, as well, certain capitalistic tendencies in the Soviet Union where all comrades are equal but some are more equal than others, a certain leavening process at work as the Russian people demand more butter with their guns?

Would de Tocqueville forsee continuing "competitive coexistence" in a world where push button soon will control the "balance of terror"? Or would he predict that conflict between these two "giants is inevitable, that one must, after the nature of things, ultimately attempt to destroy the other? Nobody can be sure.

Yet there is considerable room for hope. De Tocqueville's observant eye would not overlook other emerging potential giants on the world scene — the massive Chinese Red Republic teeming with undeveloped power, India fast flowering after years of colonialism. Even in Europe itself de Tocqueville, as a Frenchman, would be forced to admit that a recovered Germany is a power to be reckoned with and has not been smothered even while losing two mighty wars.

So while the United States and Russia eye each other uneasily across their empire boundaries, other factors are to be reckoned with. Perhaps the decisive act of leadership will turn on which power bloc most effectively wins the uncommitted nations. In this struggle the tyrants of the Kremlin have made astounding progress despite all kinds of obstacles (i.e., Hungary, Zhukov et al.)

Whether an aroused free world can provide that spark of imagination, that concentrated will to win will determine the outcome.

An elderly colored man, called before the justice of the peace, was charged with keeping a vicious dog.

Mother—Why, that dog bit my little girl Mary three times.

Judge—Did your dog bite little Mary Jones?

Colored Man—No suh, no suh. My dog, he never bit any little girl.

Judge (to mother)—Well, this man says the dog didn't bite your little girl.

But the man interrupted:

Colored Man—In the first place the dog is so old he ain' got no teeth and he can't bite. In the second place the dog is blind and couldn't see Mary, anyhow. In the third place the dog is deaf and can't hear a thing and in the fourth place he ain't my dog in the first place.

Jim Raugh Begins Training In Lakeland, Fla.

Jim Raugh, one of the finest pitchers in Carolina baseball history, is beginning his second season in professional ball in a few days.

The 6-1½ twirler from Rosemont, Pa., who got his sheepskin here last June, left yesterday for Lakeland, Fla. where he'll begin working with a host of other young prospects in the Detroit Tigers spring training headquarters.

"All the big boys will be there watching us," Jim commented the other day. "Tighe, (Jack Tighe, Detroit manager) all his coaches and top scouts and some of the fellows who played with Detroit last season will be there with us. The rest of the Tigers will be down on the 27th."

Unless big Jim does exceptionally well during the two weeks period, he'll be moving on to Ocala, Fla. for a few week's practice before he joins Birmingham in the Southern Association, probably the top AA league in the country. The Southern Assn. season opens on April 11.

Outstanding Collegiate Record

Raugh, as most Carolina fans know, signed with Tiger scout Rick Ferrell, a former Detroit star, just after graduation last year. Jim left behind a tremendous hurling record at Carolina. During four years competition, three with the varsity, he won 25 and lost 12 and had one of the top earned run marks in the league each year.

Jim's work as a junior and senior won him All-Conference honors for two years and his 7-3 record plus a 1:98 earned run average last year was good enough for second string All-American recognition.

Jim pitched for Durham in the class B Carolina league last summer where he compiled a 7-4 mark and was among the league's ERA elite with a 2:13 average. In college, he was always right at the top of the strikeout list. With Durham he fanned 68 while walking only 34 in 108 innings.

That low total of 34 walks means as much to baseball authorities as his strikeout accomplishments. His Durham manager, Bobby Mavis had this to say of Raugh: "Jim has fine potential. He always knows exactly where the ball is going. He's always calm out there and seems to have command of the situation. I'm looking for him to do real well in baseball." Mavis, incidentally, recommended Jim for higher ball after only three weeks at Durham last season.

There's nobody around that cares to deny Jim as a boy who lives the game of baseball. It's pretty common knowledge that he isn't exactly a pauper, so money played a very incidental part in his decision to go into pro ball. Jim just naturally loves to play baseball.

Walt Rabb, Jim's coach here, will tell you pronto that he's dedicated to the game. Rabb has often remarked that Jim was always in condition and ready to pitch.

Every compliment that Rabb pays Raugh, however, Jim can double in favor of Rabb. "I owe coach Rabb more than I can ever say," Jim says with a sort of reverence. "He's done so very much for me that I'll never know how to thank him. He's always been patient with me and has taught me everything he could about the game."

Coach and protege have been working out here for the last month or so and Jim says he's in real good shape. "I'm down to about 192 now and I think that'll be my playing weight. I was a little light when I was pitching college ball," he says. (he stayed at about 185 in college).

How does Jim himself feel about jumping from class B to AA ball in one season?

"I realize it's a big jump," he says, "but I'm in good shape now and I'm going down to Florida and do my very best. I think I have enough confidence and if I give it everything I've got and still don't make it, I'll know I'd better do something else."

Raugh is philosophical and realistic about his baseball career. "I made up my mind I was going to give pro ball three or four years to see if I have it. By then, Detroit will know and so will I.

"Baseball has been good to me," Jim continued. "I've always been fortunate, especially at Carolina, to have had a strong defensive club behind me. While at Carolina, we were always real strong down the middle and I attribute any success I've had to that and my coach."

As a parting shot we asked Jim what he considered his greatest thrill in baseball; he listed three.

When he was pitching for Haverford Prep School in Pennsylvania, he once pitched 16 innings and won it, 1-0. Not a man reached base until the 11th inning in that one.

Jim also recalls his freshman year here when he went 13 innings against Wake Forest and won 2-1. That summer at Nova Scotia he won another one, 2-1 and this one went 17 innings.

"But probably my greatest thrill," Jim recounts" was that game against State last year. That was one we remembered. Carolina was tied with the Wolfpack for second place behind Duke with two games to go. Duke had already finished the season and Carolina had to beat State and Maryland in order to tie Duke for the conference title. An NCAA berth was hanging in the balance.

The Tar Heels carried a 2-1 lead into the top of the second inning when rain caused a 45-minute postponement. State came back in the third to tie it 2-2. But Carolina got one in the fourth and Raugh bore down to throttle the Wolfpack the rest of the way and Carolina won it, 3-2. As it turned out, Carolina lost the Maryland game and Duke won the title, but Raugh had certainly done his part.

So Raugh is embarking upon a career in the cruel and cold world of professional baseball. Most observers feel he can make it. Whether he does or not, Jim Raugh will go down pitching because baseball's his game.

Deacons In 7th Place; UNC Could Move Up

By BILL KING

WINSTON-SALEM — Since way back on January 4th Bones McKinney and his Wake Forest Deacons have been marking time until they could get another crack at Frank McGuire's Carolina Tar Heels. That opportunity comes tonight in Memorial Coliseum here at 8 o'clock.

McKinney and his young team have ample reason for wanting that "second chance" because in their first chance they failed miserably to the tune of 71-45 in Woollen Gym. That was the night that ACC scoring leader Pete Brennan dropped in 32 points and hustled 22 rebounds to lead his club to a dull victory over the Baptist Hollow club.

2-7 Record

Wake Forest would also like to improve its 2-7 conference record, a mark which has the Deacs right on the brink of the Atlantic Coast Conference cellar, one half game ahead of South Carolina. Also, the Baptists have won but five of 16 games all year and a win tonight would gain Wake Forest a lot of prestige.

But McGuire, his broad Irish smile still intact, has a pretty good reason to want this one too. Namely, to get his club out of that dangerous fourth place in the conference standings and to make things a little tougher for Duke, N. C. State and Maryland, currently one, two, three in the standings.

Thus, it will be Carolina, battling to get back into the thick of the scramble for first place in regular season competition versus Wake Forest, trying desperately to avoid replacing South Carolina at the bottom of the conference heap.

Close Call Ahead

Carolina won't be taking this one lightly, especially since the close call provided the Tar Heels by fifth place Virginia Tuesday night. The Tar Heels were just barely able to pull that one out in the final two minutes.

Tonight the Tar Heels will be facing one of the best hustling teams in the conference—Wake proved that in the Dixie Classic but have been a disappointment since then. McKinney still figures Carolina is the team to beat for the ACC championship but the Deacon mentor firmly believes his Deacs can beat the Tar Heels.

"We gave a miserable performance when we played at Chapel Hill," McKinney says. "Our defense did a poor job on Pete Brennan, and we didn't do much in the rebounding department."

Starting Sophs

In all probability the starting lineup for tonight's battle will include no less than six sophomores, three from each team. For the Deacs it will probably be sophs Dave Budd, George Richie and Charlie Forte along with junior Olin Broadway and Senior Wendell Carr.

McGuire will probably start his three outstanding sophs, Harvey Salz, Lee Shaffer and Dick Kepley. In addition, Brennan and Tommy Kearns, third high scorer in the conference will be ready for the 8 o'clock tipoff.

An interesting feature is that the game will feature five of the ACC's top 12 scorers. They are: Brennan (20.2), Kearns (17.1), Budd (15.8), Shaffer (14.2) and Broadway (13.3).

A preliminary tilt between the Wake and Carolina frosh is set for 6 o'clock.

Frosh Play Deaclets In Prelim

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's hot and cold Tar Babies, losers of three of their last four games, travel to Baptist Hollow tonight to meet the Baby Deacs of Wake Forest in the preliminary to the varsity scrap between the two schools.

These teams have met twice before, both times back in January. On Jan. 4, the Tar Babies squeezed out a close one in Chapel Hill 76-72. On the 11th the frosh had better luck in Winston as they won it going away 72-52.

Wake Forest features a slow, deliberate team, but they can run and they have the machinery to do it. With 5' 11" Al Hart at one of the guards, the Baby Deacs have a potential fast break throughout any given game.

Record

Although the Tar Babies season slate is heavily balanced in the win column at 9-5, they have had difficulty against Big Four foes all season. Their record against in-state schools is only 2-6, including three losses to both State and Duke.

Since joining the squad in January, Lou Brown has come into his own as a star and has stamped himself as the "take-charge" guy for the freshmen. Brown canned 33 against ACC last week.

The Tar Babies are averaging 78.3 points per game against an opponent average of 68.8. This ten-point average spread has diminshed some what as a result of recent losses.

Navy Drops Its Anchor Into Fashion With Chemise & Predominant Blues

By JOAN BROCK

Once again the navy has thrown its anchor into the fashion world. This spring the predominant color will be blue—any shade of blue—ranging from delicate, pale tints to the deeper shades of true Mediterranean Blue.

These shades will find themselves appropriately displayed in some type of chemise ensemble—the principal feature of the coming season.

The chemise look introduces carefree and relaxed lines into the spring wardrobe and announces a design that appears, almost deceptively, shapeless. It is often referred to as the "sack" or 'bag" creation.

Middy Design

A member in good standing of the chemise family is the middy design—taken directly from the nautical world. This member of the chemise family will probably be more prevalent in the college coed's wardrobe than any of the other numerous designs.

The middy effect features an elaborate collar, generously enfolding the shoulders, and a contrasting tie to accent the neckline. With its free and easy ways, the middy is designed to lend only a faint suggestion of a waist and to emphasize the new fit-line—the hipline.

The chemise look also finds expression in the nautical-lined chemise-dress, the pleated skirt ensemble or the bloused-top dress or suit.

The chemise-dress will reveal a standaway or belt-threaded jacket to accent the simplicity of the column lines. Box pleats, telescoped pleats, cluster pleats and double pleats will highligt the pleat-acitivity this spring.

Shorter Skirts

The bloused-top dress or suit will be accompanied by a shorter skirt—two inches than last year. With its lines triangling toward the hem, the chemise will add a casual note to the fashion parade and will grace the hipline as it accents the new hemline.

The most important thing to remember when selecting a chemise is that the shorter it is the better it will look. Leading designers have suggested a point just below the knee as the proper length for the new creation.

Coeds Speak Out

Crew Neck Sweaters, Back Buckle Are 'Must' For Carolina Gentlemen

Whether you are clothed in a name brand shirt or coat, or whether you are wearing the latest combination as advertised in Esquire seems unimportant to the Carolina coed—as long as you appear in a crew neck sweater and a buckled back.

The majority of coeds questioned agreed that the average Carolina "Gentleman" is neatly and appropriately dressed for most occasions. However, several suggestions and preference were stated by members of the "fairer sex" on campus.

HARRIET SCHAFER of Mount Airy suggested several outfits for various occasions: "For informal dates, I prefer either khaki or flannel pants and crew neck sweaters with Ivy League sport shirts. For dress-up occasions, I like suits (moderate colors please) or sport coats with conservative ties. My pet peeve is blue jeans!"

ANN SLACK of Rome, Ga., admires tailored clothes. "There is nothing more pleasing than to see a boy in simple, well-tailored clothes, dressed according to the occasion. Extreme Ivy League is not necesary, but the clothes should look like they are made for him."

Several coeds mentioned color schemes and combinations. MARY WALTON of Morganton said: "On the whole, boys at UNC dress well, but some of them can come up with some pretty weird combinations. I like to see boys wear subdued colors —especially shades of brown. Please, no more pink or orange!"

JANE POWELL of Troy added her opinion: "I like for boys to wear light blue cardigans or any color crew neck sweater (but red and organge with charcoal wool pants. Boys at UNC usually dress nice, except for individuals who show up in striped pants and loud, checked shirts."

LENE ALSTON of Littleton admires white shirts: "For class wear, I like dark, crew neck sweaters and Ivy League pants. I love white monogrammed shirts anytime. For special dates, I prefer plain plants and the new tweed or striped sports coats over white shirts. A tie helps a lot!"

JEAN HOPKINS of Elizabeth City is also concerned with color combinations. "I am very definitely an Ivy League fan. However, it's nice to see a boy in a shirt and tie every now and then. The majority of Carolina boys dress very well, but some of them should watch their color combinations more closely."

Several coeds expressed the idea that "clothes don't make the man," and placed other qualifications first.

ANNE MILLER of Winston-Salem said: "A really attractive boy always outshines the clothes he wears. When I'm especially impressed with a boy, I might remember the color of his eyes; but all I'll remember about his clothes is that he had some on."

Carolina Quarterly Is Gaining Prestige In U.S.

The Carolina Quarterly, Carolina's student literary magazine, is gaining in prestige throughout the state and the nation.

Miss Mary Frances Kennon, assistant state school library adviser, has notified the staff that the Quarterly has been approved by the State Department of Public Instruction for purchase by high school libraries.

This places the Quarterly in a category with such noted publications as the Atlantic Monthly, Harper's Magazine, New Yorker and Saturday Review.

World Has Disease

A column in a recent issue of "Intro Bulletin," a literary newspaper of the arts published in New York, contains lengthy comment on the current issue of the Quarterly.

The article says that the tenth anniversary issue "opens with a forthright editorial by editor Christian Lefebure who feels that a large part of the world has fallen victim during the 1950's to the disease of Melancholia, a malady better known today as lethargy."

The article recognizes the aims of the present editor and comments, "In conjunction with this editorial declaration, the magazine announces a broadening of its scope to include not only creative writing and literary criticism but also contributions from all fields 'that may have something to say of interest and value to the active, awake and thinking man'."

CHRISTIAN LEFEBURE
Carolina Quarterly Editor

Native Freshman

Working behind the scenes to stimulate this growing recognition of UNC's literary magazine is editor Christian Lefebure. He was born in Compiegne, France, and attended school there until he came to the United States in 1951.

He continued his education in the States and was graduated from High School in New York City. During 1953-55 Lefebure served in the U. S. Army; he became a U. S. citizen in 1954.

After being discharged from the Army, Lefebure enrolled at Carolina where he is now a junior in the College of Arts and Sciences. He is majoring in comparative literature.

A Student's Nervous Fidgeting... And Then A Drop Of AED Blood

There is a nervous fidgeting from the prostrated student on the white table. Soft, soothing, feminine tones float down to quiet the racing heart and assure the apprehensive mind that pain is non-existent.

Yielding to the persuasive voice, the student relaxes, until a sharp prick heralds his betrayal and his blood rushes to fill a plastic sack. Such were the proceedings Friday, when members of the national premedical and predental honor society, Alpha Epsilon Delta, met at North Carolina Memorial Hospital to donate blood. This was the second donation from the AED since the hospital's urgent plea to fill its drastically low blood bank in November.

An important asset to the UNC premedical and predental program, the society forms an integral link between the medical and dental schools and the preprofessional undergraduate school.

It has introduced to the premedical and predental campus some of the top authorities in the medical and dental fields in programs acquainting the student with the kinds of problems he may expect to face in the professional schools and the undergraduate preparations necessary to meet these problems.

Some of these authorities took part in programs serving to acquaint the student with the wonders of a particular branch of medicine or dentistry.

In addition to acquainting the student with needed information about medicine and dentistry, these programs serve to stimulate him and keep before him the goals for which he is striving.

Two of the most noteworthy of these programs were an informal talk on normal childbirth, and a talk on plastic surgery, illustrated by slides.

The society also serves to unite fellow "sufferers" in their struggle with a vigorous premedical curriculum. The exchange of information on what to expect from the different common required courses is as valuable as the parties given at which the premedical and predental students gather to blow off exam steam and to lick common wounds together.

In March, premedical and predental students from all over North Carolina will come to Chapel Hill to attend the Alpha Epsilon Delta State Convention held this year by the AED chapter here at Carolina. Later, in April, a large representation from the Carolina chapter will attend the national convention in Arkansas.

In becoming acquainted with this organization, it is interesting to note perhaps what is its greatest recommendation—Carolina has a nationally recognized chapter of AED but Duke does not!

THE PLEDGE YOU SAVE MAY BE YOUR OWN

Today's column is directed at those young female undergraduates who have recently pledged sororities and are worried, poor lambs, that they won't make good. Following is a list of simple instructions which, if faithfully observed, will positively guarantee that you will be a mad success as a sorority girl.

First, let us take up the matter of housemothers. The housemother is your friend, your guide, your mentor. You must treat her with respect. When you wish to speak to her, address her as "Mother Sigafoos" or "Ma'am." In no circumstances must you say, "Hey, fat lady."

Second, let us discuss laundry. Never hang your wash on the front porch of the sorority house. This is unsightly and shows a want of breeding. Use the Chapter Room.

Third, meals. Always remember that planning and preparing meals for a houseful of healthy girls is no simple task. Your cook goes to a great deal of trouble to make your menu varied and nourishing. The least you can do is show your appreciation. Don't just devour your food; praise it. Exclaim with delight, "What delicious pork jowls!" or "What a yummy soupbone!" or "What scrumptious fish heads!" or "What clear water!"

Fourth, clothing. Never forget that your appearance reflects not just on yourself but on the whole house. It was well enough before you joined a sorority to lounge around campus in your old middy blouse and gym bloomers, but now you must take great pains to dress in a manner which excites admiring comments from all who observe you. A few years ago, for example, there was a Chi Omega named Camille Ataturk at the University of Iowa who brought gobs of glory to all her sorors.

Camille hit on the ingenious notion...

Camille hit on the ingenious notion of suiting her garb to the class she was attending. For instance, to English Lit she wore a buskin and jerkin. To German she wore lederhosen and carried a stein of pilsener. To Exam she wore 120 yards of ticker tape. Her shiningest hour came one day when she dressed as a white mouse for Psych Lab. Not only her Chi Omega sisters, but the entire student body went into deep mourning when she was killed by the janitor's cat.

Finally, let us take up the most important topic of all. I refer, of course, to dating.

As we have seen, the way you dress reflects on your sorority, but the men you date reflect even more. Be absolutely certain that your date is an acceptable fellow. Don't beat about the bush; ask him point-blank, "Are you an acceptable fellow?" Unless he replies, "Yeah, boy," send him packing.

But don't just take his word that he is acceptable. Inspect him closely. Are his fingernails clean? Is his black leather jacket freshly oiled? Is his ukulele in tune? Does he carry public liability insurance? And, most significant of all, does he smoke Marlboros?

If he's a Marlboro man, you know he's a lot of man. You know he has taste and discernment, wit and wisdom, character and sapience, decency and warmth, presence and poise, talent and grit, filter and flavor. You will be proud of him, your sorority will be proud of him, the makers of Marlboro will be proud of him, and I will be paid for this column. © 1959, Max Shulman

Joel Carter To Govern NATS Unit

The National Association of Teachers of Singing has selected Prof. Joel Carter of the UNC Music Department a second two-year term as southeastern regional governor of the Association.

Responsibilities of the office include the promotion and management of numerous activities such as contests, workshops, and study groups for six southeastern states.

UNC Instructor

Dr. Carter, who is chairman of instruction in voice and the director of the University Glee Club and the Chapel Hill Choral Club, was commended at the National Convention in Kansas City, Mo., for his leadership in producing in the Southeast the largest percentage of increase in NATS membership for both 1958 and 1957.

Favorable national attention has also been drawn to "The Resonator", a regional newsletter edited by Carter and mailed quarterly to over 1000 voice teachers in the South and East.

Major Activity

The major activity of the National Association of Teachers of Singing at the present time in this area concerns the annual student auditions. Involving vocalists at three levels, —preparatory, students, and young artist,—these auditions generate interest among singing teachers from Miami to Washington, D. C., and Huntington, W. Va.

Over 50 applicants this season are competing for money prizes and honors. Winner in the young artist division represents the Region at the National Finals for the coveted title "Singer-of-the-Year."

Auditions

This month according to Regional Governor Carter, auditions will be held in Columbia, S. C., and Miami, Fla. On March 1 the North Carolina auditions will be held simultaneously in Winston-Salem and in Raleigh.

Carter, a member of the National Advisory Committee on Vocal Education, was also one of the speakers at the Kansas City Convention recently. His paper was titled "The Case Against Observing Traditions in Singing."

Late Permission

The UNC Women's Residence Council in conjunction with the Dean of Women's office, has granted one-hour late permission on Friday, Feb. 14.

This permission will extend closing hours until 2 a. m. and will be campus wide. It will eliminate the necessity of signing out.

UNC Published Volume Wins National Award

The Society of Architectural Historians has announced the selection of "The Early Architecture of Georgia," published last fall by the UNC Press, to receive its annual highest award.

Frederick Doveton Nichols is the author of the prize-winning volume, which has a pictorial survey by the late Frances Benjamin Johnston.

The Society selected "The Early Architecture of Georgia" as the outstanding book on architectural history published during 1957.

Is Book Exchange Sales Tax On Bibles Violation Of State Law?

By ANTHONY WOLFF and DOUG EISELE

What appears to be a violation of state sales tax laws was revealed here yesterday in confirmation that University-owned Book Exchange is charging a 3 per cent sales tax on Holy Bibles.

H. R. Ritchie, who heads the campus book stores, was unable to comment on the law but promised to "look into it" with the University attorney.

"If such a law exists we certainly won't charge the 3 per cent tax for the Bibles," he said. "We wouldn't want the students to suffer. We want to be fair about it."

Revelation of the tax charge grew out of an investigation by The Daily Tar Heel upon notice of a law which exempts, among other things, fertilizer, coffins and Bibles from the 3 per cent sales tax authorized by the State of North Carolina.

The exemptions are listed in "The Sales and Use Tax Report," an official state document, under "Printed Materials Group" included in the section under "Exemptions and Exclusions." "Holy Bibles" is No. 42 under that section.

After reading the law, a Tar Heel staff member was sent to the Book Exchange to purchase a Bible. He paid the list price, $6, for the book, plus an 18-cent charge described by the clerk as "tax."

Ritchie, contacted later, was apparently surprised to learn of the law, although he noted that other items sold through the campus stores do not always carry a charge for tax.

"If we've violated a principle in this matter, we'll be sure the students get their 18 cents back," he said.

Questioned as to whether the University could retrieve sales taxes paid thus far for Bibles, Ritchie said the University has never before received such a rebate. But he said records would show how much sales tax has been collected from the sale of Bibles.

He made clear that no definite action could be taken until the University attorney firmly establishes that, under circumstances here, the tax should not be charged.

Bibles are required in various religion courses at the University. The text purchased Thursday is Nelson's "The Holy Bible," 1953 edition.

WEATHER

Sunny and not quite so cold today. Rain Saturday and quite cool.

Solons Approve Honor Council Revision After Lengthy Debate

The Student Legislature approved last night a bill to revise the honor council by a vote of 38 - 1. At press time last night, there was some doubt as to the constitutionality of the bill.

Earlier in the evening, the Legislature approved an amendment providing for two permanent jurors to sit at honor code trials. The vote was 24-15.

Charlie Wilson, a member of the Honor Council and a UP Legislator, introduced this amendment. The original bill as amended and presented by the ways and means committee deleted the clause calling for permanent jurors.

Wilson specified that there would be four permanent jurors, two of which (one man, one coed) would be appointed by the Student Body President afer spring elections and two (one man, one coed) after the fall elections.

Earlier in the evening the legislature approved a Women's Council to try violations of social rules and the Campus Code except those cases under the jurisdiction of the house councils.

Al Goldsmith (UP) was able to amend the section referring to the council of five so that there will always be one woman at the hearings.

As the bill is set up it is possible to have seven members on the council, five of whom would be men and could serve alone as the jury.

The Legislature approved having four men and two women on the elected Honor Council. The body approved the proposed composition of the councils.

The section stating, "The council members shall decide questions of law and questions of procedure and shall insure that the constitutional rights of the accused be observed in the hearings . . ." was approved.

The article to set up a procedure committee "to establish and promulgate the rules of procedure for the Council" was accepted without debates.

Tar Heels Recover To Nip Wake Forest In 60-57 Thriller

By BILL KING

Winston-Salem — For the second straight game Carolina's defensive wizzard Bob Cunningham emerged as a vital point producer as the Tar Heels were carried to the wire before downing stubborn Wake Forest, 60-57 in Memorial Coliseum here last night.

It was Cunningham that hit a jump shot from the center circle to send Carolina ahead 58-57, with 35 seconds left and it was Cunningham who tied up Wake's Olin Broadway as he was shooting, then outjumped Broadway and tapped to Tommy Kearns who dribbled in for a snow bird with five seconds remaining to sew up one of the most unpredictable contests of the season for Carolina. Cunningham also hit vital baskets against Virginia Tuesday night.

Wake's record doesn't show it but this was the Deacon team of old which scrapped the National Champs right down to the very last and the estimated 8,000 fans here were in a frenzy down until Cunningham's timely feats with the seconds rushing by on the scoreboard.

The win was number 15 of the season for Carolina and its eighth ACC win against four losses. It put the Tar Heels in a challenging position once again for the regular season conference title.

Both teams used a zone defense until the last couple of minutes when Wake came out in a man to man. And this tight defense kept the noisy Deac fans on their feet throughout.

Wake Forest came back after intermission holding a 29-27 lead. From the very start it was evident that this was not going to be one of those "Leave early" affairs.

The Deacs ran their lead to 33-27 before Pete Brennan hit a follow shot with 2:47 gone in the second half. A basket by Cunningham, Brennan's free throw and two at the line by Harvey Salz put Carolina back in the lead, 36-35 with 15:46 left.

The Tar Heels were able to maintain a slender margin until Wake's Henry Bowers hit a free throw at 11:36 to tie it at 42. Carolina went ahead again on Cunningham's layup and from there the Tar Heels ran it to 52-46 before a couple of free throws to make it 56-55 Carolina but Bowers hit the Deacs came back.

Brennan fouled out at 6:02 and Wake's Wendell Carr went out at 5:51. After that the Deacons chipped away at the Carolina lead and finally regained it when Charlie Forte stole the ball from Cunningham and hit a layup with 2:32 to play to make it 55-54.

Carolina's Lee Shaffer then got a shot from the corner to push the Deacs ahead, 57-56. This set the stage for Cunningham's dramatic finale.

Brennan's 15 points was tops for Carolina. Kearns had 14 and Salz had 12, with Cunningham hitting for eight. Budd and Bowers had 15 each for Wake Forest.

Carolina had a 36.2 percentage

Please, Legislators, Take Your Time On Judicial Bill

One week ago Thursday night a dramatic bill was introduced to the legislature calling for sweeping revisions in the judicial system at the University of North Carolina.

It was, perhaps, the most important bill proposed at UNC in many years. Unless something most unusual occurs, it will remain the most important for years to come.

The bill would completely revolutionize the court system at UNC. It would make a one-court system out of the present two-court system. It would place women defendants before a partially male council, and it would do conversely for the men.

This is the most far-reaching, the most all inclusive bill which will ever be considered by the current legislature.

Wednesday night what probably is the most important aspect of the bill met legislative approval. Legislators then approved the one-court system for the University. In less than a week's time—in six short, little days — the legislature made this grave decision.

Can a mature decision be made in seven days? Does that time allow the pro and con argument which should accompany an act of such importance? Should the future of the judicial system be decided in less than a week's time?

Legislators, we'll be here yet for a long time. Please be sure you know the implications of your vote before you cast your ballot. Please don't "push" your bills through the halls of New East before all have had a chance to understand them.

Please, legislators, take your time. The justice you save may be our own.

Manley Dorm Provides An Example For The Others

Elsewhere in today's paper is a short notice about elections at Manley Dormitory. It's just a little story, but it has a lot of implications.

Why?

Because candidates for the several offices will carry out what appears to be a broad program of activities and programs scheduled for the coming semester.

And it is these activities and programs which give dignity not only to the people who head them, but to dormitory life as well. They show that there can be a certain fraternity among those hundreds of students who reside in dormitory life as well. They show that there can be a certain fraternity among those hundreds of students who reside in dormitories.

Among suggested activities are: several parties, participation in the Valkyries Sing, publication of a dormitory newspaper, improvements in the social room, obtaining a milk vending machine.

So interested in their dormitory are Manley residents that someone took the time and effort to check into the history of the building. It was, the notice read, named for two prominent Tar Heel statesmen of the last century.

Our congratulations go to Manley, with hopes that the majority of the spring program will materialize. Maybe they can be an incentive to others.

Let's Have A Closer Look At The Campus Book Stores

For a long time now people have been complaining about prices at the University-owned Book Exchange.

"They are too high."

Or, "We don't know where the money's going."

Well, it appears we finally have gotten our teeth into one fault with the Book Exchange in discovering what seems to be a violation of state law in charging sales tax for Bibles.

This isn't to imply that H. R. Ritchie, who heads the campus stores where books are sold, or those who work there would intentionally charge a tax on an item exempt from sales tax by state law.

It does, however, point up the need for a close look at the campus stores to see in what other areas students at UNC might save a few pennies. They do, after all, add up to dollars.

Di Bill Deserved Unanimous Vote

We have only one argument with Dialectic Senate members who voted 4-4 Tuesday night to tie in their opinions over whether the University should have the right to direct sororities and fraternities to choose whomever they please for whatever reason they please.

Fraternities and sororities are private organizations. If they want to "ball" a certain person, or refuse even to consider another, that is their right. It should not be taken away, despite the disguise of an act which would do so.

MISQUOTED

We regret that a case cited editorially yesterday to make a point about the proposed one-court council system did not, in fact, ever appear before the Women's Honor Council.

Chairman Kit Whitehurst called that fact to our attention, pointing out that although there were basic similarities between the cases they were so different that the council felt a correction was in order.

Well, here it is. But despite our misinformation about the case, we feel it still is an illustration of what could happen under circumstances involving trial of a defendant before a mixed council.

J.Y.'s JAZZ

Woopee, Gosh —Now It's Jazz, Pomes..., zzz

Well, good buddies, I was sittin' by my viktrolla few days ago and I got this rekord called "Kenneth Patchen" on the Cadence label and decided to give it a spin. It certainlly was sompin. Yes indeedy—it seems that this Patchen writes pomes and besides that he likes to reed them with a jazz bunch. Well, I was just plain overpowered by the intellectuallity of the thing, because this feller sure does seem like he knows all about the world and life and all those mystery things.

Well, the first pome was about a feller who wore lemmon collered gloves and killed two other fellers. Now I couldn't quite figure what this has to do with jazz music, but it sure did excite me. First of all the pome feller tells us in a reel excited way how he calls the pome, then the old jazz band starts a whonkin' and a whailin' and then he commences to reed. Now the message of the pome was reel exciting. All the way the feller keeps sayin wait wait wait wait wait wait wait which got me all hopped up waitin' to figure out why I was supposed to wait. Well then if he just didn't say NOW and then that was the end of the pome and the music stopped too.

Well now the rester the pomes were kinda on that way too except some of them had other words in them and they were all about life and death and were reel misteryeous which jest tingeled my spine and made me feel reel creepy and funny. But what I liked most of all was the feller's voice. He was reel sleapy like and I kept thinking he was jest gonna flop out on us. Yessir, reel sleepy, reel sleepy, kinda borin . . . zzzzzzzz

More seriously, this recording and all the others in the series of disks emanating from this newest of fads suffer from two primary faults. The first fault is that the poetry is bad, the second that the jazz is bad. The poetry suffers from lack of intellectual meaning or cohesion, the jazz from lack of swing and musicianship.

If one wishes to combine the two media of music and words one must make the two elements sympathetic to each other. This effort seems to be primarily for novelty's sake—once one passes the stage of surface impressions one must realize that the music often fights the words, and that the overall effect is one of disturbance rather than any sort of intellectual satisfaction. I do not think that, at least in this stage of its developement, the idea is a particularly good one, and am not at all sure, that it ever could be good. If an enterprising artist and repertoire man found some good musicians and a first rate poet, he might have something. But never with a first-rate bore like Patchen.

Gas Bill Takes Low Road Again

Once again the Texas gas and oil boys have overplayed their hand to bring on almost certain defeat of the revived natural gas bill which had previously been given an excellent chance of passage by the Congress and acceptance by President Isenhower.

One would thing that the so-called smart, big-money operators would have known better and been carefully on guard after their attempt to bribe South Dakota's Sen. Francis Case back in 1956 resulted in a presidential veto when the measure to ease federal control over natural gas producers had been pushed through both House and Senate by Texas leadership.

But the gas and oil boys wouldn't or didn't learn.

A highly successful money-raising dinner was held Monday night in Houston with White Minority Leader Joe Martin as honoree and principal speaker. Almost simultaneously with the meeting, which netted $100,000 for the G.O.P. campaign pot, there came to light a letter written by Texas national committeeman H. J. (Jack) Porter in which he described Representive Martin as a friend of Texas' oil and gas industry and a battler for the natural gas bill. His letter went right on off the political dead end:

It will be up to Joe Martin to muster at least 65 per cent of the Republican votes in order to pass the gas bill this year . . . . He has to put Republican members from Northern and Eastern consuming areas on the spit because the bill is not popular due to the distortion of facts by newspaper columnists and others.

The dinner must raise substantial amounts of money for the Republican Party as part of these will go towards the election of Republican congressmen and senators.

Publication of the letter brought immediate denunciation from G. O.P. national leaders, including Minority Leader Martin, and refusal to accept the fund which had been raised on the strength of National Committeeman Porter's appeal. Thus what happened in the Case episode back in 1956 has been duplicated. The new gas bill is too hot and tainted to handle. The G.O.P. cannot afford politically to go for it; and even though it should be rammed through the Congress again, which seems highly unlikely, by the Democratic leadership, presidential signature is unthinkable under the circumstances.

Since President Eisenhower was constrained last year to veto the bill to remove natural gas from federal regulation because of the "arrogance of segments o fthe oil and gas industry," that industry has endeavored to conduct its lobbying activities with circumspection.

But the industry is in the headlines again, this time carried there by H. J. Porter, Republican National Committeeman from Texas, whom President Eisenhower is wont to describe as "Good Old Jack".

Porter, it seems raised $100,000 for the Republican 1958 campaign at an "Appreciation Dinner" for Representative Joe Martin, Republican House leader. Porter made it clear in letters soliciting purchase of tickets for the dinner that the fund was intended as advance payment on getting the gas bill through the House this year as well as "appreciation" for past favors.

Both the White House and the Republican National Committee have repudiated the dinner; but Porter has expressed confidence that the money will find its way into the Republican campaign chest through other channels. Chances are 100 to 1 Porter is right.—Raleigh News & Observer.

IN THE CONGRESS

Give Us An Angry Man

Tuesday, Jan. 3 the United States Congress came together to talk, plan, and try to regain the Nation's fast disappearing leadership in the world. Amid all the worried legislators, one is conspicuous by his absence. He is an angry man. Any angry man.

There are no angry men left anywhere in this country any more, and we're the worse for it. Nobody gets roiled up. Everybody is well fed, well worried, well employed, smug, and complacent. How can anybody in a nation of "fat cats" get angry?

Evil has been defeated. Higher wages for shorter hours prevail. We have our social security, pensions, paid vacations, unlimited leisure, plentitude of gadgets, money to combat the upswing in disease among people who are sicker than at any period in their history. Only on television are there bad men and good men, and only there can bad men be "headed off at the canyon."

The great issues of the time are with us, but we have no angry men to implement them. In most periods of crisis we have been fortunate enough to find at least one angry man to slash like a demon from hell through the sincerely complacent stagnation of the populace. Not yet in America at the beginning of 1958.

We have no angry voice to challenge this era of passiveness. Here and there some minister of the Gospel addresses empty air from behind the Mexican border in a tone of anger, but the tone is a stage prop, more than likely, and his aim is economic security for himself. There is no Thomas Paine to fan the flames of revolution, stir the imagination of Americans toward human rights and national independence; no Tom Paine to strike fear into the hearts of dictators, both clerical and lay. Gone are the Robert Ingersolls, W. C. Branns, Voltaires, and Victor Hugos whose anger stirred men to justifiable action. Nobody emulates Jesus, who in anger, whipped moneychangers from the temple. Stilled is the shrill voice of Teddy Roosevelt at San Juan Hill, and his angry table pounding reverberates no longer from the White House. Upton Sinclair, an angry man, wrote "The Jungle" and "The Brass Check" to horrify the American people and bring about drastic revisions in the field of public health. Angry Man Sinclair Lewis broke up an era of complacency in America with his "Main Street" and "Babbit." Champ Clark and Bob La Follette were the angry men in Congress at a critical era, but they too are gone from the scene.

The angry man is vanguard for reform and revolution. He is action and inspiration. He walks ahead of angels to point the way for the timid, the tired, the irresponsible majority who long more to be let alone than to exercise the armor of right.

Give us not in 1958 any more sober statesmen; status quo, departmentalized, thorough channelized politicians; or pig-headed systemized, and indoctrinated military generals whose responsibility is to their heirarchy and not to the people; or educators who educate to "get along and let's don't have any trouble."

Just give us for 1958, God, some thoroughly angry men.

Von Braun's Wit And St. Valentine's Day

The February 17th issue of Time magazine reveals that Wernher Von Braun learned early the game of hood-winking the bureaucrats who wouldn't allow peripheral spending. When working on the German V-2 project, Von Braun recalls that he and his fellow workers had a difficult time obtaining office supplies. So the missilemen resorted to camouflage: "It was a rare budget official who realized that the request for funds to buy 'an appliance for milling wooden dowels up to 10 millimeters in diameter' meant that the rocketmen needed a pencil sharpener." Also reflecting the pressures which have been placed on him and his men as of late, Von Braun remarked, "Oh, to be in space this week. It's so quiet up there."

Speaking later about man, the earth and space, Von Braun observed: "You know, some think of the earth as a safe and comfortable planet, and they say that space is a hostile environment. This is not really true. Earth is protected by its blanket of atmosphere, to be sure, but it is a disorderly place, and unpredictable. It is full of storms and winds, of fogs and ice, of earthquakes. It is also full of people—people with thermonuclear bombs.

"There is beauty in space, and it is orderly. There is no weather, and there is regularity. It is predictable. Just look at our little Explorer; you can set your clock by it—literally; it is more accurate than your clock. Everything in space obeys the laws of physics. If you know these laws, and obey them, space will treat you kindly. And don't tell me that man doesn't belong out there. Man belongs wherever he wants to go—and he'll do plenty well when he gets there."

St. Valentine's Day has become so crassly commercial these days that one can't help feeling the prehensile tentacles of the Madison avenue animals. The ancient powers of Aphrodite and Venus, Eros and Cupid, and Apollo and Artemis have been perverted to the point that a monogamous American male eats every word of propaganda emitted by the professional persuaders. In New York City, they have Valentine gifts that run into the hundreds of dollars which are guaranteed to convince the object of your aggressions that all is for love and "this time it's forever." This is not only symbolic of the ridiculous position to which women have been raised in this country, it is a direct admission by the male that he is ready to submt; first the men helped them achieve suffragettism and now he is pleading for a matriarchy.

Present day trends have forced Valentine's Day into a very strange position. It used to be the day on which the males would send some ornamental greeting, usually comic in character, to the females. These greetings were originally sent anonymously, but today one might conceive of a case for breach of promise when reading the abortive phrases of endearment.

Frosh Cagers Outclassed 90-63 By Sharp Wake Forest Freshman Five

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Winston-Salem — Wake Forest's Baby Deacs, using a devastating fast break to full advantage, completely overwhelmed Carolina's Tar Babies here tonight by 90-63.

In this third meeting of the season between the two clubs, the Baby Deacs came onto the floor appearing a completely different team. The Tar Babies had previously defeated the Deacs twice. But last night it was all Wake Forest from the opening moments.

The Baby Deacs jumped off to an early lead which was never threatened throughout the battle. The Deacs had an early lead of 29-12 and led at half time by 38-23. nI the final half they pulled steadily away and the contest was never in doubt.

Big man for Wake Forest was 5' 11" guard Al Hart, who pumped in 28 big points. It was Hart who initiated nearly all of the fast-breaks and continually harassed the Tar Babies with his ball-stealing and trick dribbling tactics. His running mate at guard, Dave Adkins, collected 13 and also stayed in the hair of the Tar Babies all night.

Lou Brown was once again high man for Carolina with 18, but found himself boxed-in whenever he got the ball. A great percentage of Brown's shots were blocked in flight by the alert Wake defenders. Billy Dunlap trailed Brown with 13.

The Tar Babies had two glaring difficulties all night—their inability to work the ball to the inside against the tight Deac zone and their failure to pull down the rebounds. They were forced to shoot from the outside and had trouble finding the range.

The loss tonight lowered Carolina's season record to 9-6, and this is their fourth loss in the last five games.

THE SCORING

Carolina—Shuford 8; Dunlap 13; Hart 7; Brown 18; Longnecker 5; Mathews 3; Deaton 7; Donohue 2.

mers go after win number 10 tonight at 8 o'clock in the Bowman Gray Indoor pool when they will be host to the Wake Forest swim team.

Fresh from a decisive win over the southeastern champs Florida, Coach Pat Earey's fish will be in fine shape, and this meet is a step toward the ACC Champions to be held here at the end of this month.

Carolina's trio of senior sprinters-Bill Zickgraf, Bill Roth, and Walter Rose- will probably be the highlights of the meet. Tony Schiffman, who has consistently been high point scorer, will swim the distance events backed by very capable junior Jeff Zwicker.

Brent Nash, the Tar Heel's only backstroker and star of the Florida meet, will try to better his time in the 200 yard backtroke. Divers Ned Meekins, Pete Reynolds, and Dick Cashwell will do the board work for Carolina. With the debt added by butterfly swimmers Mahaffy and Turner, and breaststrokers Mercer and Cooper, and middle-distancer Kelly Manass, it is litle wonder that the tankmen are undefeated this season.

Scurlock And Bishop Run In New York Sat.

By DAVE WIBLE

On the boards at the New York AC Indoor Games Saturday night Tar Heel track fans will find two runners wearing Carolina colors, Dave Scurlock and Wayne Bishop.

Scurlock, who has proven to be one of the greatest middle distance runners in Carolina history, will be entered in the "Halpine" half-mile. Bishop, a top distance man in the ACC, will take a try at the 2-mile.

Both of these runners have been burning up the indoor boards this season. Scurlock's most recent accomplishment was a first in the Millrose half-mile Saturday, outfexing some of the best. This plus another first in the Boston AA games earlier in the season has set the scene for Saturday night.

Scurlock, who won with a 1:52.6 last week will be facing: Tom Murphy (Manhattan) who anchored his two-mile relay team in the Millrose in 1:51.1; Ty Hadley (Occidental) who ran a 1:51.1 in the same relay; Joe Soprano (Manhattan) a fine distance man; Zobig Ornwal, Poland's middle distance national champion; and Tom Carroll (Yale) who has finished only a few yards behind Scurlock in the Millrose.

Bishop, who recently added to his collection the "outstanding runner's" award for his performance at the V.M.I. Relays, will be challenging some of the top distance men in the world in the 2-mile. Topping off the list is the number one two-mile in the nation, John Macy. Macy, formerly from Poland, but now running for Houston has clocked 8:57.2 over the distance. Also in the field is Yugoslavia's Velisa Mugosa who has hit 9:03. Biship's best time is 9:16.

UNC Stores Is Topic For SP Talk

The Student Party wil hold its regular meeting at 7:30 p.m. on Monday night in Roland Parker 1 and 2. The topic under discussion for this weeks meeting will be "The Campus Stores" and will be presented by H. R. Ritchie, general manager of the University Book Store.

Many students have recently expressed an interest in where the profits from the University Stores go. In attempting to provide and answer for this timely question, the Student Party is presenting this meeting.

Interest was recently stirred up with a story by Daily Tar Heel Editor Doug Eisele concerning the charging of a 3 percent tax on the sale of Bibles. However, the Student Party had already planned to provide the campus with this program, according to Chairman Pat Adams. Eisele's discovery though, should heighten student interest.

According to the report of the Campus Stores Committee, under the direction of John Brooks, the University Stores in the year 1955-56 showed a net profit of $63,022.96.

A Legislature seat in Town Women's and the position of Seargeant at Arms will be filled at this meeting.

Adams issued the following statement to The Daily Tar Heel concerning the meeting: "We feel that the students will be very interested in the campus stores, and this was the reason for inviting Mr. Ritchie to the meeting. Our main interest is to present the facts to the students"

Attendance Exam Rules Are Upheld

Attendance of students at final examinations will continue to be regulated by provisions adopted by the Faculty Council in 1951, according to the opinion of University deans.

In their judgment, the action of the Faculty Council Feb. 7 in abolishing the cut system does not supersede the University's regulations concerning attendance at examinations.

(See CUTS, page 3)

'Sound & Fury' Positions Open

Committee and chairmanship positions for this year's "Sound and Fury" production are now being filled.

Persons desiring an interviews should make an appointment as soon as possible at the Graham Memorial Information Office.

Positions open are in the technical and production fields, including publicity, promotion, costumes, lighting, music, make-up, sets and box-office manager.

Director Hartsoe, in making the announcement, commented, "If you're bored with running around with the same people all of the time, take a chance on 'Sound and Fury.' Sign up right away."

news in brief

Federation

AMMAN, Jordan, Feb. 14 (AP)—Kings Faisal of Iraq and Hussein of Jordan linked their governments today in a federal union. Their spokesman hailed this swift response to the recently proclaimed Egyptian-Syrian union as a step toward "total Arab unity," but the immediate effect was to spotlight the rivalry between two Arab camps.

The merger — the spokesmen called it an "Arab federation"—left the future of Iraq's participation in the American-supported Baghdad pact in doubt. It is the only Arab nation in the alliance, a target of violent attack by Pan-Arab Nationalists ever since it was formed in 1955.

Tunisia

TUNIS, Feb. 14 (AP)—Tunisia clamped a police blockade on three French consulates today but otherwise applied calming measures to prevent a dangerous explosion.

A government spokesman disclosed that food supplies were being allowed to get through to the 15,000 French soldiers barricaded in their bases. This seemed to ease the greatest immediate danger of clashes.

Scales' Trial

GREENSBORO, Feb. 14 (AP)—Four witnesses testified today of Communist Party teachings and of the activities of Junius Irving Scales its leader in the Carolinas, as the second week of the Greensboro native's re-trial drew to a close.

Two of the four witnesses told of Communist Party training schools held in St. Louis, Mo., Los Angeles, Calif., and Denver, Colo. The other two witnesses gave testimony about Scales.

Police Charge Local Woman With Forgery

BILL KINCAID

A Chapel Hill woman, Fannie Bell Burnett, has been charged by police with forging a check which was taken from a UNC employe Ethel Louise Parrish.

Police say she has admitted forging and cashing a UNC payroll check at Rose's Five-and-Ten-Cent Store on Tuesday, Feb. 4.

She told Police, however, that someone had given the check to her. She reportedly used the Parrish woman's tax withholding statement for identification.

Payment Stopped

UNC officials, when notified of the loss of the check, stopped payment and it was returned to them.

Police apprehended Fannie Bell Burnett and found that the signature on the check compared with her handwriting. She told officers she had paid for house rent with the check.

Grand Larceny

She has also been charged with grand larceny in the theft of $400 from another UNC employee, Guy Crump.

She has continued to deny this charge, but Police Chief W. D. Blake said Crump's pocket book was found in the Burnett home.

She has been released under $600 bond. Trial will probably be Tuesday in Recorder's Court. Blake added.

Evans Says

Revision Of Councils Rests On Amendments

Honor Council Bill Unconstitutional?

A question of constitutionality will delay signing of the Honor Council revision bill and may result in an amendment election here.

The bill as passed by the Student Legislature and submitted to Student Body President Sonny Evans provides for a change in the structure and mechanics of the UNC judiciary system.

Evans said Friday a constitutional amendment will be necessary to enactment of the judiciary setup provisions since the constitution now calls explicity for separate councils for men and women.

The bill now before the legislature would change that system entirely, replacing it with a system which would include a single Honor Council to try both men and women.

The bill provides for a committee composed of Speaker Don Furtado, Attorney General Sonny Hallford, and floor leaders Al Goldsmith and Pat Adams to write the amendments, and submit them to the student body for ratification.

At the legislative session Thursday a discussion on this point and its validity ensued. Representative John Brooks, legislative parliamentarian, ruled that these proposals be brought before the body before submission to the student body.

Evans Questions

The constitutionality of this bill was questioned when it was submitted by the legislature to the Student Body President. The Attorney General recognized the omission of the proper provisions and said they had been discussed but that they were overlooked in the heat of the arguments.

"The legislature is not at fault—this oversight on the part of the executive branch can be corrected simply," said Evans, when asked for comment.

"The Bill, passed by the legislature last night will not have to be signed until ten days from now and I am hopeful that the constitutional amendments will be legally inserted into the bill next Thursday evening" Evans added.

Tar Heel Truck

Harold O'Tuel's (SP) bill to appropriate $1,466.13 for the purchase of a delivery truck for use by The Daily Tar Heel was passed.

Jerry Oppenheimer's (UP) bill to reorganize the Campus Orientation Committee was passed by special orders.

The bill places the orientation of all entering students under the charge of one chairman of the Campus Orientation Committee. This legislation does not allow for a women's orientation chairman distinct from the campus committee.

The orientation committee was increased by three students. The presidents of the Dialectic Literary Society and the Philanthropic Literary Society will no longer be on the committee.

The presidents of the Panhellenic Council and the Independent Women's Council have been added to the committee.

Student Council Bill

A bill to change the Student Council was introduced as an amendment to the Honor Council bill, but Student Legislature Speaker Don Furtado ruled this move out of order.

This piece of legislation, along with one to appropriate $375 to get a copy of the film "In the Name of Freedom" to be sent on loan to foreign universities, has been referred to the proper committee.

Bill Asks Change Of Three Councils

Student solons were handed a bill Thursday night proposing abolition of the Student Council as now constituted and replacement of it by two other courts including a new Men's Council to hear only men's Campus Code violations.

The other court would be composed of members of the new Men's Council and the Women's Council and would hear cases of constitutionality and violations of elections laws.

The current Student Council not only has jurisdiction over men's campus code violations, but also hears cases of constitutionality and violations of the elections laws. One woman, appointed by the Student Body President, attends meeting to try the constitutionality of laws and elections law violations.

A separate Woman's Honor Council exists to try women violators of the Honor code, women's campus code, and hear the appeals of House Councils. A Men's Honor Council exists solely for the purpose of trying male violators of the Honor Code.

Those convicted by either the Student Council, Women's Honor Council, or Men's Honor Council, have the right to appeal to the Student-Faculty Council.

Under the proposed system a single Honor Council would exist to try all violators of the honor code. A Men's Council would be created to try violators of the men's campus code; the Women's Council will hear only violations of the Women's campus code social rules violations, and appeals of House Council verdicts.

Student Council

The new Student Council, created by Foushee's bill, would consist of three women and four men elected from both the Women's and Men's Councils. This court would have jurisdiction relating to the constitutionality of laws and violations of the election laws.

The Student-Faculty Court would still exist to hear appeals from Women's Council, Men's Council, and the Honor Council.

Bill

The bill reads as follows:

WHEREAS: Recent proposals by the Student Legislature have revised the jurisdiction of judicial councils over violations of the Honor Code, and

WHEREAS: These changes, if approved, would create patterns of irregularity in the original jurisdiction of the judicial councils, and

WHEREAS: The recent proposal, if approved, would establish a Women's' Council with the exclusive jurisdiction of trying violations of the Campus Code by women, and violations of the social rules, and

WHEREAS: There should be a similar council with the exclusive jurisdiction of trying violations of the Campus Code by male students, and

WHEREAS: It is to be desired that there be a uniform pattern of jurisdiction for the councils in the student judiciary,

Now, therefore be it enacted by the Student Legislature of the University of North Carolina that:

Article I: A new council be formed to have original jurisdiction exclusively over violations of the Campus Code by male students. This council shall be entitled, "Men's Council" and its composition shall be determined by the Student Legislature.

Article II: The original jurisdiction of the currently existing "Student Council" be limited to original jurisdiction in all cases involving the constitutionality of any legislative or executive action and statutory and constitutional interpretation, and shall have appellate jurisdiction, as authorized by the

Daily Tar Heel To Get New Delivery Truck

A bill passed by the Student Legislature Thursday night appropriated $1466.13 to be used to buy The Daily Tar Heel a new delivery truck.

The bill stated that the truck currently used by the Tar Heel to make deliveries was in its sixth year of service and badly in need of extensive repairs totaling approximately $900. It also stated that the present truck is considered unsafe by those using it.

Provision of a new truck under the terms of the bill...

John Whitaker, business manager for The Daily Tar Heel, stated that he thought the authorization of a new truck was a wise move. He added that he thought it false economy to keep pouring money into an old truck that will become obsolete in one or two years.

Money from the sale of the old truck is to be reverted into the general surplus.

Although the bill has been passed, a new truck will not be bought until the bill is signed by Student Body President Sonny Evans.

Nan Schaeffer To Represent UNC At Fete

Nan Schaeffer, 1957 Beat Duke Float Parade queen, will represent the University of North Carolina in the queen's court of the Azalea Festival in Wilmington March 27-30.

The Azalea Queen's Court is composed of May Queens and representatives from leading North Carolina universities and colleges who act as ladies-in-waiting for Queen Azalea, generally a Hollywood movie star.

Miss Schaeffer was selected this week as the UNC representative by the heads of the six major women's organizations. She was competing with four other coeds who had been queens this year.

The candidates included the Homecoming queen, Dukathon queen, Yack queen, Dorm queen and Beat Duke Float Parade queen.

The women's organizations whose heads chose Miss Schaeffer were the women's Residence Council, Women's Honor Council, Panhellenic Council, Independent Women's Council and YMCA.

Miss Schaeffer, a member of Kappa Delta sorority, is a senior English major from Tallahassee, Fla.

YWCA Executive Posts Open Now For Coeds

All girls who are interested in holding executive offices or cabinet positions in the YWCA next year have been invited to two introductory and explanatory programs.

The first of these programs will be Monday from 4 to 5 p.m. in the Library Assembly Room. This meeting will explain the different areas of the "Y" and introduce the cabinet and executive members working with these areas.

The second meeting will be at the same place Thursday, Feb. 20 from 4 to 5 p.m. This will also be an orientation program and will explain the construction of the "Y".

Questions

At both of these meetings interested girls will have an opportunity to meet the girls now working with the "Y", to show their interest in the "Y" and in holding some position and to ask questions.

From Feb. 24 to 28 there will be personal interviews with girls interested in holding executive offices. These interviews for executive offices will be conducted by the old executive commitee which consists of the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, program chairman and membership chairman.

Orientation Program

March 6 there will be an open orientation program. At this time the slate will be presented, and the floor will be open for more nominations.

World Day Of Prayer Observance Set Sunday

Throughout the day on Feb. 16 students in most parts of the world will join together in prayer for their fellow students and for the spread of the Christian faith.

On the UNC campus the Campus Christian Council is sponsoring the obsevance of the World Day of Prayer.

An interdenominational committee has planned the service in which foreign students will participate. The service will be held at 7:15 p.m. in the Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church.

The significance of this day to students can best be pointed out by the explanation of two organizations: the Student Christian Movement and the World Student Christian Federation.

The Student Christian Movement consists of individual groups throughout the world who are interested in the spread of Christianity to all students.

Knowing the many differences to be overcome they believe this goal can best be achieved by a strong unified movement. This has led them in the organization of this group from all Christian denomination.

The World Student Christian Federation, a union of groups such as this throughout the world, serves as a channel through which this movement can realize its goal.

Tar Heels To Battle Notre Dame's Fighting Irish Tonight

By BILL KING

CHICAGO, ILL—Frank McGuire's national basketball champions finally get a brief respite from the helter-skelter dribble frenzy in the Atlantic Coast Conference tonight at 10:30 p.m., EST when they reach outside the conference for a tilt with a strong Notre Dame team in Chicago Stadium here.

Radio station WRAL and WPTF in Raleigh will broadcast the game.

This one has the same pressure earmarks which the Tar Heels have been carrying around for the past two seasons but this time the question of prestige is purely a national one. That might seem more important than anything Carolina does in the ACC, but Frank McGuire and his group know that they've got to retain that ACC title in order for national prominence to mean anything.

Victory Confused Conference

The Tar Heel's victory over Wake Forest in Winston-Salem last night made them 8-3 in the conference and put them in a good position to add a little more confusion to the constantly altering conference standings. Speculation of a regular season winner is now a testy subject but the Wake Forest win once again labels the Tar Heels the team to beat.

Carolina has a 14-4 overall mark for the season. The McGuiremen have lost but once to an outside team in two years and that was to West Virginia in the finals of the Kentucky Invitational.

Battle For Prestige

Thus, the fighting Irish of Notre Dame have every reason to want to knock off the defending champs, especially in a big basketball center such as Chicago. The Tar Heels will be playing the second game of a doubleheader tonight. The first game features powerful Kentucky against Loyola.

Coach John Jordan of the Irish has one of the finest teams in recent years at the South Bend, Ind. school. Notre Dame had a 20-8 mark last season and could do as well if not better this year.

Hawkins Irish Threat

Big man for Notre Dame is forward and co-captain Tom Hawkins, a Winston-Salem native who hit 33 points in a game against Butler Wednesday night. Otherwise, the Irish will probably go with co-captain John McCarthy at the other forward. Bob Devine and Gene Duffy at guards and big Ed Gleason at center. Hawkins is the man the Tar Heels will have to watch. He's one of the top scorers in the country and grabs more than his share of rebounds. Hawkins hit 576 points last season.

Notre Dame 17th

The Irish, an Independent representative, were ranked as the 17th best team in the country in the latest Associated Press poll, the Tar Heels were rated number 11.

McGuire will go with his usual starting lineup, consisting of three sophomores and two seniors. Lee Shaffer, Dick Kepley and Harvey Salz are the sophomores and All-American candidates Pete Brennan and Tommy Kearns are the seniors.

Foushee's Bill Provides Balance In Court System

Roger Foushee's bill introduced to the legislature Thursday night provides the final brick in the wall of student judiciary revisions now being considered for the campus.

To help explain his bill and why it is important to the campus we will attempt to explain here the current court system and how that system would be changed if the proposals now pending are effected to revolutionize the judiciary system.

Following is an outline of the existing system, pointing out areas in which the several courts now have jurisdiction:

JURISDICTION

I. Student Council.
  A. Men's Campus Code Violations.
  B. Case of Constitutionality.
  C. Cases involving elections laws violations.
II. Men's Honor Council
  A. Men's Honor Code violations
III. Women's Honor Council
  A. Women's Honor Code violations
  B. Women's Campus Code Violations
  C. House Council case appeals
IV. Student-Faculty Council
  A. Appelate court for all the others.

Now we will describe the proposed revised court system if the student body elects to amend the judiciary as it is now constituted:

JURISDICTION

I. Honor Council
  A. Both men's and women's Honor Code violations
II. Women's Council
  A. Women's Campus Code violations.
  B. Social rule violations passed on from House Councils
III. Men's Council
  A. Men's Campus Code violations
IV. Student-Faculty Council
  A. Appelate court for all the others

(Note: Any election on an amendment authorizing revision of the courts system would not affect the Student-Faculty Council. It would exist under the proposed system just as it is now drawn.)

We now come to a fourth branch of the judiciary, currently proposed, which would hear cases of constitutionality and those involving elections laws violations. This court would be composed of three members each from the new Men's Council and the new Women's Council.

Such a court would give to women students an equal voice in student government, of which they are now deprived. Under the current system, the Student Council, with one coed member and the rest men, acts on cases of constitutionality and elections laws violations. Under the proposed plan the court which handled those cases would be constituted equally by men and women.

The importance of Foushee's bill is that it provides a parallel court for men in disposition of cases which, under the proposed system, would come before the Women's Council for women exclusively. Explained differently, the new plan provides for a Women's Council which would hear Women's Campus Code violations. Foushee's bill sets up a court to provide for men's Campus Code violations, thus giving men a parallel court.

Approval of this bill is the only means to provide a systematic judiciary in which equal courts are provided for both men and women alike. Its rejection would throw the proposed judiciary completely out of balance.

As was pointed out at the legislature meeting Thursday night, there can be no revision in the judiciary setup without first amending the constitution. This would demand a majority vote of approval by students participating in a campus-wide election.

Obviously, the amendment cannot be called for until the system for which it provides has been drawn up and agreed upon by the legislature. The amendment would only provide for the change in name and jurisdiction of the new courts, and would not be concerned with whatever machinery the legislature might set up to equip the courts for performance of their jobs once they were established.

Symposium Promises Fill Of 'Culture'

Tuesday—7 a.m. The air is filled with suspense. You have just risen and yet even in your present condition, you will know that this is no ordinary day.

There is a buzz from the shower and you hurry down to see what has happened. What do you find? You find a cluster of students gathered around the morning edition of the Daily Tar Heel.

There on the front page is what you have been looking for in high expectation. In the upper right hand corner you see it—Tuesday's lead story. It is not written as you normally see a lead, but is enclosed in a box. Fifteen names are in this box and you eagerly pick up your copy and scan the list.

You read down in a rapid manner, trying to consume as much as you can in as quick a time as possible. You can hardly believe the array of names. There are two senators, a Nobel Prize winning scientist, a famous college president, two great newspapermen, several reknowned professors, several leading labor figures, a few clergymen and a diplomat or two.

Yes, student of Carolina, this is it. It is the official list of speakers who will appear during the week of March 16-23, under the auspices of the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs.

But, this is only the start. There will be others not already referred to. You will not only be exposed to their ideas and philosophies at the regularly scheduled lectures, but will also have an opportunity to hear them and others in classroom seminars and lectures. It doesn't stop here either.

Fraternities, sororities, dorms and other campus organizations will be sponsoring receptions and banquets. State and local papers will be carrying the main parts of the speeches for you, if you miss a lecture.

Every effort will and already has been made to insure you of the most educational week of your stay here at Carolina. You will be exposed to more "raw culture" during this seven day period than ever before.

These men who have been selected to come to Carolina are well fitted for the task confronting them in discussing a problem of the broadness of "survival." They are leaders in their respective fields and will rank highly, when the historians dissect our present civilization.

With active participation and regular attendance at Symposium affairs, you should profit greatly. With normal interest, you will consider this week, just another seven days.

Keep in mind the purpose of the Symposium; "to bring together . . . outstanding minds speaking in open forum on critical problems of our times." Watch for the Tuesday edition and you won't be disappointed.

They Asked Him

Dr. Bernard Schwartz, ousted as its counsel by the House subcommittee investigating the FCC and other agencies and then subpoenaed to testify under oath, spoke plainly and to the point. If the majority of the subcommittee, which some charge is trying to deliver a whitewash rather than true findings, hoped by putting Dr. Schwartz "on the rack" to cow him into evasions or retractions, their strategy backfired.

Federal Communications Commissioner Richard A. Mack "acknowledged," when pinned down, said Dr. Schwartz, that he received several thousand dollars from an attorney for the firm to which Mack afterward voted to award a Miami TV channel. He identified the attorney as T. A. Whiteside, Miami friend of Mr. Mack. He produced checks.

Dr. Schwartz even appeared at the open hearing against his will. He didn't want to mention too many names, fearing to injure innocent persons; but the committee asked him for the facts and it got them.

What, now, has Mr. Mack to say? What has Mr. Whiteside to say? What has National Airlines, which got the TV channel when the FCC overruled its own field examiner, to say?

And what is the House subcommittee going to do about it? —The Durham Sun.

The Price Of Tags

North Carolina motorists, the papers said today, will have until midnight Monday to put new '58 tags on their automobiles.

Most motorists, that is—there are a lot right here on campus who, for all that, won't need license tags until June. They can buy them then.

But that's the price you have to pay for being a freshman, or just a dumb sophomore!

VIEW FROM THE HILL

Judicial Revision — The Good

By CURTIS GANS

The Student Legislature left the student body a salvage job with regard to the current bill for reorganizing the present campus court system.

Acting wisely, against inane objection from the members of the two Honor Councils, the Legislature passed article two of the current bill calling for a mixed Honor Council.

However, many people lost their heads on Thursday night and ended up with a bill, that because article two calls for a constitutional amendment, is at the present time unconstitutional. What is left to do is to reconsider the current bill and hold it under consideration until the campus votes on the amendment unifying the two councils and setting up a new foundation for the Student Council, as well as setting up a court to reconcile legislation with the constitution. There is another alternative. This is to throw the current away, and make a new one while the council amendment is being passed by the Student Body.

The second choice would be unwise, for there are two great gains made by the preset bill. The trial-by-jury provision, whatever its current legal encumbrances, is still a step in the direction of having a court that will perform its true function—that of protecting the innocent.

The second great gain that is made by the current bill is the setting up of a unified honor council, thus insuring that in any one year, there will be but one interpretation of the law as it stands. This goes a long way to protecting the right to a fair trial.

To those who are still opposed to the single court, it should be noted that the Honor Code reads that any individual regardless of sex pledges not to lie cheat or steal. Honor is an individual matter, not a matter that is divided between the sexes . .

Perhaps the most absurd argument offered against the mixed court is that someone "might be unwilling to talk before it" or that someone would lie to it. The latter objection seems absurd since the lar would be committing perjury and should be in line for the next Honor Court. In the case of those who might be "unwilling to talk," it stands to reason that this argument is absured. Anything that would benefit the accused would surely be brought out. Anything that would act to the detriment of the accused would either be covered by the Fifth Amendment or by a legal term called contempt of court.

To those who are still reluctant to change, it should be pointed out that in many of the most respected coed colleges in the United States, the system of a single court to cover both sexes obtains and is deemed a success. Just as is the case with the system now at UNC there are some complaints, but these are in the minority.

There are some who argue that there may be some exception to the efficacy of the proposed system, but there are more exceptions to the efficacy of the present system. A judicial system is not built for the exceptions. It is built to provide the maximum justice, and works out within its framework a way of handling the exceptions. This amendment which shall shortly be proposed to the student body will, in the words of Gary Greer, a legislature representative, provide for "the greatest degree of justice." This is what is sought.

Thus, for reasons of providing a monolithic standard of justice, of getting the maximum justice possible, of making honor a matter of individual concern rather than a sexual concern, of having been tried and proven good in other universities around the country, while the system here has been proved weak, and for reasons that the objections to it are asinine, this amendment must be adopted.

Graham Memorial has a problem, of sorts. It's not really a very important problem, and there's a simple solution to it. All it takes to solve this problem is to post a little notice on the bulletin board in the front hall of the building. But the Director, and several other people whose opinions bear on the situation, are a little reluctant to post that notice. It may have to be posted, nonetheless.

If it is put up, it will probably read something like this: Since Graham Memorial is run for the benefit of the Student Body of this University and is supported by student fees and the State Legislature for that sole purpose, it must be the policy of this building that no one except students, their guests, and visitors to the University may avail themselves of the facilities of Graham Memorial.

The problem that would prompt such an ultimatum? High-school students. But, you ask in all innocence, what have high school students got to do with Graham Memorial? How do they constitute a problem? (You ask this question only because at least half of you don't even have the foggiest notion where Graham Memorial is, let alone what goes on inside the building.) Well, it's this way. High school students are getting into the habit of coming to GM after they get out of school, and playing cards, watching TV, yakking it up, and what have you. Several college students have lodged complaints with the information office, to the effect that they can't watch TV in peace, that all the card tables are taken up by kids, etc., etc., etc. You get the general idea.

There has been similar difficulty in the past. In fact, it finally got so bad that Graham Memorial had to restrict the activity of the high-school crowd to the ground floor of the building. Now it appears that further steps may have to be taken, since they're starting to interfere with the leisure-time activities of the college students for whom the building exists.

Now don't you all go running down to GM, expecting to see the place bursting at the seams with high school kids, or teen age hoods terrorizing the college students. That's not quite the situation.

But there is a situation. It's a situation that requires that something be done about it. What's the answer? Throw all the high school students out of GM? That will solve the problem for Graham Memorial, and that's the important thing for the policy-makers of the Student Union to consider.

So, I guess, maybe that's the thing that will have to happen. But where does that leave the kids? In the street, dear reader, in the street. And what does a young'un do when all other sources of entertainment are closed to him? He turns to what might, in this day and age, be called do-it-yourself-recreation. Wanna know more about some of the types of do-it-yourself-recreation? Pick up any newspaper, and look at the front page. Look for the words New York City, and then read the story in which they appear. Stealing, vandalism, gang fights, muggings, rape, and murder? You name it, they got it.

And you know what? If this sleepy little town doesn't wake up pronte, it's going to get jarred out of its peaceful, deceptive slumber to find out that Chapel Hill has got it, too! Contrary to popular opinion, our little village is not a germ-free culture, sterilized against all the social diseases that infect the outside world. Everybody thinking that's the case still won't make it so. There is a problem, and it must be answered.

So. What's the answer? Unfortunately, the first answer is to convince anybody that an answer is even needed. Of the six people who read this far in the column, at least three will dismiss the whole thing as a pipe dream. The first answer, then, is to face up to reality.

I have heard it suggested that a solution to the possibility of delinquency by our youngsters would be a curfew. The proposed hours of this curfew vary, but the idea is basic: after a certain hour at night, anyone under a certain age who was still on the streets would be picked up by the police and required to give reason for being out after the curfew. Some people say the deadline should be midnight. Others say eleven o'clock, or ten o'clock, or even nine o'clock. Why not just pass a law requiring a high school student to go directly home after school? I don't think a curfew is the answer. It doesn't get at the source of the problem.

The proposed Recreation Center is a little more like it. At least it will give the kids somewhere to go and work off some supervised steam. But Recreation Centers cost money. And trying to separate people from their money is not exactly the easiest task in the world. To get anything like a good center, the people building it need at least $50,000. So far the residents of Chapel Hill and environs have pledged $30,000. Ground is going to broken in the spring on the basis of these pledges, and building is going to start, but they're still shy at least $20,000.

They're still shy at least $20,000 because, apparently, not enough people realize what an investment now will mean in the future, in terms of prevention.

So, just sit there, Chapel Hill. Sit there smug and content in the knowledge that we don't have to worry about our kids. Just keep telling yourself that Chapel Hill doesn't even know the meaning of juvenile delinquency. And you'll be right, too. Chapel Hill doesn't know the meaning of juvenile delinquency. But Chapel Hill is apt to find out, regardless of the rather inane yammerings of a recent author.

When you ask a teen ager where he went, and he says, "out," it might not be a bad idea to find out where "out" is. And when you ask him what he did, and he says, "nothing," you might ask him what he means by "nothing." The answers might just shake you up. But I doubt it.

David Parker, Evelyn Moore Head Symposium Tasks & Exhibit Units

EVELYN MOORE

David Parker, sophomore from Lexington, and Evelyn Moore, junior English major from Winston-Salem are currently handling the duties of chairman of the Carolina Symposium's Organization and Administration Committee and Exhibits Committee respectively.

Parker's committee is unlike all other Symposium committees as it has no specific job assigned to it, but is rather charged with the task of assisting in the office in a variety of tasks.

They are providing office assistants for typing and other work and are coordinating with the permanent office staff. They will also be working under Al Goldsmith and the Symposium's Finance Committee in making purchases immediately prior to the Symposium Week.

Parker is a member of the Pi Kappa Alpha social fraternity and is on the Student Traffic Committee, chairman of the Student Government Committee and a Morehead Scholar.

Members of his committee include: Gary Greer, Tog Sanders, Jenky Jenkins, Chris Woodbury, Kay Ziegler and Frank Martin.

Exhibits Committee

Miss Moore's committee has been and will continue to be busily engaged in working out and completing arrangements for the many exhibits to be seen on campus during the Symposium Week.

Exhibits will be seen at Memorial Hall, Graham Memorial, Lenoir Hall and all other important campus buildings. In Memorial Hall there will be a large Symposium calendar with a list of speakers, topics and times of address. There will also be a poster on each individual speaker prepared by various members of the committee.

Also seen in Memorial Hall will be book displays. These books will include those written by the speakers and books pertinent to the Symposium theme-survival. In addition there will be a display of one of our latest guided missiles—the Matador.

Court Displays

In Y-Court there will be general publicity posters and a continuous 16 mm film projector showing subjects on survival. Display X will also be seen, coming either from the Civil Defense Authority or from the Atomic Energy Commission.

Posters will be spread throughout the campus of various sizes and shapes. Lenoir Hall will have a special Symposium Menu and some type of roving exhibit. Displays will be seen at the library and a short will be shown at the free flicks.

Miss Moore is active on campus as a member of the Election Board, GMAB, the Y hospital committee and is on the Yack advertising staff.

Her committee includes the following people: Jerry Adams, Bill Dorroh, Anne Eckerson, Bob Furtado, Clara Mack, Nancy Milan and Mary Montgomery.

Flowers' Trial

One juror told Superior Court Judge C. W. Hall he didn't think "We will ever" reach an agreement. The jury was deadlocked 9-3 when Judge Hall called a recess until 7 o'clock tonight.

Judge Hall summoned the jurors to the courtroom and asked them if they wanted to go to supper or continue on through on their deliberations. One of the jurors then spoke up that "I don't think there is any need to come back," indicating there was a hopeless deadlock.

When the jury reported it was divided 9-3, Judge Hall said he didn't want to know which way the jury was divided.

Several of the University deans met this week with Dr. James Godfrey, dean of the faculty, to consider questions not immediately answered by the Council's action on Feb. 7 in eliminating class attendance regulations.

In a mimeographed letter to members of the faculty today Dr. Godfrey included several of the questions concerning the new attendance regulations as discussed and interpreted by the deans.

As a personal notation in the letter, Dr. Godfrey explained the purpose of the requirement in the new ruling which says that instructors will report to the student's academic dean when the student has missed three consecutive classes.

"This requirement merely calls to the attention of the Administration that the whereabouts of the student should be checked. It will not lead to any other action by the Dean unless the instructor wishes it to do so."

Mathematician John B. Jackson, like many other mathematicians, engineers and physicists, came to IBM directly from graduate school. Today, an Applied Science Representative, he reviews his progress and tells how he uses his math background in a new field.

What's it like to be with IBM?

First of all, what does an Applied Science Representative do? In John Jackson's own words, "I work constantly with key executives of the many and varied customers served by IBM in the territory for which I am responsible, advising them on the use of their electronic data processing machines. I consult with these customers, analyze their scientific and technical problems for solution with IBM machines. Occasionally, I write papers and give talks and demonstrations on electronic computing. All in all, it's pretty fascinating . . . " In other words, he is a full-fledged computing expert, a consultant . . . and a very important person in this coming age of automation through electronics.

A consulting sales job

During the three years that John Jackson has spent with IBM as an Applied Science Representative, he has guided innumerable customers to new and better ways of doing things with electronic computers. For example, a leading aircraft manufacturer wanted to experiment with a radically different design for a nuclear reactor. Although the basic format had been established, the project still required many months of toil with mathematical equations. The aircraft people decided that they couldn't afford to wait that long, so they called on IBM. After consultation with top executives, John Jackson helped to map out a computer program that saved the organization over 100 days of pencil-chewing arithmetic. Later, for this same company, he organized the establishment of computer systems for aircraft performance predictions and for data reduction of wind tunnel tests. At the same time, he worked with this company's own employees, training them in the use of IBM equipment. He remains in touch with this customer to assist with new studies and problems as they develop.

Consulting with top executives

A new field for the mathematician—IBM computers

Why did John Jackson decide to join IBM? Today, he is exercising his mathematical know-how in a field that was practically unheard of ten years ago. Even now, this kind of work may be news to you. It was to him a few years back when he was an undergraduate at the University of Colorado. At that time, he was considering mathematical research. But he liked the excitement and diversification of business and industry, and he wanted to use his mathematical background in that area. It was not until he was interviewed by IBM that he became aware of this new field for mathematicians. A few months later, he began his career as an Applied Science trainee.

Mapping out a computer program

John Jackson has progressed rapidly since he joined the Company. He's now the Washington representative operating with one of IBM's key Divisions, Military Products, in the Washington, D. C., office. With his wife Katherine, daughter Lisa, and John, Jr., he enjoys life in the nation's capital.

Discussing a mathematics problem

Interesting and challenging responsibilities, plus the knowledge that he is making a substantial contribution in a rapidly expanding area of IBM that is important to the Company and to the nation, assure John Jackson that he is moving along a road of real future opportunities.

This profile is just one example of what it's like to be with IBM. There are excellent opportunities for well-qualified college men in Research, Development, Manufacturing, Sales and Applied Science. Why not ask your College Placement Director when IBM will next interview on your campus? Snow Greets Tar Heels

CHICAGO, Ill—A two-inch blanket of snow with promise of more to come greeted the Carolina Tar Heels on their arrival at the Chicago Airport yesterday afternon. It was 20 degrees.

The big Capital Viscount which brought the Tar Heels in to the Windy City from Washington after an hour stopover there had to stop by the momentum of the propellors since the landing strip was covered with ice and snow.

The team arrived at the Morrison Hotel just off State Street (Chicago's answer to Broadway) about 3:30 EST.

A short meeting and a brief workout was next in order for the Chapel Hillians.

Carolina of course, is in town to play powerful Notre Dame in the Chicago Stadium tonight. The Tar Heels and Irish will go on about 10:45 (EST) in the nightcap of a doubleheader which sends Kentucky against Loyola in the opener.

Big Game For Tar Heels

This is a big game for Carolina, but it's not half as big as some of the ones the Tar Heels have been playing in the Atlantic Coast Conference and the players are glad to get away from the tough ACC race for a few days.

Pete Brennan about summed up the way the pressure is mounting in the conference when he said: "Sometimes I feel like I want to just get away from it all. I fouled out at Wake Forest with six minutes to go and had to sit on the bench the rest of the game. Believe me, that's the most miserable place in the world to be. You have to sit there and watch it and know you can't do anything about it. There'll be pressure against Notre Dame but not as much as we get in the conference."

Even 16,000 feet up in the air one could sense that the team was feeling a little better after the close Wake Forest game. This trip could be just what the doctor ordered by way of being mentally ready to go again when it resumes conference play against State in Raleigh Tuesday night.

Spoke Harvey Salz: "That Wake Forest game gave us the lift we've been needing. We were a little shaky until then, but now I believe we're ready to roll."

New Lineup

The general feeling is that Frank McGuire might have come up with a new lineup in the Wake Forest game. He started Bob Cunningham and Lee Shaffer at forward, Pete Brennan at center and Salz and Tommy Kearns at guards. Salz, however, went to the corner most of the time with Kearns and Cunningham outside.

This lineup seemed to work better than any one this season and McGuire will probably call upon it again. Cunningham had been in a slump, but now he's shaken it and ought to be in there. With this setup, Dick Kepley can replace either of three men and Dick did a good job against Wake Forest as a substitute.

Kearns thought the tight Wake Forest zone was as good as Duke, State or Maryland "but" declared Tommy "They made it close by just hustling every minute." He too thought the Wake game was one of Carolina's better games this season.

The Tar Heels are ready mentally and physically for this game tonight. They are not as tense as they have been lately, but they don't intend to let up one minute. "Everyone of them counts' remarked someone as the Tar Heels boarded the airplane in Washington.

Notes En Route To Chicago

Frank McGuire just got a telegram from the Barber's Association naming him one of the Ten Best Groomed Men in America . . . . . It was not a trick either. McGuire is noted for his spick and span appearance all over the country.

The plane ride got a little bumpy when leaving Raleigh-Durham Airport and again descending into Chicago, and some of the passengers were a little anxious . . . . But things turned out all right and the pilot guided it in without a hitch, although several people were noted complaining about their stomachs.

Salz and Kepley got a waitress in the Washington airport so confused that she seemed ready to turn in her apron . . . . It was early in the morning but the two boys had to have a steak. She searched the menu but couldn't find a steak listed. She was about to make a special order when the boys broke out laughing and order a "coke on the rocks" as Harvey put it.

Brennan doesn't think that finishing in first place in the regular season standings is so important, although he admits his club can still do it. "It gives you a good feeling," says Pete, "but you've got to beat them all to win the tournament."

Bob Cunningham's brother Marty was in Chapel Hill yesterday and just got to say goodbye before the boys headed for the Raleigh-Durham via station wagons.

A few of the non-players on the trip are: Bill Reeves, WRAL. (Raleigh); and Dick Herbert of the Raleigh News and Observer. Ray informs us that air time for tonight's game will be 10:40 EST). It is due to the lateness of the game that The Daily Tar Heel will not be able to give it full coverage.

A capacity crowd of over 16,000 is expected to be on hand for the big doubleheader in the stadium tonight.

Prep Teams Meet Here Today

The Southern Interscholastic Swimming meet will be held in Chapel Hill today at Bowman Gray Memorial Pool. Time trials get underway at 9:30 this morning with the finals scheduled for 3:30 this afternoon.

The meet will feature the best of the high school and prep school swimmers in the south, with 11 teams and 150 swimmers entered.

The defending champions, Greensboro, will be co-favorites with Georgia Military Academy, Westminster High of Atlanta, and Myers Park High of Charlotte.

Several individual records will be in jeopardy today as the meet includes Bill Cass of Georgia Military Academy, recognized as the number one prep school distance swimmer in the nation, along with John Burwell of Greensboro, a high school all-American last year in the 100-yard freestyle.

Tar Heel Swimmers Rout Deacons; Winning Streak Pushed To 10 Meets

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Carolina varsity swimming team pushed its unbeaten string to 10 last night in Bowman Gray Indoor Pool when the Deamon Deacons of Wake Forest fell victim to the Tar Heel mermen by a 56-30 count. In securing their tenth win of the season, Pat Earey's Tar Heels took all but two events in the meet.

Senior Walt Rose led the Carolina attack by taking first places in the 50 yard freestyle and the 440 yard freestyle. Other Tar Heel firsts were picked up by Mac Mahaffey in the 100 butterfly, Brent Nash in the 200 backstroke, Kelly Maness in the 100 freestyle, and Kit Mercer in the 100 breaststroke. Carolina also won the diving event and the 400 yard medley relay.

In the freshman contest which preceded the varsity event the Tar Babies won over Georgia Military Academy by a 58-27 score and over Staunton Military Academy by a 66-18 count. Harry Bloom was the individual high scorer for the frosh taking firsts in the 200 yard freestyle and the 150 individual medley.

Carolina's next swimming meet will be against N. C. State in Raleigh on the twenty-first of this month. This coming Saturday the frosh are scheduled to meet Myers Park High School of Charlotte.

THE SUMMARY

Matmen Face Deacs

Carolina's varsity wrestling team, seeking its fifth win of the season, goes against Wake Forest this afternoon at 3 o'clock on the mats in Woollen Gym.

This meet, cancelled early this week when it appeared that the Deacons were not going to be able to field a team, has been called on again. The meet had been cancelled because a number of the Wake wrestlers were forced out of the lineup by scholastic trouble. The rescheduling was made possible by several football players who recently joined the team.

Coach Sam Barnes is looking forward to today's meet since it will mark the return of Tar Heel heavyweight Larry Hayes to the mats. Hayes, burdened by five labs last semester, was a regular last season in the heavyweight slot.

Coach Barnes will shift his lineup for today's match in order to give some of the squad members practice in wrestling heavier opponents. Curt Champlins, Bill Suttle, and Henry Rhyne will all move up a notch from their regular classes.

Run In New York Tonight

Carolina track stars Dave Scurlock and Wayne Bishop are winging their way to New York where they will compete in the New York AC Indoor Games to be held there tonight.

Scurlock, who has thus far this season won the Boston AA 1,000 and the Millrose 880, will be entered in the 880 tonight. Bishop, who has placed in national competition will be in the 2-mile.

Both races have been oked for their fine fields. The 880 has the best field seen in the last two years, and the experts agree that tonight's two-mile will probably be the fastest of the season.

Ice, Snow Hit 'Hill' Then Rain

By PARKER MADDREY

Icy conditions will prevail today after yesterday's rain on the three inches of fallen snow.

Highways in the Chapel Hill area will remain hazardous today, after yesterdays' snowfall, it was predicted. Roads west of here in the Greensboro-Winston-Salem area are considered as impassable without chains. The mountain region was completely snowbound yesterday. East and southeast of here it is reported clear, receiving heavy rains only.

Snowfall was to have ended gradually last night in this area. Three inches of snow fell in Chapel Hill by 4 p.m. yesterday one inch of which had yielded to the afternoon rain. Another inch of snow was expected last night to give Chapel Hill its' largest snowfall of the season.

In other areas, the eastern Piedmont received two to four inches and the western Piedmont received four to six inches of snow.

It will be partly cloudy with cold winds today, according to the U. S. Weather Bureau at the Raleigh-Durham Airport.

Graduate Club To Hear Talk

The Graduate Club will sponsor the third in a series of supper discussion meetings Monday night beginning at 6 p.m. in Lenoir Hall.

Dr. Minerva Pinnell, visiting assistant professor in the Art Department, will be the guest speaker, discussing "Sources of Imagery in the Visual Arts."

William A. Deaton, club president from Statesville, announced that faculty, staff and undergraduates are invited to attend the programs along with graduate students. The supper will begin at 6 p.m. in an upstairs dining room of Lenoir Hall, and Dr. Pinnell will speak at 6:30.

A graduate of Radcliffe College with the A.M. and Ph.D. degrees, Miss Pinnell has taught previously at Skidmore College in Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and at the University of Illinois, where she also did her undergraduate studies.

Her European study has included two years' stay in Italy as a Fulbright Fellow, as well as visits to Germany, Austria, France, Switzerland, Holland, Spain and the British Isles.

Dr. Pinnell's doctoral thesis dealt with a critical study of High Baroque Classicistic paintings in Italy. She is a member of the College Art Association, and the Society of Architectural Historians.

STASSEN

THOMASVILLE, GA. Feb. 15 (AP) — Harold E. Stassen stepped out today as President Eisenhower's disarmament adviser and announced he is a candidate for governor of Pennsylvania.

Stassen's resignation in order to run on the Republican ticket in the May primary was announced at the President's vacation headquarters.

ATLAS

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla., Feb. 15 (AP) — A test firing on an Atlas Intercontinental Ballistic Missile was halted today a split second before the "Big A" would have blasted off its firing pad.

There was a huge belch of smoke but the fuel never got to the engines of the Atlas, mightiest of American war weapons.

Watchers outside the test center saw the great cloud of smoke and thought the Atlas had exploded on its launching pad. But when the smoke cleared away "the beast" could be seen still standing, its sharp nose pointed skyward.

The Air Force announced that the test was "postponed after encountering technical difficulties immediately prior to the launching."

TAXES

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15 (AP) — The Eisenhower Administration and Democratic House leaders both are reported working quietly and separately on tax reductions plans for use if business continues to slump.

Each side wants to be ready to move quickly when and if necessary.

Wolfpack's Basketball Fortunes Take Nosedive

RALEIGH, Feb. 15 (AP)—Basketball fortunes at North Carolina State College nosedived with the mercury today when two players, one of them the squad's captain, flunked out of school.

The loss of Whitey Bell, captain and the team's top pointmaker, and reserve guard Harold Estis came a few hours before the Wolfpack went on their home court to play Maryland in an important Atlantic Coast Conference game.

"I'm certainly sorry to lose them. They will be sorely missed," said Coach Everett Case.

There was a touch of history repeating itself in the news. About this time last year, the Wolfpack lose the services of two stars—John Maglio and Cliff Hafer—who were dropped for failure to attend classes.

Northern Lights May Do Repeat Performance Soon

"The comparatively rare and beautiful display of northern lights, witnessed by probably millions of people last Monday night, may quite possibly put on repeat performances within the next 30 or 40 days," commented Tony Jenzano, director of the Morehead Planetarium.

He pointed out that statistics show the frequency period for these spectacles of nature is about 26 days, close to the period of rotation of the sun, and that more displays have occurred in March and September than during other months.

"Some scientists, Jenzano commented, "have associated the appearance of the northern lights, or the aurora borealis, with the periods when the earth is facing the surface area of the sun in which sunspots are more numerous."

PLANNING TUESDAY RECITAL

Tuesday Series Slates Sonatas

Three celebrated sonatas for violin and piano, by Beethoven, Tartini and Gabriel Faure, will be presented Tuesday night at 8 o'clock in Hill Hall.

Violinist Edgar Alden and pianist William S. Newman of the Music Department faculty will be the performers in the third spring recital of the Tuesday Evening Series. The program is open to the public without admission charge.

Both men have been teaching at UNC since 1946 and have appeared in concerts together for the past eight years. For Tuesday's program they have chosen Beethoven's "Kreutzer Sonata,' Tartini's "Devil's Trill," and Faure's Sonata in A.

Alden heads the UNC string division, teaching music theory and appreciation, is assistant conductor of the University Symphony Orchestra, and is first violinist for several chamber and orchestral groups.

Newman, who has appeared as recitalist and soloist throughout the country, heads the piano division, teaching music appreciation and graduate musicology.

Winter Germans

Ray Anthony, Leo De Lyon Are Big Hits In Concert Here

Mid South Covered In Snow, Ice

ATLANTA, Feb. 15 (AP)—A snow-laden storm left a heavy blanket of white all across the Mid-South today. It moved northeastward toward the Atlantic Seaboard states with a threat of even heavier snowfalls there.

The storm dumped an inch or more of snow on most of Tennessee and parts of Arkansas, Missouri, Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas.

At least five traffic deaths were reported in the area with weather conditions listed as a factor in four of them. In Alabama, a 78-year-old woman was found dead, apparently from exposure.

Gainesville, 52 miles northeast of Atlanta, recorded 5½ inches of snow.

Alabama Shivers

North Alabama shivered in a paralyzing blanket of snow and snowfall was reported at Monte Sano Mountain east of Huntsville. Clayton Braddock, a reporter for the Huntsville Times, said 14 inches had accumulated there. An eight-inch snow was reported in Birmingham.

Communications lines and in some cases power lines snapped under the heavy weight of snow. Many highways, including U. S. 31 between Cullman and Decatur and U. S. 11 at Gadsden were closed. Buses were stalled at Huntsville and Decatur.

Snow fell as far south as Jackson, Miss., but did not stick on the ground there.

A cold rain at Thomasville, Ga., kept President Eisenhower indoors again. A two-inch snowfall lay on the ground in the area near the Florida border, when the president arrived Thursday for a golfing and bird hunting vacation.

Ice and slush made driving hazardous throughout the Middle South where motorists are unaccustomed to such conditions. Communications facilities were disrupted in some areas, notably Northeastern Alabama.

"SWING MAN WITH A HORN"
He Wowed 'Em At Yesterday's Concert

Show Goes On Despite Snowfall

By MARY ALYS VOORHEES

A Winter Germans audience which braved three inches of snow and a downpour of rain to attend the Germans concert yesterday afternoon went away happy and still praising the excellent entertainment they had just witnessed.

For two hours they had applauded and swooned to the musical magic of Ray Anthony and his orchestra and laughed and sat spellbound at the comedy and vocal talents of the versatile comedian Leo De Lyon.

As the concert came to a close, the audience was on its feet practically shaking the glass window panes with appreciative applause for the great display of talent it had just seen.

Line-Question

Then, it was little wonder that Ray Anthony had remained leader of the band during the past 15 years. "This is one of our favorite schools . . . we enjoy this type of performance the most because the kids know what is going on and get so much out of the program."

After the concert a senior Germans Club member congratulated the orchestra leader: "I've been to 11 Germans concerts, and I have never seen anything to equal the applause here today."

Comedian Leo De Lyon held the audience spellbound during intermission, making his second appearance during the weekend. This performance marked his second visit to the Carolina campus, having appeared several years ago on the Winter Germans entertainment bill.

During his appearance he kept the audience in laughter with his various singing voices — ranging from high soprano to bass—imitations of sounds, quips, etc. At one time he whistled "Humoresque" while humming "Sewanee River." Closing out his part of the program, he imitated a trumpet and was joined by the Ray Anthony band.

Concert Numbers

Presenting a varied program, Ray Anthony and his orchestra pleased the packed house with such numbers as "Tenderly," "Harlem Nocturne," "Stardust," and "Kisses Sweeter Than Wine."

Adding variety were vocalists Phil Grey and Joni Durell, who presented several romantic and popular ballads, comedy singer Ned Flore and the Four Savoys, who added to the program with "Let's Go To the Hop."

"Slaughter on Tenth Avenue" was a big favorite with the Carolina crowd, who later rose to its feet as the band burst forth with "When the Saints Go Marching In" and "Dixie."

Favorite Number

The crowd's favorite was undoubtedly "When the Saints . . ." After one stanza on the stage, Anthony led the band in a march up and down the aisles of the auditori-

Symposium Is Nearing $5,000 Says Chairman

Al Goldsmith, chairman of the Finance Committee of the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs, announced yesterday his committee was very close to the $5,000 budget the Symposium needs in order to operate.

Goldsmith said that several recent contributions have put the goal of his committee within sight. He referred in general to sizable donations from the following organizations: The Interfaith Council, the Trade Union Program on Civil Liberties and Rights and the Executive Program of the Business Administration School.

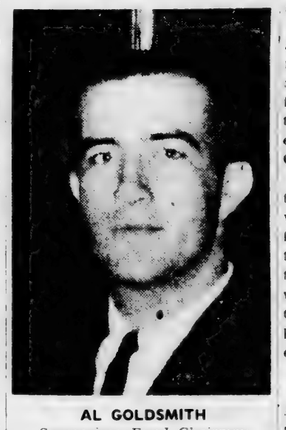
Greeks Contribute

The Finance Committee will conclude their fraternity fund raising drive the first of next week. A great majority of the fraternities and all of the sororities have already contributed.

Goldsmith stated: "From all indications, we should cross the $5,000 mark this week, but as the Symposium will still need more, the fund raising will continue up to and including Symposium Week from March 16-23.

"I would like to urge all groups to contribute that have not already done so. Those desiring to give money may contact me at the Symposium Office in Graham Memorial or at the Chi Phi house. This should be done as soon as possible so that their names may be placed in the Symposium Handbook and daily programs."

Dormitory Campaign



Goldsmith and his committee are also conducting a fund raising campaign in the women's dormitories at this time. They also plan to contact the presidents of the men's dormitories next week.

Expenses

The largest lump sum will go for honorariums, travel and board for speakers and will consume almost $3,000. The Handbook will also be a major expense, running in the neighborhood of $1,000.

The following organizations along with those previously mentioned, have made recent contributions: Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Theta Chi, Alpha Tau Omega and Phi Beta Kappa.

Also: Phi Eta Sigma, Sigma Nu, Tau Epsilon Phi, Delta Upsilon, Delta Sigma Pi, Pi Lambda Phi and Kappa Sigma.

Opera Series Starts On TV

WUNC-TV, channel 4, will present the complete story of opera production in a new series, "Opera for Tomorrow," which may be seen Sunday evenings at 8:30 o'clock and Saturdays at 6:30 p.m.

The host of the 10-program series is Boris Goldovsky, the well-known master of ceremonies for the "Opera News of the Air," the regular intermission feature of the Metropolitan Opera's Saturday afternoon radio broadcasts. Goldovsky was recently featured in another study of musical drama, "Opera for Today."

Actually, "The Meeting" is the second act in a five-act opera entitled "Eastward in Eden" which tells the story of the poet Emily Dickinson. Written by Dorothy Gardner with music by Jan Meyerowitz, the particular act in "Opera for Tomorrow" concerns the meeting of Emily and Dr. Charles Wadsworth, a Philadelphia minister. Miss Gardner is a recognized authority on Emily Dickinson, and her opera is based on factual material about the poet which has recently come to light.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Sandra Reid and Mary Frances Winborne and Glean Meltzer, Lee Van Storey, Houston Everett, Richard Midkiff, Nelson Hinton, William Evans, Frank London, Willis Whitehead, Edmund Nash, Thomas White, Frank Meldau and Donald Nelms.

Men Should Have More Then A 'Running Chance'

(The following editorial was written by the immortal Thomas Wolfe and published in The Tar Heel on January 30, 1920, when Wolfe was then editor of the campus newspaper. There is both beauty and humor in his description of "snow fights" held in earlier days of the University.)

During the week a copious amount of "the beautiful snow" has covered our campus with reckless abandon. It has had the peculiar adhesiveness that is particularly conducted to well-moulded snowballs. And the sophomores have profited by this golden opportunity accordingly. There is no questioning of the loyalty of the men composing the lower classes. There is a question, however, as to whether all these men feel a real responsibility toward the University. A man will make a snowball out of snow that is rapidly assuming granite-like proportions and, having that particularly quaint sense of humor that causes a man to throw such a missile, hurl it at a member of the opposition. As a result several beautiful black eyes have adorned the features of several freshmen, and in two cases it was feared that these men were badly injured. Happily they are recovering rapidly now.

Such a thing as commanding the abolishment of the yearly snow fights between the fresh and sophs by the university or student authorities is not advocated. Things are not abolished here unless the stamp of student approval is placed on them. Nor is there anything particularly vicious in a snowfight itself. But there are several disagreeable elements that should be disapproved of.

For one thing there is the traditional "line running" of the freshmen by the sophomores. One freshman emerging form the Post Office or from Swain, or from some classroom, is met by a fusilade from the assembled sophs. The freshman is "hopelessly outnumbered" but is given what is termed a "running chance" — but his chance on terra firma is no larger than the snowballs in subterranean regions, and unless he chooses to run, he sees white for a few minutes. And let us say right here that a few men have shown a very bad quality of sportsmanship during the recent snow by "cutting down" a freshman. The class opinion of the sophomores, we believe, will not tolerate this kind of conduct from their classmates and we expect to see their stand against it.

The idea put into practice last year of the pitched snow battle between the sophs and the freshs, with an appointed referee to judge the contest, was not a bad one. It had its drawbacks, however; the sophomores being in their turn hopelessly outnumbered are soon put to flight by the big crowd of freshmen. We would suggest as an amendment the snow battle idea with an equal number of men drawn from each class. The affray would be divided into two halves so that all desiring to enter the game might get a chance. The contest would be decided on points by the referee and, in one armies' precipitate retreat from the field of honor, victory would be automatically awarded to the other.

A tradition is hard to oppose and, those who are followers of that tradition are somewhat obscure in their prospective, but from the more temperate and unprejudiced observation of the bystander, it is undoubtedly not in accord with all our principals of fair play to see one man beset by a score. We all hold by these principals in our athletic games and our everyday relations and if we break them here it is because our vision is focused on the traditional thing, rather than on the right one.

It is the spirit of Carolina men to give every man, be he graduate or freshman, not a "running chance." Let's back this spirit in all we do.

Snowballers Should Aim At Enemy, Not Windows

Thomas Wolfe in the editorial reprinted above has described snowfights as they should be conducted between opposing groups at the University. It would do well for everyone to abide by the rules which he sets forth.

Unfortunately, however, there are those among us whose animal characteristics, brought out by the infrequency of snowfalls in Chapel Hill, lead them to costly destruction of private property when the scarce snows fall.

One popular game is for one fraternity to align itself against another and hurl their missiles not exclusively at members of the other team but to aim them at window panes in the fraternity house to which the opponent belongs.

A child, it seems, is capable of better behavior. Not only is the game a costly one, but it as well could result in severe personal injury to one sleeping below a vulnerable window or exposed to flying glass once the opponent has scored a hit.

At least, it is a ridiculous sport. Such games took a heavy toll of windows in the morning hours Saturday and what other damage might have occurred by today is anybody's guess. Yet these fights occur almost invariably every time an inch of snow falls on UNC.

It would take only sincere agreements between the various fraternities to prohibit the recurrence of these destructive and inconsequential snow fights. And any fraternity member who weighs the destructiveness of them would abide by the agreements.

One broken window pane soon leads to a score. But under a mutual understanding the offended fraternity house should devote its time and energy to finding who caused the first act of violence instead of contributing to the damage by seeking revenge in terms of window panes.

Aim at each other, boys, and let the helpless fraternity houses alone. You're only bringing about expense to yourself and others when you hurl your missiles at window panes.

If We Want Justice Let's Have Equality

As we see it, there's only one thing wrong with Robert Foushee's bill to set up a new court to hear cases of constitutionality and violations of elections laws at UNC.

Foushee has proposed in the bill that membership would consist of three women and four men — the reason for the men's majority being that there are far more men at UNC than women.

Now if that isn't doubletalk about insuring justice to all students, we don't know what is. Legislators are spending endless hours to insure equality between men and women, yet have provisions in their bills which prohibits it.

We would suggest to solons that membership on any courts which it sets up be equally comprised by men and women, if the legislature wants both sexes represented in the courts. Equality is, after all, the first step toward justice.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Simplified & Codified; Can't Beat City Hall

One of the things that changes as often as the moon on this campus is the cut system. This presetns a very real problem to the average student. Even the title is appropriately disturbing. The students take the cuts, and the faculty has the system whereby the students may be disposed of.

Therefore we are inclined to believe that the whole matter is something else that the faculty and administration has devised to confuse and astound the students. (You can't beat City Hall.) We know of one professor who declares that there never has been a "Cut system" that he knows of. And we know of several others who pay only lip service to any "policy" laid down by City Hall.

Then there's always the professor who doesn't know what the present policy is, and the one who doesn't care what the policy is. (Nothing short of an unexpected demise on the part of the student concerned is grounds for missing his class, and then it has to be certified by the county coroner or the parents get word that their recently departed has failed a course for overcutting.)

We understand that the faculty council is considering a new policy that will go into effect next semester, a uniform policy that will apply to students in any undesignated department or school whatsoever. If our information is correct, and we assume it is, for the informer is on our payroll, here is the way it will work:

All students except freshmen and second semester juniors will be allowed three cuts, unless the instructor objects strenuously, in which case there will be only one cut allowed.

However, on months with five Fridays no one will be allowed to cut during the last two class days of the month providing they do not fall on Saturday and Sunday in which all students should be in the church of their choice.

Students who have a quality point average between 2.334 and 2.786 will be allowed to cut on the first and third Tuesdays in every week if there are no conflicts with designated quizzes given in the Dramatic Art department.

Students who live north of Alexandria, Virginia will be allowed free cuts on Thaddeus Stevens and U. S. Grant's birthdays if their addresses are certified by the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Southern students are always allowed cuts on Lee's birthday, wedding day, wash day and any and all other days on which the United Daughters of the Confederacy declare to be significant in Lee's life.

Cuts for reasons of health, such as pregnancy, Tuberculosis, etc. must be attested to by your attending physician before a board of six university officials.

Cuts for any other reasons are strictly prohibited!

It certainly is a relief to see a simplication and codification of the cut system.

Letters On Venezuela And Frats

Dear Mr. Perez:

In your stand on the recent upheaval in Venezuela to overthrow the regime of Perez Jimenez, you made a number of statements which I cannot let go by unchallenged.

Let me say first of all that I do not intend to defend Perez Jimenez on any count; my purpose is rather to call for an appraisal of the system which lets such a man obtain and hold such a position.

You say that your people have been engaged in a "continuous and never-ending struggle for freedom." I would compare this struggle to that of a fly caught in a spider's web, the web in this case being ignorance of the principles of government.

You see, it is not enough to overthrow a man who has usurped the people's rights. You must set up in his place an institution which will prevent this usurpation.

You fire-eyed patriots shouting "Freedom!" may be sufficient to stir the stricken populace to action in times of oppression, but they are usually very poor policy-makers, and frequently fall under the leadership of a man who turns out to be no less odious than his deposed predecessor.

You mention the United States Constitution of 1789 as "establishing a democratic government to govern the rules of rural society!" You have saved some face by admitting a scarce knowledge of U. S. history, but closer study in this field will lead you to find that the framers of our Constitution made absolutely no reference to democracy, and in fact went to some pains to avoid its mention. They certainly included no guarantees of freedom in the original document. The men who formed our system of government were landowners acting in their own interests.

We are fortunate that they were men of intelligence and discretion such as are rarely found in equal number in any country at any time, and that they left the way open for democratic processes to evolve when the people were ready for them to do so.

Drawing a parallel, then, we had our revolutionists—such men as Samuel Adams, Paul Revere, and the like. But behind them came such men as Benjamin Franklin and James Madison—clear-thinking, practical men who based their theories on economic and political reality. These it was who built our Constitution; not a mob of brand-waving radicals.

As for Venezuela relations with the United States, ask those professors, doctors, lawyers, engineers, etc., how many of them would be what they are and have what they have if it were not for the much-maligned United States Dollar. Why did you fail to mention that three-fifths of Venezuela's total revenue comes from United States Oil Companies?

I hate to rub this in, but let's give credit where credit is due.

Idealism is laudable, to be sure, but without wisdom it is a blind, helpless thing that may well lead its followers off the brink of chaos. Before you attack Perez Jimenez too viciously, then, perhaps it would be a good idea to look at the system and conditions which spawned him. Only through correction of these can you prevent his kind from plaguing your country chronically through all its future years.

To the editor:

Alas Sir, you stand accused. Is it time for another recall election?" Daily your pages decry the deplorable state of US education. Then why vituperate Lambda Chi (in editorial of Feb. 12)? Do not these worthy Lambdas contribute much? If they elect to party, let them party; if they elect to flunk, so be it (Being wary of sheriffs, parents et al.). For thereby they gain an effective education. You do wrong to suggest curbs be put on UNC's poor little lambs; let them grow, mature, procreate, inherit the earth. Let freedom ring "once the final class bell has rung." Live! be gay! enjoy! Mr. Eisele.

Judicial Revision — Evil

By CURTIS GANS

In the spirit of compromise often good things are lost and sometimes nothing is gained.

This was the case in the legislature's handling of the judicial bill on Thursday night which left a hollow shell out of a basically good bill.

The legislature because of the lack of constitutionality of the bill must reconsider the bill. In reconsidering they should take out the following points:

1) Permanent jurors must be stricken from the bill. In a jury system they have no place, and in the proposed system, they will surely wreak havoc with justice.

Permanent jurors would be a major factor in influencing the jury's decision, since members of a jury, who have never served before would tend to look up to these people. In doing so they would in effect be negating the votes which the new jurors would have. This would give a preponderance of power into the hands of the permanent jurors, power that in a court of law they should not have.

It does not take any experience to judge when the facts are presented as to whether the defendant has lied, cheated, or stolen. Any clarification of what constitutes these offenses may be given by the judge, in this case the council, in its charge to the jury prior to the opening of the trial.

Experience in itself destroys the basic function of the jury, for the jury is by its very nature supposed to come into the trial without benefit of presuppositions, for it should be the decisions of nine men sitting on the jury and thinking as individuals that gives protection to the accused that the scales will not be weighted beforehand. If any one of these nine are under the influence of a permanent juror, then it destroys the protection that the accused has that each of these nine are acting independently.

Moreover, there is a distinct possibility by the very nature of the experience of the permanent jurors that they will influence the jury in the wrong manner, for they in seeing many cases may have a predisposition about any one, and will try to influence the jury to see its way, although the facts are incorrectly weighed.

It was argued Thursday night that the permanent jurors would better be able to interrogate in the trial; however, in the jury trial system the jury does not interrogate, it sifts the facts by ear.

There remains then no valid argument for the permanent jurors, with the single exception that the proponents of permanent jurors must find a place for their poor honor council members who will be out of a job when this system begins. Isn't it a bit early to start thinking of a pension system on the UNC campus, especially when that pension system means undermining the core of justice?

2) The two-thirds majority vote necessary to convict must be changed to unanimity.

A justice system is not set up to correct or to punish. It is set up to protect. The fundamental precept of justice is the protection of the innocent. This means one lets 100 guilty persons escape punishment in order that no innocent person gets convicted. The principle of reasonable doubt, so long established as a safeguard to individual rights in the civil court system, had better be taken into consideration in the court system currently being established on the U.N.C. campus. Under this system, in civil law, if any doubt is in the mind as to the guilt of the accused on the part of any one of the jurors, the accused cannot be convicted. This is fundamental to the protection of the innocent. When the court has within its power the ability to suspend one from school and thus radically alter the future course of his life, it had better insure the accused any possible safeguard against his conviction. The point is not to convict, but to protect.

3) The establishment of sex restrictions on the jury should be stricken from the bill, since one does not have to be of any one sex to decide on the facts of the case. On the campus it might be a different case in the case of the council, but to place a restriction as to who is eligible to serve on a jury, is to say that facts have sexual colorations. They do not. Anyone, whether male or female, must be able to serve on any jury, or one denies the responsibility of the citizenry to serve on the jury, and says in effect that there are only certain jurors that are capable of judging the facts at any trial.

4) The question of a holdover chairman is a serious one, for as it is now constituted the council may elect a chairman to serve for an extra year without having been re-elected by the voters. This leads to the fact that the student body will not be represented in the chairman of the councils, and that the council chairman can stay in office despite popular objection to his methods and procedures. This must be eradicated, and the chairman be selected from the new council in the spring rather than from the old council, leaving a holdover office.

5) As it stands now, the Honor System Commission will pick the jurors, and will rule on the validity of the arguments of the accused's counsel against having any one of the selections on the jury.

This is a two-fold wrong. There is no check present on the Honor System Commission's selection, and as it stands now it provides no opportunity for the prosecution to present its objections against the selection of any one juror.

This power of ruling on the validity of excuses of the two counsels against having certain members of the jury serve should be in the hands of the court, or the Honor Council.

On Thursday night, the executive department of student government went before the legislature to try to effect a compromise which would have allowed for permanent jurors but would have ruled out a holdover chairman. This compromise failed, and both odious parts were left in. What is truly the horrible part of all this, is that both parts, with a little leadership or without executive interference in the process of the legislative, would have been left out of the bill.

There is an old much quoted proverb: "If you give them an inch, they'll ask for a mile." What may happen out of this is that not only will these parts be left in, but the other good features, such as the joint council, the jury trial provision, and the separate jurisdiction over facts and sentence may be lost.

The legislature should from here on steer clear of executive and judicial leadership, and perhaps it will get some good done.

news brief

The Democrats are reported putting together a package plan of tax cuts totaling more than five billion dollars and cutting across the economy in both general and selective areas.

SUMMIT

WASHINGTON, Feb. 15 (AP) — President Eisenhower has written a new letter to Soviet Premier Bulganin which is designed to try to pin Bulganin down to brass-tacks talk about arranging a summit conference.

The letter has been cleared with this country's North Atlantic Allies, informants said today. It will be delivered in Moscow early next week, probably Monday.

Information about it became known here as State Department officials studied evidence that the Soviets are whipping up a world-wide diplomatic offensive in support of their drive for a summit conference. This involves Far Eastern as well as European moves and could lead to some new Russian bid to include Red China in a summit conference.

NEW GRADUATE SCHOOL DEAN & HIS FAMILY

ALEXANDER HEARD

Dean Starts Duties As Head Of Grad School

Alexander Heard, new dean of the Graduate School has assumed his duties here and will direct the program of graduate studies in this institution—a task which is formidable and fraught with tremendous educational opportunities and responsibilities.

Dean Heard was appointed by President William C. Friday, with the approval of the Board of Trustees. However, Dean Heard has been a visiting professor at Harvard University during the past year, and is just now undertaking his new assignment in the University.

"Our graduate school, with its standing and its accomplishments, is a prime reason for the distinction which the University has achieved in the eyes of scholars all over the world," said Chancellor Aycock.

"We are determined in Chapel Hill to continue and to advance our University to still greater heights. We are fortunate in having to head the Graduate School a man of the ability and vision. Dean heard brings to the task qualities of leadership which will assure continuing and accelerating standards of quality in the University of North Carolina."

Political Scientist

Dean Heard is a political scientist, an author, a prodigious researcher, an adept speaker and a participant in community educational, civic, political and religious affairs appropriate to one who practices what he preaches and teaches.

A native of Savannah, Ga., he is 40 years old, a graduate of UNC in 1938, and as an undergraduate especially active in campus government which augured the attainments he realized in the 20 subsequent years of his career.

He received his masters degree from Columbia University in 1948 and his Ph.D. degree from Columbia in 1951.

In 1939 he won two appointments to study American government in action, one from the National Institute of Public Affairs and one from the Southwestern Field Training Program sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation and the Department of the Interior, with headquarters in Albuquerque, New Mexico, where he worked with the U. S. Indian Service.

For four months he was in Washington assisting Prof. E. W. Zimmerman, formerly of the UNC faculty, with an economic study of Puerto Rico. In the fall of 1941 he went to Quito, Ecuador as American vice-counsul and economic warfare officer.

Heard joined the Navy in 1943 and for 19 months served at sea on the U. S. S. Laurens, an attack transport. He took part in combat landings in Lingayen Gulf in the Philippines and at Okinawa.

Leaving the Navy with the rank of lieutenant in the summer of 1946, he joined the Bureau of Public Administration at the University of Alabama and plunged into the project which Professor V. O. Key, Jr., was heading to an exhaustive study on Southern politics.

Author

Dean Heard is author of "A Two-Party South" published in 1952, and he is at present completing another book on "Money in Politics."

He was married in 1949 to Jean Keller of Florence, Alabama, daughter of the late James Albert Keller president of Florence State Teachers College in Alabama. Mrs. Heard is a violinist and studied at Julliard in New York City. They have four children and live on Westwood Drive in Chapel Hill.

Dr. Heard joined the political science faculty at Chapel Hill in 1950, and in the past seven years has been active in academic affairs, including: chairman, faculty committee on established lectures; member of board of UNC Press, School of Business Administration, School of Social Work, School of Journalism; member of administrative board of the Faculty Council; member of planning committee of the Institute for Research in Social Science; chairman of the Weil Lectures Committee, president of the Faculty Club.

He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, the American Association of University Professors, the International Political Science Association and other political science organizations.

Germans

um as the crowd stood loudly applauding.

As the bandleader had said earlier, "The audiences here are always so enthusiastic." Certainly they were yesterday.

One factor in the success of the concert was the personality of Ray Anthony. Not only was he at ease on stage but he constantly added humor to the program.

Another thing which amazed Carolina students were three of the four trumpet players. Ray Anthony very closely resembled Cary Grant, while two of his band members had the likeness of John Barrymore and Harry James.

The newest Ray Anthony number, an instrumental entitled "The Big Record" is to be introduced to the nation on Patti Page's TV show by the same name Wednesday night over CBS.

Commenting on the record, what he thought might be a big hit, the handsome bandleader was "very excited about it. Kids think it' great to dance to it . . . . The reaction to it has been sensational."

During the concert this new number and "Insincere," another new recording by a member of the orchestra, were introduced to the Winter Germans audience, but neither time did the audience overexert itself with applause.

College Musical Tastes

Backstage the popular "Young Man With A Horn" gave some of his viewpoints on current musical tastes.

Although he felt rock 'n' roll was here to stay, he had found that the collegiate world simply isn't interested in it. "When playing for college dances, most of our music is of a particular kind, dream dancing.

"That's the type they like best in spite of rock 'n' roll," he added. "Our most popular album with the college set is "Dream Dancing,' and because of this trend and the popularity of this type of music we have just recently recorded a new album for Capitol entitled 'Dream Girl' "

Saturday's Answer

John Lawlor, B.S. in E.E., Brown, '52, answers some questions about

An engineering career with the Bell Telephone Companies

John Lawlor is a Transmission Engineer with New England Telephone and Telegraph Company in Boston. His answers reflect his experiences during five years in the telephone business.

Q How did you begin as an engineer in the Bell Telephone Companies?

A My first fifteen months were spent in "on-the-job" training—changing assignments every three months or so. These assignments gave me a broad, over-all background in telephone engineering. And they were accompanied by plenty of responsibility. They progressed in importance with my ability to handle them.

Q What is the attitude of older engineers and supervisors toward young men?

A I've found a strong team spirit in the telephone company. You're encouraged to contribute your ideas, and they're received with an open mind. Young men and new ideas are regarded as vital to the continuing growth of the company.

Q How about opportunities for advancement?

A I'd say they depend on the man. Opportunities to demonstrate your ability come with each new job you're given. The size and importance of your assignments grow with your ability to handle them. All promotions are made from within, and the growth of the business is creating new openings all the time. One more thing. Most telephone engineering locations are convenient to colleges. You can aid your advancement by keeping on with your studies.

Q How does the telephone company stack up where pay is concerned?

A Starting salaries are competitive with those offered by most large companies. Raises are based on merit, with several increases during your first two years with the company. What's more, your performance is reviewed regularly to make sure that your pay keeps up with your progress. All things considered, I think a Bell Telephone career is second to none in rewards and opportunities.

. . . .

Find out about career opportunities for you in the Bell Telephone Companies. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus. And read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office, or write for "Challenge and Opportunity" to: College Employment Supervisor, American Telephone and Telegraph Company, 195 Broadway, New York 7, N. Senior Tar Heels Are Wondering . . .

CHICAGO—The Carolina Tar Heels leave the second largest city in the United States today at 1:45 (EST) and whether or not they will play out of North Carolina again this season is a question that will be answered only in the next three weeks.

When the Chapel Hillians land at the Raleigh-Durham Airport at 5:40 (EST) fellows like Pete Brennan, Tommy Kearns, Bobby Cunningham and Roy Searcy, all seniors will probably be wondering if they'll ever play college basketball outside the Tar Heel State again.

It all boils down to the fact that the Tar Heels have to win the Atlantic Coast Conference title to win the NCAA representation in order to defend the national cage title which they won last year with a fabulous 34-game winning streak.

Carolina, 8-3 in the conference, has games left with N. C. State (Tuesday) in Raleigh, Maryland (Feb. 22) in Chapel Hill and Duke (Feb. 28) in Durham. That means the Tar Heels have to play the three top teams in the conference, a difficult task to ask of any ball club. Then comes the all-important tournament in Raleigh, March 6-8.

Team Should Be Up For Remaining Games

The Tar Heels have every reason in the world to be up for their three remaining regular season games. After all, their three losses in the conference came at the hands of those three clubs.

The matter of the home court is the factor which has most Carolina fans a little anxious about their club's chances of finishing first in regular season play. State, of course, is always tough in Raleigh but the Duke game presents an even bigger headache. The Blue Devils, currently the hottest team around, have a fabulous home winning streak. One consolation, however, is that the Maryland game is in Chapel Hill.

The Tar Heels are confident they can get through it all in good shape. The trip to Chicago went a long way in relaxing them for a few days and now they're ready to come back into the Old North State to challenge any and everything.

Chapel Hillians Enjoy Windy City

The Chapel Hillians had a good time in the windy city. Due to the heavy schedule at the Chicago Stadium (site of last night's game) they weren't able to workout prior to the battle with Notre Dame. Friday night most of the team saw the Hawks and the Rangers in a big hockey match and turned in pretty early. Some of the boys went to a flick and a couple stayed in their rooms and studied.

Only thing we can't understand about the entire trip is why the Carolina-Notre Dame game was the second game of the doubleheader. South Bend, home of the Irish, is only 80 miles away, thus making the Irish a "home" ball club. That accounts for why Carolina played so late, since its a policy of big cities to have the home team play late.

Still it was inconvenient for the North Carolina radio and press to have the Carolina game second. Very few of the papers were able to carry detailed coverage and it was impossible for the game story to make the early editions.

It seems to us that 7:45 is a little late to start a basketball doubleheader and it's even worse to put a team in a different time zone in the second game. Perhaps a change in policy is in order here.

Notes From The Windy City

The Morrison Hotel where the Tar Heels stayed is the highest hotel in the United States . . . The team stayed on the 19th floor and elevator service was a little slow. Lee Shaffer's folks came up the day before the game . . . Lee went out with them Friday night and had a great time . . . Tommy Kearn's dad came in yesterday afternoon about two . . . Frank McGuire must know about everybody in Chicago . . . He spent a lot of time on the telephone and was constantly greeting old friends . . . One of his closest buddies is Kentucky Coach Adolph Rupp whose team played Loyola last night . . .

Ray Stanley was disappointed in the hocky game Friday night . . . says he might not even give the "Stanley Cup" this year . . . Chicago Stadium is only about a ten minute taxi ride from the Morrison so most of the boys got to see the first half of the Kentucky-Loyola game . . . Buck Freeman tried to find a top high school game somewhere in the city Friday night but couldn't. "The big games are played on Thursday," he said . . . Freeman frequently watches high school games on trips such as this one. . .

"Look Magazine" representatives were gathered in the nearby Sherman Hotel to pick '57-58 All-American Cage Teams . . . Temperature went down as low as 10 degrees yesterday morning . . . Athletic Director Chuck Erickson was on the trip . . . He too has many friends in Chicago.

Notre Dame Tromps Heels In Second Half Spree 89-70

VIA RAY REEVES

CHICAGO, Ill. — Carolina's Tar Heels unable to stop a torrid Notre Dame scoring streak during the first 3 minutes of the second half, fell to their fifth defeat 89-70, here tonight.

After a nip and tuck first half, which ended tied at 36 all, the "Fighting Irishmen" came back hard and in the first six minutes of the period out scored the Tar Heels 14-4 The Irish did not relinquish their lead and were threatened only once when the Tar Heels pulled up within six points at the 12 minute mark.

The big difference for the Tar Heels was Notre Dame's Tom Hawkins. The big forward lead the Irish scoring spree and finished with 33 points for the night to lead both teams. 23 of his points came in the second half.

Pete Brennan was the leading Carolina scorer with 28.

The Tar Heels are due to arrive at the Raleigh-Durham Airport at 5:40 barring bad weather.

Next game will be in Raleigh Tuesday night again the N. C. State Wolfpack. They face Maryland in Chapel Hill Feb. 22 and venture to Durham on Feb. 28 to do battle with the red hot Blue Devils.

Snow Stops Athletes

Both athletic events scheduled here yesterday were cancelled because of the weather. Snow and ice forced the cancellation of the wrestling match with Wake Forest and the indoor practice track meet with State and Wake Forest.

Blue-White Tilt Plans Started

Committee selections and initial plans for the annual Blue-White football game were made at the February meeting of the Monogram Club.

The Blue-White game, traditional climax to spring practice, is sponsored each year by the UNC lettermen's club. Net proceeds support club functions and the scholarship program.

The 1958 Blue-White game is scheduled for March 15. Coach Tatum has indicated that he may divide the squad earlier this year, and aid in promoting a rivalry in the interest of the spectators.

In addition, the Monogram Club hopes to initiate some award for members of the winning team.

Co-chairmen for the Blue-White program are Monogram Club President Giles Gaca and Vice-President Buddy Payne.

The committees and their chairmen include Don Kepper and Bill Lyons, tickets; Bob Boyette and Pete Grodsky, queen contest; Wayne Bishop and Jim Hunter, programs; Ken Hoke, program selling; Dave Wall and Nick Zlotnicki, halftime ceremonies and Curtis Hathaway and Billy Thornton, publicity.

No Clowning In Games For 'Deadpan' Salz

By BILL KING

(Special To DTH)

CHICAGO—Many basketball fans who have seen the Carolina Tar Heels in action this season have gotten almost as big a kick out of watching Harvey Salz in action as they have watching the ball game.

The fellow who thought of the term "Deadpan" must have had Harvey in mind because there is certainly nobody around who can match that blank expression on Harvey's face from the opening tip-off to the final buzzer of a ball game. The only facial movement is his constant chomping on a piece of gum.

He has been called Andy Gump, Grumpy and has even had a few "Lil Abner" monikers hung on him. In a word, Harvey is one of the funniest looking fellows on the courts today. But when he starts displaying his basketball finess, Carolina fans will agree that he could look like an arthritic chimpanzee and still play ball for them.

Harvey gets a big kick out of his notoriety as a deadpan. "The first time I ever realized it was when everybody started kidding me about it," laughs Harvey. "I guess I've always been that way."

Whenever there's Salz on the basketball courts, there's chewing gum in the mouth. "I have always chewed gum while playing basketball." He says. "It's very relaxing in a game, especially the tough ones."

As for the deadpan expression, Salz has a perfectly reasonable answer. "I figure there's nothing to smile about when you're playing basketball. I'm not out there to kid around, I can do that off the court."

Anybody who knows Harvey knows that he isn't lying about that off the court stuff—In fact, he's one of the funniest guys around. Harvey rooms with Danny Lotz at Carolina and they share rooms on trips also. The two could make a million bucks if they could carry their comedy onto the stage. Danny is a perfect straight man for the heavily Brooklyn accented Salz.

The question often arises, is Salz as undisturbed on the court as he looks. The answer is yes. "I don't feel anything once I'm on the court," he avers. "It's just like another world. In the locker room, though, I get plenty of butterflies."

Harvey has a pretty good philosphy about this game of basketball and how it should be played. "When you keep your head you've licked three-fourths of the battle." Yep, Harvey's deadpan will remain, and there's a mighty good chance it'll become more and more famous in the next couple of years because Harvey Salz is just beginning to make the basketball world realize that he is one of its future greats.

Scurlock Is Second; Beaten By Murphy

New York — Villanova's Ron Delaney scored his 20th straight indoor mile victory as he beat off a last lap bid by Hungary's Istvean Rozsavolgyi to win the "Baxter Mile" in a disappointing 4:10, at Madison Square Garden tonight.

Delaney, running as usual, with the emphasis on victory set a slow pace most of the way as he changed his usual tactics against the threat imposed by the newly-arrived world 500-meter record holder from Hungary.

Square-shouldered Tom Murphy of Manhatton, took the lead with two laps to go and pounded to a six yard upset victory over Dave Scurlock of Carolina in the "Halpin Half" in the time of 1:52.6. It was Scurlock's first defeat of the year.

Dave Sime of Duke won the 60-yd. dash in meet record equalling time of 6.2 seconds. Sime came on in the final few yards as usual to capture the race. Ken Cave of the Army was second Mel Barnwell of Pitt was third and Villanova's George Sydner was forth.

Sime got a better start than usual, but still trailed by a half step at the thirty yard mark. Then he uncorked a blinding burst of speed to overhaul the three others and win by a half step.

Ed Cooke of Maryland was second in the shot put with a heave of 55 feet 9 and one half inches. The event was won by Parry O'Brien, who bested his own listed World Record with a 61 foot, 5½ toss.

Broad Student Participation Expected For Various Events

The Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs today disclosed a battery of outstanding speakers who will appear at Carolina during Symposium Week from March 16-23.

Included on the roster of well known personalities are Sen. John Sparkman of Alabama, Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington, Dr Sidney Hook of New York University Victor Reuther of the United Auto Workers and the Reverend Julian Hart of Yale University.

Also, Jonathan Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer; William Lee Miller, Yale University; Dr. Katherine Elizabeth McBride, president of Bryn Mawr College; Sergei Striganov, consul for the Russian Embassy; I. I. Rabi, 1944 Nobel Prize Winner; Spencer Love, president Burlington Mills and Harry Ashmore, editor of the Arkansas Gazette.

The speakers, all leading figures in their respective fields, will work around the general Symposium theme—Survival. The survival topic is being further sub-divided into several areas such as physical survival, culturalsurvival and American values in crisis.

There are many special features being run that week for students here at Carolina and for the general public. Programs will be presented each morning in Carroll Hall and each evening in Memorial Hall.

Sandwiched in between these presentations will be classroom seminars and lectures, where the students will have an opportunity to hear the speakers in a small group.

Banquets, Receptions

Many of the campus fraternities and sororities will be sponsoring banquets and receptions for the personalities participating in the various programs.

Displays will be seen around campus in such buildings as Lenior Hall, Wilson Library and Memorial Hall. These will include books written by the participants and detatiled biographical sketches of them.

Publicity

Broad radio and television coverage has been promised with such special features as a state-wide FM network and television coverage by WUNC.

There is also some possibility that Monitor of NBC will also be here for selected parts of the program. All of the major state papers will be on campus and will give complete round-ups of all of the Symposium news as well The Daily Tar Heel.

Participation Urged

Sonny Hallford, chairman of the 1958 Symposium, is urging all students to participate in the programs being offered to them. He states: "We expect broad participation in these activities by students, faculty and citizens in what we hope will be a most stimulating series of experiences."

The major theme for the 1958 Symposium is "The Dimensions of Survival: American Culture in World Focus," with the sub-themes "Physical Survival," "Cultural Survival," and "Amerian Values in Crisis." This year 1958 will mark the biggest and best Symposium yet planned by the committee.

In addition to the speakers already referred to, there will be many others who will participate exclusively in seminars, rather than the main speeches. Watch for future references to them.

Ritchie Speaks On Book Ex

PRINGLE PIPKIN

General Manager of the University Bookstores H. R. Ritchie discussed the profits, policies and operation of the concerns operated under his supervision at the Student Party meeting last night.

The bookstore system includes the Booketeria in Steele Dorm, the wholesale department and soda fountain in the YMCA, the Scuttlebutt, the machine cigar stand in Lenior Hall, the Circus Room in the Monogram Club and the vending machines.

He stated that considered as a whole these concerns averaged a profit of about 11 cents out of every dollar of sales during the last fiscal year. The book department made a profit which was 7.22 per cent of its sales.

These profits go into scholarships, an operating fund, payments for new equipment and improvements and a recently instituted TV-repair fund.

Last year $77,750 went into scholarships; this figure represents 98 per cent of the total profit last year. The way in which the money is distributed changes from year to year.

He said that it was the general policy of the bookstore to give the students one half of the amount they paid for a book when they sold it at the end of the semester if the book was in good condition and was going to be used next semester.

These used books are resold to the students at three-quarters of their price when new. Manager Ritchie said that this procedure was a standard rule with most of the college bookstores across the country.

He explained that some proworked directly with the self-help committee in trying to give students jobs, but that many times a student's schedule will not permit work at the right hours.

As for future plans, he said there had been some talk about building "Scuttlebutts" near Woollen Gym and near the medical buildings. However, it has also been proposed that these concerns be located in buildings which are to be erected in the future.

He expplained that some professors tried very hard to keep the prices of the textbooks they required as low as possible while others were not so concerned.

The fact that professors change the textbooks often in some courses is also a problem facing the bookstore.

He said there is a student advisory committee to the bookstore which usually meets every semester in order to present the student's point of view concerning the bookstore.

He explained that if concerns under his supervision made too much profit or showed too small a profit, then things were bad.

The Student party will nominate Student Legislators from Dorm Men's I, II, III; Town Women's District and Town Men's I, II at the next meeting.

Book Exchange Manager Requests Legal Clarification On Bible Tax

Book Exchange Manager H. R. Ritchie has submitted a request for legal clarification on state sales tax charged for Holy Bibles and other religious literature.

The request was sent to the office of University Attorney Williams. However, Williams will be out of town until about Thursday.

Ritchie said that as soon as Williams studied the request, it would be sent to the North Carolina Attorney General for a ruling. He said the qestion involved would probably be whether the Bibles and religious literature were being used as texts.

He said the attorney general had rules a few years ago that sales tax "must be paid on all texts." He added he had discussed it with members of the administration who believed that Bibles sold in the Book Exchange would be ruled as texts.

"We could be wrong," Ritchie said. "It could be ruled either way. We don't know as yet."

He said again that if there was no tax on the Bibles, "a way to refund" the students who paid the tax would be found.

The question of the sales tax on Bibles was posed by The Daily Tar Heel last Friday.

Di Senate To Discuss Profit-Sharing Proposal

Walter Reuther's controversial proposal for profit-sharing in industry will be considered by the Dialectic Senate tonight at 8 o'clock on the third floor of New West.

Sen. P. E. Barrow will introduce the bill of the evening.

The Reuther proposal has been widely discussed and is bitterly opposed by the top management in the auto industry. A recent TV interview by Mike Wallace featured in which he presented his views.

Several of the industry leaders have appeared before congressional committees stating in their testimony outspoken opposition to any such proposal as that advocated by the United Auto Workers' leader.

Dialectic Senate president Gerry Boudreau stated that he expected this to be an interesting debate on a currently very controversial subject and anticipated lively participation on it. He invited everyone interested in the topic or in debating to attend the Di meeting.

"Last week's bill on the fraternity discrimination clauses aroused a great deal of interest and comment both pro and con. The bill for tonite prmoises to be equally as stimulating".

Campus Chest Drive To Get Underway Here

The Campus Chest Drive, UNC's unusual campus fund campaign, is set for Feb. 22—Feb. 29, according to Libby McCord and Gene Parker, co-chairmen of the drive.

The fund drive is unusual because it is a drive staged by students to help students, the only campaign of its kind at Carolina.

The motto this year is "Help Them to Help Themselves" and the money from the drive will go to three organizations, the World University Service, the Goettingen Students Exchange, and the National Scholarships Service.

Supports Students

The World University Service is an organization which enables students to give support to other students all over the world. The funds given support a program of material assistance and promote education for international understanding. Students in other countries also contribute to help students in the United States through this organization.

The Goettingen Student Exchange Program is an organization which sends students from Carolina to Goettingen University to study for a year while students from there attend Carolina for a year. Funds are needed to defray traveling and living expenses for these students.

The National Scholarship Service is a fund for Negro students who would not otherwise be able to attend college. Orginated seven years ago, it has increased the opportunities for higher education for Negros who attend already integrated colleges.

Go Ahead! Try To Sue Me

In all the effort of the Newspaper Research Committee to improve The Daily Tar Heel, one deficiency has been overlooked which would stimulate mutual respect between the editor and those about whom he comments in the campus community.

This deficiency, the greatest of all currently existing on the campus, has to do with the total absence of any plan to protect an individual student who has been libeled by the Tar Heel.

The only recourse an injured party may have, if libeled in an editorial or in a news story, is to write a letter to the editor or to start a recall movement. There currently exist only these methods to rectify libelous statements in the paper.

Yet several times throughout campus history—indeed, even during the current year—questions of libel have been raised. But no libel charge has actually been preferred against the editor. Not one has been tried in a civil court, and none have been fined. The only recourse has been recall, and it has one time succeeded.

What is needed to protect students and other members of the university community from reckless accusations not based on fact and from defamation of character or reputation is to write into the student constitution provisions whereby anyone, thinking he has been libeled, may sue and collect through the student courts if he is able to prove his charges.

In The Daily Tar Heel the editor holds a powerful stick which can be raised and dropped at his discretion, bringing down with it the defamation of character of any individual whom he wishes to attack. It is a weapon too strong to be used without the editor's knowledge that innocent people may seek legal redress when personally detrimental and untrue statements have been made.

In the laboratory of student government, where the rights of all are the concern of all, it should be possible to establish laws governing libel and what an individual may do to seek redress of his grievances. Student government currently has jurisdiction in virtually all areas but this.

To broaden its scope as a measure to protect innocent people from the power of the press, student government should provide means for those feeling they have been offended to sue the editor up to the $500 he receives as salary. Just how that right should be practiced the legislature could prescribe.

It's one thing when you're in the editor's chair writing what appears, to some, to be defamatory remarks about others. But it's something else when, conversely, an innocent person feels he has been libeled by the editor.

Somehow, it makes us believe that freedom of the press is a two-way proposition. At the present time it is unbalanced at the University of North Carolina.

Give An Inch, Take A Mile— And The Law Along With It

The Lumbee Indians would do well to forget their uprising down at Maxton several weeks ago. They did, after all, violate more laws than James (Catfish) Cole and all his Klansmen combined.

Nevertheless, Simeon Oxendine, leader of the Lumbee tribe in Robeson County, is 'apparently traipsing about the country rather proud that he and his followers used violent force to uproot the Klan from its lawful meeting place.

He told a news conference in Chicago last Friday that one Indian tribe "offered 700 braves and 1,000 repeating rifles if we needed them." He also commented that "I think we did a pretty good job" in breaking up the Klan rally January 18.

Everyone knows that. And many Lumbees openly defied the law and realize, too that in so doing they remained untouched by Robeson County officers when they fired shot at Klansmen and stole private property from them.

• We agree with Mr. Oxendine that robed Klansmen must be constrained in their riot-inciting meetings. But we also have a certain respect for the law when it comes to the public's taking matters into its own hands.

Give one an inch, goes the old saying, and he'll take a mile. Just think what the Lumbees could do with 700 braves and 1,000 repeating rifles.

Roster Promises Good Symposium

Congratulations are indeed in order today for the outstanding roster disclosed by the Carolina Symposium for its 1958 Symposium on Public Affairs set March 16-23.

The long list of leading statesmen, newspaper men, educators and businessmen promises a highly successful week of informative addresses and classroom discussion in the period devoted to the Symposium activities.

It isn't necessary to repeat here the roster disclosed by the Sympsoium, since it appears elsewhere in today's paper. But we would urge the student body to take full advantage of Sympsium week when it begins a month from now.

If the roster is any indication, this year's event promises to be among the most succesful ever staged by the Carolina Sympsioum.

State's. Emphasis Is On Scholastic

There's certain respect for State College between the lines of a news telling about the failure of basketball players Whitey Bell and Hal Lstis.

Unfortunate from the athletic standpoint of the college, notice that the two players had been dropped from school points out that State ranks among those institutions which put the scholastic emphasis before the athletic.

We wonder, at times, if such is the practice elsewhere in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Jimenez Was Not Bathed In Democracy

To the Editor:

In the Tuesday issue of the Daily Tar Heel Miss Doreen Greenfield attempts to defend the hated dictatorship of General Marcos Perez Jimenez, one of the most unpopular ever to exist in Latin America. She points out that dictatorship is the best suited type of government for a young country like Venezuela, "with no history of democracy," and adds that Perez Jimenez was performing the role of the parents guiding the growth of a child.

Probably Miss Greenfield was too young and does not remember how Perez Jimenez started his sinister ravage against democracy. In 1948 there was a democratic goverament in Venezuela, Romúlo Gallegos having been elected president by the people in April. But after only seven months, in November of 1948, a military uprising overturned the legally established regime, and a military junta of 3 members took over. It is not difficult to guess the participation of Perez Jimenez in one of his first but not last attempts against democracy. He was one of the colonels forming the junta. After rivalry developed between Perez Jimenez and the junta's chief Delgado Chalbaud, the latter was eliminated by means of assassination, in a way that leaves little doubt on the responsibility of Perez Jimenez. Four years after the military coup had seized power, elections were held in 1952. When the results started coming up adverse to Perez Jimenez's interests, which he did not expect, he ordered to suspend the publication of any more results, imprisoned the members of the Supreme Electoral Council, and proclaimed himself as provisional president with the support of his military group. The people were given only the final "results" of the elections, of course, favorable to the designs of the dictator. While members of the opposition parties were being jailed or exiled, a docile Constituent Assembly declared Perez Jimenez the new president of Venezuela.

The last and most cynical insult to the nation was brought about last December, when the dictator re-elected himself by means of a me-or-nothing plebiscite, where voters had to draw two different cards under the watchful eye of the secret police. Shortly after the plebiscite was closed, Perez Jimenez was announced re-elected by "overwhelming majority."

During nine years of "paternal" guidance to the country, opposition political parties were suppressed, its members jailed by the thousands. Many of them were subjected to torture, or sent to the Guacina Island, at the mouth of the Orinoco River, an unhealthy place where malaria and brutal forced labor killed more than one, their only crime being that of not sharing the dictator's ideas. Many others were exiled, and freedom of press, speech, and assembly were eliminated. Even American magazines such as Time were banned in the country when they asserted that the dictatorship was the enemy of the culture. And Perez Jimerez went further with his "paternal" role. When professors, students, and intellectuals did not agree with his ideas, they were also jailed or exiled, the University of Caracas and other centers of higher education closed. The damage inflicted upon the country with the measure is something that cannot be easily repaired. While some 4000 students could find the means of financing the rest of their education in foreign countries, thousands of other young Venezuelans saw their careers blocked and their future darkened by the "paternal" guidance of the dictator.

Before Perez Jimenez, everybody in Venezuela could get an education without regard to financial ability, through the exemption of tuition payments, even at the college level. But the dictator knew that the less educated the people were, the easier it was to manage them. The schools and liceos which remained open were ordered by official decree to charge tuitions which made education prohibitive for people of lower economic status. All this was done in spite of the millions coming from the oil and iron business, lavished by the government in many instances for frills. The proportion of the national budget going for education had amounted lately to only 5.4 per cent, one of the lowest in Latin America. This was Perez Jimenez's contribution to the Venezuelan culture and the education of her people.

In the meanwhile, the dictator built up the most formidable air force in South America. Modern jet planes, bombers and fighters, were acquired from the United States with the pretext of defense of the hemisphere, but only for the purpose of supporting the dictatorship and to be used against the Venezuelan people. Furthermore, this action created alarm in neighboring countries which were forced to enter in an armament race in order to maintain the equilibrium in the area. As battleships, tanks, cannons, and all sorts of weapons were also acquired by the dictator from the United States, it is easy to understand Perez Jimenez's interest in maintaining very friendly relations with the United States. This must be one of the "great benefits" for Venezuela that Miss Greenfield mentions in her letter to the editor.

Under this show of military power in a country that does not require it, the military cast grew almost to a modern feudal state and became richer and richer. Corruption and favoritism became common, and grafters obtained their share from the government's money going to super-highways, recreational facilities, monuments, military officer's clubs, etc. Among other public works, a cable-car sightseeing was built to the top of a 15,000 feet mountain, with a cost of more than 30 million dollars. The most recent "public work" ordered by Perez Jimenez was a palace-fortress for himself in the top of a hill dominating the city of Caracas, with a cost of many more million dollars. This fortress was to have a heliport, antiaircraft batteries, theaters, swimming pools, its own electric plant, etc, with capacity for 300 people. In this fortress, which was not finished on time, Perez Jimenez expected to be safe in the case of any revolt. Meanwhile, most of the rest of the country and the people were lacking indispensable services and facilities.

It has not been my intention to carry an argument around the person of Perez Jimenez. He did a lot of damage to his country, but now he is fallen, thrown out by the ire of the people. But we still have in Latin America a Trujillo, a Batista, a Stroessner, using the same "paternal" methods of which Perez Jimenez was so fond. The institution of democracy will not be safe in the continent as long as these tyrants stay in power, and as long as there are people who, like Miss Greenfield, consider them the most appropriate kind of "parents" we ought to have.

The people from Venezuela gave a lesson that will not be forgotten. They never stopped fighting for freedom. The other dictators in the hemisphere must have it very present in their minds. The Venezuelans have shown that it is not enough to have prosperity and "public works," and that a "paternal" dictator cannot rely on the force of the arms to subdue a nation when its people still consider their most invaluable gift the free exercise of their democratic rights. There is and there never will be any substitute for liberty.

United States Losing Propaganda Battle

By CURTIS GANS

The U. S. is losing the propoganda race.

The latest defeat is a small one, but it bears witness to the declining influence of the U. S. in the world.

Last week, as reported by Newsweek, the officials of the Brussels World Fair announced that four small scientific exhibits had been withdrawn and were being replaced by four other exhibits.

The significant fact about this is that the four that were replaced were sponsored by the U. S., and that the replacements were sponsored by the Soviet Union.

The Brussels Fair is a relatively unimportant event in the light of summit conferences, possible wars, and technological developments; however, what is shown there will no doubt influence many people as to the potential strength or weakness of the largest world powers.

At present the U. S. plans to spend some eleven million dollars on the event. This is a lot of money, but in comparison with the Russian effort of fifty million, this effort is dwarfed.

Moreover, although the U. S. display building is probably one of the most beautiful in the entire display, the Russian building right next to that of the U. S. is much larger. The result will be that the U. S. effort will be dwarfed and may lead to the idea that the U. S. effort in defending the freedom of the world is also dwarfed by the efforts of the Soviet Union to overcome that freedom.

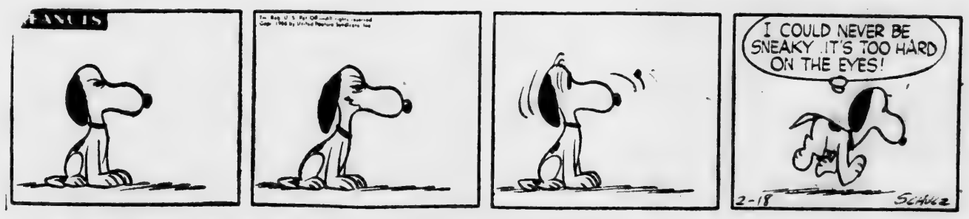
There is also a rumor current that the U. S. will be unable to keep its building open as long as the Russian building, for lack of finances.

What the general picture looks like at the present time, is a gigantic propoganda loss for the U. S.

There is currently a bill before Congress to increase the U. S. effort to the World Fair by about two million dollars. This is a minimum that Congress can do to save face for the U. S. at the fair. It might be necessary to appropriate more in order that the buildings be kept open throughout the Fair. This should be appropriated.

However, even if the U. S. effort at Brussels matches the Russian effort, there remains a problem.

The problem is simply that the U. S. is letting Russia score propoganda triumphs at will and letting the U. S. information resources sink to a new low.



There is currently a cold war going on and the undecided countries are the battle ground.

The Russians are winning the battle over the minds of the leaders of the undecided countries, and it is doing this with only token resistance.

It behooves the U. S. to start thinking in terms of selling itself to the free world, because if it is the case that Russia is able to sell itself first, the U. S. will soon be in a position that it will be unable to retaliate for lack of both allies and resources.

The battle must be fought now, before there is war.

Winston Column, Edits Attacked By Readers

The Teenagers

To The Editor:

I fail to see why we readers must be subjected to the type columns on your editorial page.

Last Saturday a whole column was devoted to an attack on Chapel Hill's teenagers who have no place to go in the afternoons. Mr. Winston certainly must have been hard up for material.

I, for one, can see no reason why the local teenagers should not take advantage of the opportunities that Graham Memorial has to offer. After all, the students don't use the facilities, so why should they go to waste?

Mr. Winston is obviously so mature that he cannot remember his highschool days and the problems he had in finding worthwhile activities in his spare time. Maybe it's for this reason that he is so bitter.

Mr. Winston was right about his column having three readers, but I don't know whether he will keep them after his Saturday effort.

NAME WITHHELD BY REQUEST

About Jimenez

To The Editor:

What corrective measures would you suggest the Venezuelans take Mr. Shields—writing letters to the editors of Jimenez's newspapers? You apparently have little use for "fire-eyed" patriots. Those "brand-waving radicals" at Valley Forge were rather ludicrous weren't they. All that blood on the snow sure was wasted—didn't contribute a damn thing to building the constitution. It's sure a good thing we had all those "clear-thinking practical men "to get things straightened out. And they certainly were "men of intelligence and discretion." They had sense enough to know it was too cold that winter to go tramping through the snow with that foolish old radical George.

I have only a speaking acquaintance with Martin Perez Jr. but somehow he doesn't impress me as a person who would be "no less odious than his deposed predecessor."

The Wolfe Column

To The Editor:

The response to the berating of Thomas Wolfe is interesting. The sociology problem (dealing with educational standards) was this: How many N. C. students were familiar enough with the name to come to its defense, and how many of those same people read the Daily Tar Heel?

PAUL A. SMITH

Ed: How about holding this a couple of days then running it before the administration kicks me off the campus for that snow-ball thing. Maybe I can get some material from it for this damned sociology paper. Thanks.

Recall Time

To The Editor:

I think it's time for a recall. Do you have nothing better to do than intellectualize snow-ball battles? Let's let Thomas Wolfe go home again and stay there where he belongs—out of the public print. "When icicles hang by the wall, when blood is nipped and ways be foul"—oh those foul sadists, those cruel oppressors of freshmen. Next thing we know you'll have T. S. Eliot decrying those masterful snow-women creations around the campus as "the hollow men, the stuffed men." Why don't you go home and have fun reading Wolfe and let us have a few snow-ball battles in peace.

Hair Splitting

To The Editor:

Last Friday's issue of The Daily Tar Heel filled me with a great deal of disgust—due to unnecessary hair-splitting. A banner headline, followed by a three-hundred plus word story read: "Is Book Exchange Sales Tax of Bibles Violation of State Law?"

No doubt a cunning sleuth on the paper's staff had discovered that the Book Exchange is conceivably guilty of a menial infringement of an obscure tax law.

Why headlines? The story, which preceded the particular of our Winter Germans and details of a night-before basketball victory, appeared scarcely a front page attraction to me.

I realize that commentary on this situation was desirable in view of student feeling toward Book Exchange prices. However, I feel that it was done in a manner which only makes The Daily Tar Heel staff appear ridiculous.

With the many important and diversified activities that concern this university, I certainly believe that the student body deserves better front page reading.

Phi Debate Tonight

ton, D. C.

Dr. Lyman Cotten of the English Dept. will be the Phi's guest critic tonight.

Background information on the bill discloses that Pound, a contemporary American poet, was indicted for treason in July, 1943, for making broadcasts for the Italian government during the war. Arrested by GI's in Italy in May, 1945, he was flown to the U. S.

Declared Insane

By request of his own attorney, psychiatric examination declared Pound insane and mentally unfit for trial. He was committed to St. Elizabeth's and has remained there since.

Stribling said Pound's confinement is a source of embrassment for the United States, for it seems to indicate that there is no place for genius here. He said we don't know how to handle them.

Pres. Pro Tem Warren Coolidge will preside over the Society during the debate. An executive session immediately after the debate will be held to initiate new members.

Pi Kaps Entertain National Representative

The Pi Kaps entertained Jack Campbell, national traveling representative for Pi Kappa Phi, this past weekend. Jack was a special guest at all functions held by the Fi Kaps during the Winter Germans weekend.

Jack is now on tour of the 52 chapters of Pi Kappa Phi. His local visit was climaxed with a lively party at the house Saturday night following the dance. The occasion was attended by all brothers, pledges and their dates and the party also served as an initiation party for the pledges.

Betas Go Tropical

Friday night the Betas and their dates traveled only a few miles to dance in a tropical setting of palm trees and orchids. Straw hats hula skirts and orchid leis were colorful features of a South Sea Island party held at Jack Maultsby's Lodge. The Big Ax Combo from Danville, Va., provided music for the tropical event.

Saturday afternoon, before and after the concert, the Betas entertained their dates at the house. Doug Clark and his combo from Chapel Hill livened the frosty afternoon with many of the latest hits.

Sigma Chis Party

Friday night following the dance the Sigma Chis partied at the house and danced to the music of The Tops.

Saturday afternoon they entertained their dates at an informal party at the house, followed by dinner. Doug Clark's combo from Chapel Hill provided music for a dance at the house Saturday night.

Sunday afternoon found the Sigma Chis still in a partying mood. The Victorians, a local combo, were on hand to furnish music for the occasion.

Connor Dorm Gets TV

The TV fans of Connor Dorm scored a rousing victory last Monday evening in a "TV or not TV" election, held in the Connor lounge. The actual vote was 48 in favor and 27 opposed, with the majority of the foreign students helping to bring Connor into the television age.

A pizza party is being planned to celebrate the arrival of TV to Connor. Now Connor residents will be able to suppotr the UNC basketball team on their out-of-town excursions this spring.

Brennan And Hawkins Should Be All-American

It should have been evident to about 16,000 fans who watched Notre Dame beat Carolina 89-70 in Chicago Stadium Saturday night that there were two All-Americans on the court—one was Pete Brennan, the other was Notre Dame's Tom Hawkins.

Unfortunately, Brennan's 38 point effort was not good enough to keep up with the Irish and unfortunately the rest of the Tar Heels had one of their poorer nights from the floor. The tremendous part which Lee Shaffer plays for Carolina was evidenced by the final score synonimous with the measely four points which the big Tar Heel soph scored.

Bobby Cunningham came through for 13 to atone somewhat for the lack of scoring by Shaffer and to a lesser degree by Tommy Kearns who hit 11, seven below his usual output. Harvey Salz had 13 which was about par for him. Here again is why the Tar Heels miss Joe Quigg so badly. Shaffer is only 18 years old and cannot be expected to play perfect ball every game. Nor can any of the other Carolina sophomores. Everybody is realizing more and more just what a difference the loss of Quigg makes.

Hawkins Broke Loose In Second Half

Most, if not all of the Carolina players will agree that they're played against no finer ball player all season than the 6-5 Hawkins. He hit 23 of his 33 points in the last half and that made all difference in the world. Hawkins did a good job off the boards also but it was his effective scoring punch that was a vital factor in the overwhelming Notre Dame victory.

The Tar Heels were able to contain Hawkins in the first half with a box and one defense man on him but the rest of the Irish were hitting so McGuire changed his defense in the second half. Hawkins was able to get his shots away better then and six minutes into the second half Notre Dame had a 50-40 lead. The closest Carolina could come after that was 65-59 with 6:45 to play.

The Irish took full command of the show from there out and it was simply a matter of "how much" the rest of the way. With less than two minutes togo, Hawkins was all clear for a layup and he dunked the ball to the delight of the Notre Dame partisian, adding insult to injury.

The Carolina-Notre Dame game however took a backseat to the opener between Kentucky and Loyola. The heavily favored Kentuckians lost it by one point when Art McZier hit a long hook shot after Lovola had called timeout with one second left. Vern Hatten of Kentucky had seemingly wrapped it up with a goal with four seconds to go but McZier's desperation shot turned the tables. One sportswriter's story called it "the greatest basketball finish in the history of Chicago Stadium.

Conference Race Remains In Frenzy

You can't hardly get them no more.

We're referring to basketball finishes like the one in the Atlantic Coast Conference this season. You pick up the paper one day and State's on top, the next day it's Duke and on it goes like a game of spin the bottle.

Right now Duke has the upperhand with a 9-2 mark. State is second at 9-3, Carolina third at 8-3 and Maryland is fourth with a 7-3 record.

Tonight in Raleigh the Tar Heels could jolt the Wolfpack out of second place and move in themselves. Carolina has to win this one to stay in contention for first place in regular season play. Maryland also plays Virginia tonight and that's also a big one.

Friday, Maryland is at Duke and the Terps come here on Saturday. Thus the Colege Park cub woud seem to hold the answer to who'll wind up atop the standings by tournament time.

State Cry Is Win For Whitey

State cannot go any farther than the finals of the ACC tourney. Yet the Wolfpack has a reason to want to knock off any and everybody from here out. They'd like to win them all for their recently departed captain Whitey Bell.

BIG ACC TILT IN REYNOLDS COLISEUM

Tar Heels Tangle With N. C. State Tonight

2nd Place At Stake; State Without Bell

It's back to conference competition tonight for the Carolina Tar Heels and against no lesser opponent than North Carolina State in Reynolds Coliseum at 8 o'clock.

For the third time this season, the co-fathers of ACC basketball Frank McGuire and Everett Case match wits in the rubber game of their series so far this season. Carolina won the Dixie Classic with a 39-30 victory over the Wolfpack but State came to Chapel Hill and carried away a 58-57 victory in an overtime on Jan. 15.

It goes without saying that this is another feature attraction in ACC play. State is currently in second place with a 9-3 record, only one half game ahead of the third place Chapel Hillians who now sport an 8-3 conference mark. State is 14-4 overall and Carolina is 15-5.

Might Shift Standings

Should the Tar Heels beat the Wolfpack, they'll move into second place a half game off the pace being set by the flaming Duke Blue Devils. The loss would drop State to fourth. The Wolfpack cannot regain first place with a win tonight but it would cut Duke to a small percentage lead and virtually eliminate Carolina from first place on the regular season. Carolina too would drop to fourth in the event of a loss.

Vague speculation is about the only thing possible about the type of ball the expected capacity crowd can look for tonight. In the Classic, the two teams played almost stand still ball. They attempted it in their game here but that one moved a lot faster than the one in Raleigh.

Bell Is Gone

State will be without the services of its captain and All-American candidate Whitey Bell who was dropped from school due to scholastic irregularities this weekend. This will hurt State in a running game so Case might just decide to hold the ball against the Tar Heels.

The loss of Bell was a tremendous blow to the Wolfpack but the Raleigh club overcame the blow with a triple overtime win over Maryland Saturday afternoon in a "Win it for Whitey" game. The same solgan is likely to be up for this one tonight.

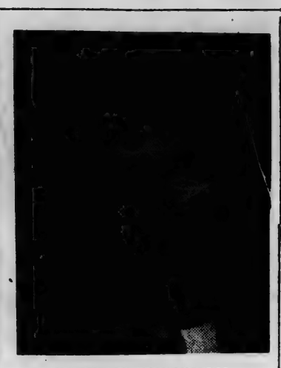
Carolina, smarting from an 89-70 shellacking at the hands of Notre Dame in Chicago Saturday night, would like to get back on the winning trail again. This is a must game for the Tar Heels if they expect to win regular season honors in the conference. Carolina's last conference game was a 60-57 win over Wake Forest last Thursday.

The Lineups

Veteran Ken Clark is expected to replace Bell at one guard post for the Wolfpack. His running mate will be little Lou Pucillo. John Richter is expected to go at center with Bob MacGillivery and Don Galagher at forward.

For Carolina, McGuire will probably go with his new found combination of Lee Shaffer and Bobby Cunningham at forward, Pete Brennan at center and Harvey Salz and Tommy Kearns at forward. If so, Cunningham and Kearns will probably be the backcourt men with Salz in the corner and Brennan and Shafer alternating off the pivot. Dick Kepley might replace one of the above mentioned should McGuire desire to get height rather than speed in the starting lineup.

In a preliminary game at six, the Tar Babies will attempt to avenge two defeats at the hands of the Wolflets.



Deacons Keep Fighting; Meet Temple Wednesday

WINSTON-SALEM—Wake Forest faces a large order when it attempts to close out its home basketball season with a .500 average here Wednesday night in Memorial Coliseum against the high-flying Temple Owls.

Beaten in five of their nine home scraps this year, Coach Bones McKinney's Demon Deacons need a victory over the Owls to close out with a 5-5 mark. This year's home record is slightly below that of the 1957 campagin when the Deacs captured eight of 10 tilts in their first full season of play on the Coliseum court.

Wolflets Hold Edge

Tar Babies Will Play State Frosh In Prelim

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Babies tonight get their last chance of the season to knock off the State College Wolflets in a game played in Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh. Tip-off time is slated for 6 o'clock, as the game is a preliminary before the varsity scrap between the two schools.

The teams have met twice with State coming out on top both times. Carolina fans will remember the first game, Jan. 15, when State just managed to scrape through here by 58-57 in an overtime. Mark Reiner sunk two charity tosses in the closing seconds to provide the victory margin. The last time the squads faced off, Feb. 5, State won it handily in Raleigh by 85-69, and without the services of star Bruce Hoadley.

Lakins Big Man

The Wolflets are a tall, talented crew, with their attack centered around big center Larry Lakins. By using Hoadley at forward and Reiner at guard, the Wolflets have a potent attack going on any given night, featuring sharp shooting and rebounding. A recent addition, Stan Niewerowski, has proved himself a valuable addition to the team. In the last Carolina-State battle, Niewerowski poured in 31 points to top both teams, while Lakins followed with 21.

State is the only team, with the exception of Duke's Blue Imps, who can claim a winning record against the Tar Babies this season. Carolina, in its last game, found a different Wake Forest team at Winston-Salem and went down to defeat by a 90-63 count. The Tar Babies have a 9-6 mark.

Brown High Man

Lou Brown continues in his role of high-scorer for the frosh, but was closely guarded in the Deaclet contest, having several shots blocked and being boxed-in most of the night. The Tar Babies were unable to solve the Wake Forest zone and could not get the ball into the middle at all, which gave the Deacs the advantage of having Hugh Donahue virtually helpless. Long outside shots hit occasionaly, but not enough to overcome the almost insurmountable lead that Wake Forest built upon its devestating fast break.

Terps Set To Defend Track Title Here

Maryland's defending champions, up again with another powerful and favored team, are already on the rolls for the fifth annual Atlantic Coast Indoor Games, the track extravaganza billed in Woollen Gymnasium here Saturday, March 1.

Coach Jim Kehoe is one of the first to enter a team in the conference division and he has forwarded an entry of 27 to Games Director Charles P. (Chuck) Erickson, the University of Carolina Athletic Director.

Weather Halts Gridders Again

The unexpected cold weather once again delayed the beginning of spring football practice for the Carolina Tar Heels yesterday afternoon. Inclement weather forced postponement of the opening of spring drills one week last Monday and yesterday the weather halted the gridders again.

Coach Jim Tatum suggested that his boys continue working out individually but no definite starting date has been set. The Tar Heels will have to get in 20 practice sessions in a 30-day calendar period and yesterday's postponement will probably force an even tighter schedule than anticipated.

New cost advantage
. . . now extended to older Northwestern Mutual policyholders!

You will recall that last year QES to include older policies Northwestern Mutual pioneered in establishing QES — Quantity-Earned Savings which reduced the cost of life insurance according to the size of the policy purchased. This made life insurance history.

But what of those who had purchased their Northwestern Mutual policies before QES went into effect? Northwestern Mutual felt a deep sense of responsibility to its "old friends" who, through their policy purchases, have helped to build it into one of the world's largest life insurance companies.

As a result, as soon as it has been possible, Northwestern Mutual has announced an extension Regardless of when written, now all premium-paying Northwestern Mutual policies $5,000 and larger will return added savings each year. On policies $10,000 and up, the savings will be even greater.

And in addition, this year Northwestern Mutual has announced another increase in its regular dividend to policyholders. This is the sixth successive year that Northwestern Mutual has increased its dividend appropriation!

Full details on the progress of "The Policyholders' Company" are contained in Northwestern Mutual's recently released Annual Report. To get a complimentary copy, phone or write us.

Tunisia

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Feb. 18 (AP) — The U. N. Security Council today tossed the explosive Tunisian-French dispute into the hands of mediators after hearing the United States and Britian declare they had affirmative proposals for a peaceful solution.

Representatives of the two Western powers, whose good offices have been accepted by France and Tunisia, did not spell out what they had in mind. But there was speculation their efforts would be extended to setting up machinery which could be used in an attempt to resolve the broad issue of the French-Algerian conflict, now in its fourth year.

Yankee Slaps Fedz

ATLANTA, Feb. 18 (AP) — The Republican attorney general of New Hampshire told a cheering Georgia Legislature today that the use of troops and bayonets in Little Rock was " probably the greatest insult to a sovereign state since the Constitution was adopted."

Louis C. Wyman of Concord, N H., addressing a joint session of the federal and state relations, decried federal nad state relations, decried the use of force as an answer to the problem of human relations.

Wyman criticized recent decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court which he said were extending the powers of the federal government into areas in which the consitution is silent or in which congress has never acted.

KHARTOUM, Sudan, Feb. 18 (AP) — A wave of anti-Egyptian feeling erupted in this capital today following reports Cairo has sent armed men into disputed border territory.

UP Plans To Organize Group For Nominating

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

"A nominating convention" with delegates from each dorm, fraternity and sorority was accepted by the University Party last night as the machinery to select candidates for the spring elections.

This system, proposed by UP Chairman Syd Shuford, provides for unlimited delegations headed by a chief delegate who will poll the group and announce their vote to the party chairman.

There will no longer be any secret ballots. Nominations can still come from any member of the party, and anyone in the hall can speak for the candidates.

Shuford said the system would "create a bit of convention atmosphere" and would be "more efficient and more exciting." It will also be easier to keep a running tabulation of the votes cast.

At the suggestion of Shuford the UP voted unanimously not to endorse candidates for the positions of editor of The Daily Tar Heel and of the Yackety-Yack.

Shuford explained that these editors "necessarily have to be objective" and would not support the party even if they were endorsed.

The UP will nominate Student Legislators March 3, student government executive officers and any remaining solons March 4 and senior class officers and other remaining positions March 10.

Speaking of the coming election, Shuford said, "The important thing is to get us some contacts down in the dorms." He stated that in the race for student government executive positions the party had "some stiff opposition."

The party chairman chided those UP Legislators who did not attend the party meeting. He asserted that the law-makers should be "the most active and the most informed" members of the party.

The party, he said, needed every one of its members out working "to get the people to vote our way."

UP Vice-Chairman Jack Lawing, chairman of the Student Legislature Ways and Means Committee, told the party that the bill to revise the Student Council had been held in committee and would not come before the Legislature for another week.

Lawing explained that the bill's introducer could not be present Thursday and that the committee had not yet had a chance to talk with the members of the Student Council.

Graham Claytor, a member of the Student Legislature Finance Committee, said that his committee was considering a bill to appropriate money for the student who is here under the foreign leadership p●●ject.

To vote in the spring nominations it will be necessary for all UP members to pay their spring dues of 50 cents before the end of the meeting next Tuesday.

RALEIGH, Feb. 18 (AP) — A flock of Tar Heel motorists were nabbed by officers today for failure to display their 1958 license plates.

The enforcement deadline on 1957 plates was reached last night, and even today, Miss Foy Ingram, director of registration at the Motor Vehicles Department, said sales were not unusually heavy.

She said her office had "plenty of business" but the long lines of last week remained absent.

Cold Wave Blankets Eastern U.S.

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The winter's worst cold wave brought arctic misery to the eastern third of the nation again yesterday. Little relief was in sight from temperatures as low as 40 degrees below zero.

In several sections it was the coldest Feb. 18 in history. Ice threatened to close the Ohio, Mississippi and Hudson Rivers, three of the nation's great water arteries.

The death toll from the heavy weekend snow and the cold wave in 26 states neared 200. The afflicted area extended from the East Coast to Missouri and Iowa, and from Maine to Alabama. Some sections haven't had a temperature reading above freezing in 10 days.

CAN'T BURY DEAD

Millions endured misery and inconvenience. Isolated rural villages ran low on fuel and food. Helicopters fluttered over the bleak countryside with relief for marooned farmers. The bereaved in upstate New York were unable to bury their dead because of six-foot snow drifts in cemeteries.

The National Guard was out in Delaware and New Jersey to open roads and bring feed to farmers. It was Delaware's worst snowstorm of this century and Atlantic City's worst winter in more than 20 years.

Air travel in the East was grievously snarled. Scores of flights were canceled. Others operated up to 18 hours behind schedule.

The New York Central's Commodore Vanderbilt passenger train arrived in Chicago from New York nearly 20 hours late. Long delays were reported on most lines and in New England several trains were completely stalled.

SCHOOLS, INDUSTRIES CLOSE

Shortages of heating gas forced the evacuation of families and closed schools and industries in Kentucky and Georgia.

Mardi Gras Set Next Weekend; Tin Can Chosen As Dance Site

By CHARLIE SLOAN

The Mardi Gras Committee's selection of the Tin Can for this year's big spring weekend gives student Tar Heels a new location for a major social event.

Under the direction of Jim Vance and Mardi Gras Vice Chairman Jim Menzel, the decoration team will convert the old airplane hanger into a giant outdoor ballroom. It's going to take a lot of crepe paper to do it, but Graham Memorial Activities Board has allotted a thousand dollars for the job.

Star entertainer for the event will be Buddy Morrow, famous for his recordings of "One Mint Julep" and "Night Train." Morrow and his group will give two performances.

The concert will be from 3 to 5 on Feb. 28. That night they will go on the bandstand again for the Mardi Gras dance.

SEMI-FORMAL

The dance will be from 8 to midnight. Dress for the occasion will be dark suits for the men and cocktail dresses for the girls. Mardi Gras Committee Chairman Gerry Boudreau explained that the dance was not made a formal affair in order to keep the expense down for the students.

"The dance is for everybody, and everybody can afford the tickets, but having to rent a tux would run the price up," he explained.

Tickets are $3. Their real value is estimated to be $8, but GMAB is making up the difference to keep the price down.

COMMITTEES

A large committee of students have been working to get the Mardi Gras ready, and more will help put up the decorations. A partial list of committee members includes Boudreau, Menzel, Vance, Miss Joan Wallace, James Smith, William Willis, Ben Scott, Miss Tene Alston, Ben Levy, Bill Kendall, Miss Dee Donnarummo, Miss Barbara Bell, Edgar Woodbury, Miss Marjory Lyon, Miss Kitty Corr, Tom Long, David Veasey, Don Gray and Miss Beth Harris.

Brennan's 32 Points Pace Win

By BILL KING

RALEIGH — Carolina's national cage champions looked more like the defending champs than anytime this season last night and the result was a convincing 81-69 victory over N. C. State College in Reynolds Coliseum.

It was perhaps the greatest victory of the year for the Tar Heels who had been in a slump for a long time and it gave the Chapel Hillians a 2-1 advantage in their series with the Wolfpack this season.

The anticipated "deep freeze" never materialized as coaches Frank McGuire and Everett Case decided to run this one out and it was McGuire's Tar Heels who won the race but not without a real struggle by the Wolfpack.

State, sorely missing its recently departed captain Whitey Bell gave Carolina a great game for the first 20 minutes but the Tar Heels came back in the second half more determined that at anytime all year long and gave their consolidated brothers a thorough licking. The score was tied at intermission, 31-31.

All-American candidate Pete Brennan was the man of the hour for the Tar Heels. The Brooklyn, N. Y. senior dropped in 32 points, 18 of them on free throws in 20

Accreditor Unit Visits J-School

The UNC journalism school plans to be on its best behavior today and Thursday when it plays host to a visitation team which will be here to determine whether to accredit the local school.

The team, composed of two newspaper editors and four journalism teachers, will spend the two days sitting in on journalism classes and interviewing faculty members and seniors in the journalism school. Some professor in other fields will also be interviewed.

The team will write a report to a committee of the American Council on Education for Journalism.

The ACEJ will announce the outcome of the survey this summer.

If all goes well the UNC journalism school will join the ranks of the elite. Out of 109 schools of journalism in the nation only 45 are accredited.

Two Senators Top Symposium Slate

By Davis Young

Senator Sparkman

Senator John Sparkman, Democrat from Alabama and candidate for the vice-presidency in 1952, will speak during Symposium Week on March 17. The topic of his address will be "America's Position in Today's Troubled World."

Senator Sparkman has been a leading figure in national politics for a number of years and is well known politically for his work as a member of several influential Senate Committees including: The Senate Banking Committee, Senate Currency Committee, Joint Economic Committee and is the ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Commitee. His is also Chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee.

As a student, Senator Sparkman compiled an outstanding record at the University of Alabama where he received an A.B., A.A., and L.L.B. He is also the possessor of an Honorary Doctor of Laws from Spring Hill College, Mobile, Alabama.

At the University of Alabama he was editor of the Crimson-White, president of the Student Body and chosen outstanding student during his senior year. Academically, his membership is numbered in Phi Beta Kappa.

MAJORITY WHIP

In 1936, he made the first of his six successful runs for the House of Representatives. He was elected without opposition for his last five terms and was Majority Whip in the House.

He was elected to the United States Senate in 1946, to fill the unexpired term of Senator John H. Bankhead. He was re-elected in 1948 and 1954.

Senator Sparkman is a firm believer in the United Nations and the possibility of a permanent peace through the cooperation of the nations of the world. He has supported the Marshall Plan and the North Atlantic Pact. He is reknowned for supporting small business, farmers and social welfare legislation.

SENATOR SPARKMAN

Senator Jackson

Senator Henry M. Jackson, Democrat from Washington, will be the second United States Senator appearing during Symposium Week. At the age of forty-five, Jackson has more experience than any legislator his age—twelve years in the House and five in the Senate.

Jackson, a bacheior, was born in 1912, in Everett, Wash. He was educated there in the local public school system and later went on to the University of Washington, where he received a Bachelor of Laws degree in 1935.

He entered private law practice in 1938, but was only to pursue this occupation for three years, for at the age of twenty-six, he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Snihomish County, Washington. In 1940 he made his first try for the United States House of Representatives and was successful.

IN TOP TEN

He was re-elected to the House for five additional terms, including 1946, when he was the only Democratic winner in the Northwest. In 1952, he was cited by Liberty Magaine as one of the ten top House members on the basis of independence, honesty and leadership.

In 1950, two years prior to his election to the Senate, he turned down the position of Under Secretary of the Interior. He did this because he felt he could "better assist resource development in the West and particularly in the Pacific Northwest, by continuing my service in Congress."

Jackson was elected to the Senate in 1952, defeating Republican incumbent Senator Harry P. Cain by a margin of 135,000 votes to lead the ticket in Washington State, in contrast to the majority of 105,000 compiled by President Eisenhower in that same election.

While in the Senate, Jackson has served on the Armed Services Commitee, the Government Operations Committee, the Interior and Insular Committee and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

The Campus Chest Drive: Unique Campaign At UNC

Every year at the University of North Carolina finds various organizations requesting funds for sundry projects and programs conducted here and elsewhere throughout the world. But one of them, because it is a student drive to help students, remains unique above all the rest.

What we refer to, of course, is the Campus Chest drive set for the week of February 22-29. Funds raised in the campaign will go to the World University Service, the Goettingen Students Exchange and the National Scholarships Service.

The motto of the campaign this year, according to drive co-chairmen Libby McCord and Gene Parker, is "Help Them To Help Themselves." And success or failure of the campaign lies solely on you, the student.

So when the Campus Chest people call on you in the near future, remember that your contribution will help many students to get an education which might otherwise be impossible, and that you are helping in the exchange of Goettingen students between UNC and the German University.

Charity starts at home. Yet there is no yardstick for the good it does once it leaves those portals and extends throughout the world. Then it becomes immeasurable.

Chapel Hill: Place Where To Learn, 'And To Stay Young'

(Charles N. Hauser, former Daily Tar Heel staffer now with the Charlotte Observer, came back to Chapel Hill to see what he could find. In part, this is the story the Observer told.)

This is Chapel Hill.

Not just a town.

Not just the site of the State University.

Much more than just a collection of buildings and people and ideas on a green plateau where the hills of the Piedmont begin their long march to the mountains.

Chapel Hill is North Carolina's Fountain of Youth

Ponce de Leon never found the answer. The answer is in Chapel Hill—where the process of learning keeps one young.

As long as you are still learning, Chapel Hill's message tells you, you have not grown old.

But once you know it all—once you have found the exact pattern, the way of life, the way of thinking that makes you self-satisfied and smug—then you are old, whether your chronological age is 18 or 80.

Chapel Hill is for everyone.

It is everybody's Fountain of Youth, providing the inspiration to its state to continue to grow in mind and in spirit and to reject the slavish adherence to the past which attempts to stifle the future.

You can see the message in the faces of students in a philosophy class.

You can see it in the smiles of children playing under the centuries-old oaks in McCorkle Place on the south end of the campus. You can see it in the studious concentration of the author who sits for hours in a hidden corner of the University Library stacks, searching for truth in the past.

Chapel Hill challenges North Carolina to think, to probe, to question. To continue to learn.

And to stay young.

Reds Should Watch Steps

The North Korean Communists—not content with former flagrant violations of the armistice suspending the Korean War—have now gone a step further in kidnaping a South Korean airliner with at least one American aboard.

The action is a lesson in Communistic behavior itself. And it is a shrewd method used by the North Koreans in their effort to gain recognition by their brothers to the south who refuse to accept a nation divided between itself.

Unless the Pyongyang Reds are careful, they may find in fact that the armistice did little but "suspend" the war. For Syngman Rhee is not a man to give in easily to Communist demands.

GUEST EDITORIAL

We Want To Know

With the advent of the Soviet Sputnik and now our own Explorer satellites, we have heard nothing but the constant chant, "We have to have more scientists. We have to have more physicists." The continuous plea has stimulated America into a national panic.

America says, "We want Eggheads!" She does not want the average, run-of-the mill "Eggheads," but the scientific kind. She wants all of the msot intelligent youth in our nation to concentrate their study in the direction of science. Why? So we can produce mechanical flying objects that will go higher, last longer, and do more tricks than anything our competitors can do.

There should be a trend toward educational panic in our nation, but our panic must also be for another type of "Egghead." We should be in a panic for the "Egghead" which excels in English, philosophy, history, psychology, and all the rest of the important arts and sciences.

Should it be our purpose to produce and train students to design the best, high-flying, destructive piece of metal man can perceive?

It is wonderful to have a nation which produces men with the brains to keep our drawing boards full of marvelous machines. But we also need men who can help figure uses and controls of these so-called marvelous machines.

We want these machines used for peaceful and productive purposes rather than war-like, destructive purposes. We want these wild machines in steady hands.

America's educational panic should not only be for scientific geniuses who know the HOW of our satellites and space mechanisms, but also for the individuals who understand the WHY of these machines.—Rocky Mountain Collegian.

J.Y.'s JAZZ

Noel Coward's Work Provides Lift To Blues

Whenever I get a little blue and think the world is perhaps not going so well with me I find a couple of recordings made by the great Noel Coward remarkable soul-lifters. These disks are "Noel Coward At Las Vegas" and "Noel Coward In New York," and both are available on Columbia Records, in the Masterworks series.

The Las Vegas recording, issued a couple of years ago, has become a party staple in many parts of the country. This is due to three factors - the witty, spicy lyrics, the excellent music, and Mr. Coward's erudite if somewhat strained voice. Except for two songs, all the numbers are of his own creation. These two are the old Scottish ballad "Loch Lomond" and the Cole Porter standard "Let's Do It." Neither is treated particularly respectfully - "Loch Lomond" is taken at a brisk pace with some new lyrics supplied by the artist, and "Let's Do It" is completely changed from the original, as witness this snatch of lyrics -

"Each tiny clam you consume it -

"Even Liberace, we assume, does it -

Three new songs are the real spice of the record, however. These are the suggestive "Alice Is At It Again," the hilarious "Uncle Harry," and the truly masterful "Bar On the Piccola Marina." The latter is rapidly assuming the stature of a minor classic, perhaps due to the remarkable cleverness of its lyrics, some of which I quoted in an earlier column.

The New York recording is less risque and more romantic, but is every bit as enjoyable. The selections range from the delightfully romantic "Zigeuner" to the vicious satire on present day parenthood "What's Going To Happen To the Tots? which seems an apt question for many of today's Freud-directed mamas and papas.

Both disks serve to emphasize the importance of Noel Coward in the evolution of the sophisticated song writer, a category to which such favorites as Cole Porter and Lorenz Hart subscribe, as to a certain extent does Ira Gershwin. The lyrics which these gentlemen have written have a number of common characteristics, two of which are outstanding. These are first of all extremely clever rhymes and secondly some mysterious facility of making the rhymes seem to dissappear into the framework of the lyrics and consequently lessening the listener's consciousness of the rhyme. There are many virtues to be gained by this facility, not the least of which is that of making the lyrics appear more natural, less forced, and consquently more believeable. It is this group of lyricists, led by Noel Coward, that has contributed so much to American culture of the 20th century.

POLITICAL PERSPECTIVE

Constitution Amendments Needed

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Student Legislature can not through its own power change the Constitution of the student body. The bill which this body passed last Thursday evening to revise the Honor Councils would change the constitution illegally.

To be constitutional the bill must contain enabling clauses in the form of amendments to the Constitution in order to reconstruct the constitution so that the new bill will not violate it.

According to the Constitution the Student Legislature can direct the Elections Board to hold an election concerning a constitutional change. "A simple majority of those voting in campus elections" is required to pass the amendment.

The other way to change the constitution is for 10 per cent of The students to sign a petition asking for a vote on an amendment.

The students then will vote on amendments to the Constitution. The amendments will cover only those matters in which the new bill disagrees with the present Constitution and, so will be much smaller than the bill itself. (The Constitution only states the jurisdiction of the councils.)

The amendments will place the power of the Women's Council and the Men's Council to try Honor Code violations into the hands of the newly created Honor Council.

The Women's Council would retain its jurisdiction over coeds who violate campus code and social rules.

If the bill to revise the Student Council is passed, the amendments to the Constitution will also include the instruction of a Men's Council to try men who violate the Campus Code.

The students would also vote on a Student Council to decide questions of constitutionality and to have "appellate jurisdiction, as authorized by the Student Legislature, over cases arising within agencies of the executive branch of student government."

There is talk that the Honor Council bill (after the required changes have been made to it) and the Student Council bill will be combined into one bill before they are presented to the Student Body President for his signature.

However, before anything can be done the Student Legislature must approve the Student Council bill.

Should the proposed revision of the Honor Council ever become law the procedures committee for the Council shall have a number of difficult problems on its hands.

The committee is composed of 8 members: two from the present Men's Council, two from the present Women's Council and four appointed by the President of the Student Body and approved by the Student Legislature.

This committee will consider such questions as whether the jury will consider its verdict in the same room with the council and whether the Council would have the right to question the offender.

The committee will have to decide these questions and many others and try to anticipate every situation.

The procedures which they set up will have to be approved by the Student Legislature.

It looks to me as if it is going to be nearly impossible to get the proposed system into operation before spring elections.

The importance of these revision bills has overshadowed the fact that some important changes were recommended by the newspaper research committee.

The research committee has been charged with the responsibility of writing bills to effect the changes they have recommended. Nothing has been done yet; however, Pat Adams, chairman of the committee, said they would meet this week.

I hope that these recommendations will not be forgotten and that the necessary bills will be drawn up, so they can be brought to a vote.

The New Presidency

Harry S. Truman was wrong when he used to say that the Presidency is a job without a future. Despite James Hagerty's denials, an idea favored by General Eisenhower and passed on to some reporters by Sherman Adams at a recent hush-hush Washington meeting points to a bright new career that the President is looking forward to when his tenure is at an end. After he leaves the White House on January 21, 1961, Mr. Eisenhower hopes to start a campaign for the reform of the Vice-Presidency.

The fullest details of what Mr. Eisenhower has in mind appear in the New York Herald Tribune for February 4 under the by-line of Robert J. Donovan. Mr. Donovan, it will be recalled, was the journalist chosen by the White House to write Eisenhower: The Inside Story, a narrative of the administration's first term. Now, in his Herald Tribune account, he reports that Mr. Eisenhower feels the government needs three new Vice-Presidents. One of the Vice-Presidents would be in charge of all "offshore" affairs. Another would be in charge of domestic matters. And the third, holding cabinet status, would oversee the work of the regulatory commissions.

The authors of The Federalist might see in this the very opposite of the prescription they laid down for the ingredients of executive energy. In their listing, they were "first, unity; secondly, duration; thirdly, an adequate provision for its support; fourthly, competent powers." But Mr. Eisenhower apparently feels so strongly on the subject that he cannot trust his temper in fighting right now for the adoption and the installation of a Vice-Presidential trinity. According to Mr. Donovan, if he doesn't get around to making his views known to Congress while in office, Mr. Eisenhower means to wage a campaign for his plan after he leaves the White House.

In time, of course, there might even be the need for a Vice-President in Charge of Research and Development, or of Interplanetary Affairs, or a Vice-President in Charge of Vice-Presidents, and so on. But whatever the multiplication, the essential principle of the Eisenhower idea could be preserved. The Presidency itself would be a place from which a man could emerge now and again to take part in the business or in the pageants of state. A Vice-Presidential title would thus stand for real power while the man constitutionally responsible for the exercise of that power could assume, off and on, some functions of a Vice-President—The Reporter

FROM THE NEW REPUBLIC

Foster Dulles: Our Man

It is rash these days to single out the one diplomatic blunder which is likely to go down in history as an all-time low. But a few days ago we thought that Marshal Bulganin had made it. In his latest letter to President Eisenhower he was broadminded enough to admit that diplomatic negotiations may play a useful role in preparing the ground for a summit meeting, but as to a conference of foreign ministers preceding the one of the chiefs of state he had this to say:

"I only wish to note that, considering the biased position of certain possible participants in a ministerial conference, we cannot be confident that talks on this level would not create additional obstacles to the organization of a summit conference and would not hip this important measure at the very bud."

The reaction in Congress and in the press, among both friends and critics of the administration, has been unanimous and furious. Bulganin is obviously out to get Secretary Dulles. But if he thinks he is going to find any support in this country, he might as well go to the summit all by himself and stay there until hell freezes over.

As our readers may have surmised, John Foster Dulles is not one of our favorite characters. In fact, we consider him a national liability. But he is our nation's liability. Our first reaction to the Marshal's statement has been to start thinking of all that can be said in favor of Secretary Dulles. Our mind went back immediately to what happened to our foreign policy shortly after the Suez affair when he was at Walter Reed Hospital recovering from his intestinal operation, and the course of our diplomacy was left to the tender mercy of Herbert Hoover, Jr.

Several days have passed since we read that infamous Bulganin statement, and we haven't cooled off yet. We never will. We are not so sure now whether the Russian Premier actually blundered or whether he knew exactly, with brutal shrewedness, what he was doing. Maybe what he is after is, as many have said, the indefinite perpetuation of the status quo — including the indefinite stay of John Foster Dulles as head of the State Department.

We do resent this Russian attempt to influence our own government's affairs, just as we do resent the deliberate and, alas, successful attempt at conditioning our emotional reactions. The horrid thought strikes us that together with Bulganin, and because of Bulganin, all of us, critics and friends of the administration alike, want John Foster Dulles to hold his job indefinitely.

But here we have to stop, for what we think of the Soviet Premier is not fit to print.

Tar Heels

fort to regain the advantage was thwarted by the scrapping Tar Heels. Both teams went with a zone until the final minutes when State went into a full court press.

The Wolfpack did manage to chop the lead to 59-55 with 8:50 to go but Carolina built it back up. State instigated a real challenge at the 3:47 mark when Pucillo hit a layup to make it 67-66. But a three pointer by Dick Kepley, who played a fine ballgame, put Carolina ahead 70-66 and that was the ball game. From there out the Tar Heels were able to score almost at will as Brennan continued to wreck the Wolfpack at the charity line.

Salz was second in scoring for Carolina with 19 points. Kepley hit 11. Carolina hit 34.9 from the floor and State made 34.9. Carolina had 42 rebounds, State had 36.

The first half was a stupendous conglomeration of dog-eat-dog basketball which saw the lead change hands no less than eight times with seven tie scores thrown in to make things a little more hectic.

Both clubs held a four point lead at one point before intermission but the leads were short-lived as the cubs battled with a frenzy that would make Ed Sullivan vs. Steve Allen look like a friendly marble contest down on the corner.

From the 10:40 point until the 8:19 mark a total of 16 points were scored by the two clubs and there were only two shots missed during that period. At the end of that two minutes 20 seconds the score was knotted 21-21 after State had held the lead four and one half minutes.

Carolina then pulled ahead on a jump from the corner by Salz and the Tar Heels held a small lead until the 2:34 mark when State tied it at 27. The Wolfpack went ahead by two on a jumper by Bucky but Salz countered for Carolina to make it 29-29. Cunningham put Carolina ahead 31-29 with 36 seconds left but Pucillo knotted it 31-31 just before the halftime horn.

Don't Be Embarrassed:

Even Julius Caesar Had Dandruff!

By ARTHUR EDSON

And now another blow to our hard pressed congressmen and government officials.

A survey shows their line of work leads to dandruff.

The announcement was made today by the curtis dandruff treatment council, which says it's a non-profit organization set up to study such things.

The council found:

That dandruff is worse in winter than in summer.

That city people have more dandruff than country people, and that New York and Chicago are the most dandruffy of all.

That men have more dandruff than women, and that pregant women don't seem to have dandruff at all.

Worrying Kind

That around 70 per cent of the population has some dandrea.

That if your shoulders are cluttered with the stuff, it's a tipoff that you're in a worrying kind of a job.

"We've long suspected that dandruff is closely related to emotional stress," the council said. "Our study confirms it."

So 95 per cent of all big shot executives, and their junior executives, in advertising, public relations, radio and television have dandruff trouble. The council didn't say so, but possibly they work up a frightful head of dandruff while fretting about their ulcers, and vice versa.

In second place are motion picture people and, alas, newspapermen.

But coming up strong on the inside rail, and threatening to take over first as their problems stack up from here to outer space, are government officials with 83 per cent.

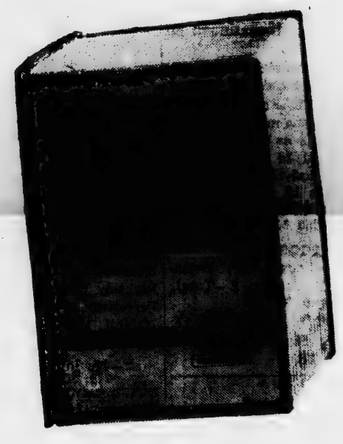
Well, the council may have something here.

Dandruff In Congress

Anyone who ever has sat in the gallery and looked down on Congress has realized that dandruff is an untidy sight.

But whether congressmen will pay much heed to the council's cure is something else again.

The council is sponsored by the shampoo and hair tonic industry, and naturally the hope is that each of us will hurry in and lather our locks.

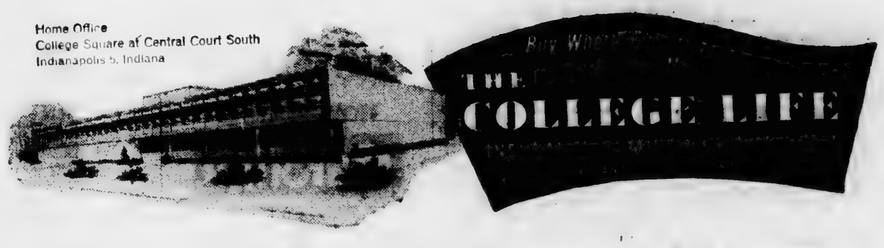


But the politican can be crafty, shrewed, able to turn weakness into strength.

Won't the politican of the future, fortified with the council's study, point to his dandruff as proof he's worrying his head off for his constituents?

A final note:

The government man has had this problem for a long time. The council triumphantly passes along this historical suggest:



Julius Caesar had dandruff.

All Tatum Can Do Is Sit And Wait

Old man weather and Jim Tatum can't seem to get together. Tatum is real anxious to get his spring football drills underway but brother weather is in no hurry—and guess who's winning the battle?

Tatum's Tar Heels were scheduled to begin their spring preparations Feb. 10 but it was too cold and too icy to use up a few valuable days (they're allotted 20) when the practice fields were soggy. So Sunny Jim postponed the opening until this past Monday but by then the weather was even worse.

"Now I don't know when we'll get started," Tatum said yesterday. "We'll have to wait for the weather to clear up a little. The main thing is that the ground is too wet for any strenuous practice."

Under conference regulations, ACC teams are allowed a total of 20 practice sessions in a 36-day calendar period and right now it's that calendar period which is throwing a monkey wrench into the works. Duke and State started on the eighth of February and now they have to keep going because the 36-day restriction goes into effect at the beginning of the first practice session.

Meanwhile, the Tar Heels continue their individual workouts indoors. Tatum can't get near the boys until he officially opens drills so it's no wonder he's anxious to get underway. But all he can do is sit and wait for a break in the weather.

Over 90 men are expected out for opening drills. Tatum will have 18 lettermen back, plus a host of good potential from last season's freshman squads and some rising juniors and seniors who didn't see enough action to win a letter in 1957.

Baseball: Rabb Has Tough Job Ahead

Walt Rabb has already begun his baseball preparations for the season which is only about a month away. The veteran diamond mentor, who only last year "officially" became head baseball coach, has his work cut out for him this season.

Rabb's fine team last year finished second in the ACC and almost got into a playoff with Duke for the championship. That team was loaded with fine potential fro this season but fate took a turn for the worst and now Rabb has a tremendous rebuilding job ahead of him.

Some of his '57 team dropped out of school and others signed professional contracts leaving him in mid air as to speculation about this year's team. But Rabb had his troubles at the beginning of last season and he and his assistant Bill Wilhelm brought the Tar Heels along almost on defense alone to finish second.

Thus you can never tell about the baseballers. They weren't given much chance at the beginning of last season sport is directed by a hustling coach who'll get all the ability and the same is true this year. But the comparatively minor possible out of the material at hand. Should be an interesting season.

Wolflets Freeze Out Tar Babies, 38-27

State's 3rd Win Over Tar Babies

By DAVE WIBLE

RALEIGH — Reynolds Coliseum was the scene of one of the slowest basketball games seen around these parts in a long time, when the State Wolflets defeated the Carolina Tar Babies for the third straight time, 38-27, last night.

Both squads decided to play the possession type ball their varsity brothers are famous for. An indication of the pace is the 15-9 halftime lead which State held.

Boring Contest

If records were kept of freshman games, many would have been broken last night, from the low final score to the degree of boredom of the fans. The guards on each team spent most of the evening bouncing the ball in front of the center circle while waiting for an opening in their opponent's zone.

State took the lead early in the first half and lengthened it to 14-5 at the three minute mark. Carolina hit two quick ones before the horn and it looked as though they might come back.

Slow Second Half

The teams came back on the floor with their original tactics and the game dragged on with State holding the advantage. Both teams stayed in a zone daring the other to penetrate it.

With about four minutes left and State leading 25-20, Carolina took the initiative and began to press. The game opened up slightly but each squad continued to play it cautious.

State took advantage of Carolina mistakes and quickly boosted its lead to 30-21. From then on out, it was simply a matter of waiting for foul shots as the desperate Tar Babies tried to get the ball. Hugh Donahue led the scoring for both teams with 12 points. State's clever little guard, Mark Reiner, led his team with 11.

THE SCORING

Tar Babies—Brown, 11; Donahue, 12; Hart, 2; Dunlap, 2—Total, 27.

Wolflets—Lakins, 9; Reiner, 11; Niewieroski, 8; Sinbeck, 8; Distefano, 8—Total, 38.

IN CONFERENCE PLAY

Brennan Maintains Scoring Lead

Barring a scoring slump, Carolina's All-American candidate Pete Brennan has virtually clinched the Atlantic Coast Conference scoring title.

The handsome Tar Heel forward from Brooklyn, N. Y. has scored 409 points in 20 games this season for a 20.5 average. That's almost three points better than his closest rival, Herb Busch of Virginia who has 317 points in 18 games for a 17.6.

Brennan has gotten his points on 132 field goals and 145 foul shots. Busch has 98 field goals and 121 foul shots.

Carolina's tricky little guard Tommy Kearns is only one point behind Busch with a 16.5 average on 114 field goals and 111 foul shots in 20 games. Wake Forest's Dave Budd is right on the heels of the 5-11 Tar Heel guard with a 15.2 average.

Only one other Tar Heel is listed in the top 11 scorers and he's sophomore forward Lee Shaffer who has a 13.2 mark for 20 games. Big Lee has 93 field goals and 77 foul shots for 263 points.

Gil Hodges Wants To Remain At First

NEW YORK, Feb. 18 (AP) — As far as Gil Hodges is concerned, the Los Angeles Dodgers will have to look elsewhere for a catching replacement for the injured Roy Campanella.

Hodges wants no part of the job. At least he's not going to volunteer for it.

"I see no reason why I should go back there," he said today. "Sure, if Walt Alston asks me I'll give it a try. But I'm too old to start over again as a catcher.

Murphy Got Jump On Scurlock; Knee Injury Stopped Bish Again

By DAVE WIBLE

"Murphy got the jump and took a margin that Dave couldn't overcome.

Tar Heel track coach Dale Ranson speaking, summing up Dave Scurlocks' first defeat on the indoor boards this season. The defeat coming Saturday night in the New York AC half-mile to Tom Murphy of Manhatten.

Expounding on his statement, Ranson went on to say, "The pace for the first quarter (56.7) was entirely too slow. All of the runners seemed to be waiting for another to make a move. Murphy took the initative with about a lap and a half to go and jumped to about a 15 yard lead. Dave just didn't have enough to catch him before the finish."

Murphy clocked 1:32.6 which is comparatively slow considering his past performances. Scurlock finished second about six yards behind and Ty Hadley of Occidental finished third.

Bishop Forced Out

Carolina's distance star Wayne Bishop ran into trouble in the same meet. Running with some of the best two-milers in the world, he was forced to drop out at the mile and a half mark because of the bum knee which has plagued him since for the past two years.

Before the accident, he was running free and easy about twenty yards behind the leaders John Macy and Velisa Mugosa. Macy went on to win in 8:50, and Mugosa finished second. At the mile mark, Bishop clocked 4:31 which is considered a very good pace.

Track Notes

The indoor track meet with State and Wake Forest that was posponed Saturday will be run this Saturday. This time it will be a quadrangular affair with Duke added to the visiting teams . . . . . .

Shotgun Killer

RALEIGH, Feb. 19 (AP) — Jan Rivers Hackett, 16-year-old youth charged with the shotgun slaying of a teenage girl friend, began a 60-day observation period yesterday at the state hospital here.

Committment papers were signed yesterday for the youth, president of the junior class at Ahoskie High School and a football and basketball star.

Police said he admitted firing three rounds from a shotgun into a pretty 16-year-old classmate, Dolores Newsome, of Ahoskie. Her body was found beside a country road near Ahoskie last Tuesday.

A motive for the shooting remains a mystery.

Ice Forge

CAIRO, Ill., Feb. 19 (AP) — A gigantic 17-mile ice gorge is building up in the Mississippi River, and ice gradually choking off river traffic on other streams.

Five towboats and their barges trapped temporararily in the huge ice gorge starting five miles north of Cairo had managed to ram their way out early today and headed south.

"Nothing is moving north today," the Army Engineers' office at Cairo reported. There was a possibility some southbound vessels still would attempt to buck the ice jam.

Sir Winston Churchill Sick With Pneumonia

ROQUEBRUNE - CAP-MARTIN, France, Feb. 19 (AP)-Sir Winston Churchill has pneumonia and pleurisy, his doctors said tonight. But he smoked two cigars today and was described as comfortable and in good spirits.

A medical bulletin issued at 9:30 p.m. through Montagu Browne, the former prime minister's private secretary, said:

"Sir Winston Churchill is suffering from pneumonia at the base of the lung and pleurisy. He had a good night and has passed a comfortable day."

The bulletin was signed by Lord Moran, Churchill's private physician who flew in from London, and Dr. David M. Roberts, his physician on the Riviera. Browne added:

"Sir Winston is in good spirits. He passed the day reading papers, talking to his family and dealing with correspondence."

Newsmen had been promised the medical bulletin would be issued late in the afternoon. Asked about the delay, the secretary replied:

"You must realize that we wanted to inform members of his family about his condition before they read it in the papers."

Told that Dr. Roberts had earlier said Churchill's condition was not dangerous, Browne commented:

"If Dr. Reberts said his condition is not dangerous then I am prepared to accept that this is true."

The secretary said there would be another medical bulletin tomorrow night. He said he did not believe he would have any official news tomorrow morning.

Fraternity Problems Is Topic For Special Meeting Today

Y Plans Conference In March

By MARY MOORE MASON

"Tours through the Wilds of Creation" will be the theme for the unique YM-YWCA spring conference for March 14, 15, and 16 at Camp Bricks.

The purpose of this unusual conference will be to "Sharpen the criticism of the world we live in through the study of the meaning of the work of the contemporary painter, sculptor, musician, poet, and novelist.

Tours

Consequently, the following tours through creation have been planned: "Art Speaks to the Individual through Painting and Sculpture," "Art Speaks to the Individual through Literature," "Art Speaks to the Individual through Music," and "Art Speaks to the Individual through Drama."

According to Margaret Daguhtridge, co-chairman of the planning board for the conference, some UNC students with outstanding talent are being asked to participate in the conference. Some of the special features offered will be the presentation of a play, a jazz band and modern dance.

Play Tryouts

Try-outs for the play "Cry the Beloved Country," which will be given at the conference will be Friday afternoon, Feb. 21, from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Cars will leave from the campus for Bricks, which is 16 miles north of Rocky Mount, March 14, in the afternoon.

The cost of the trip will be $9.50 with two dollars of this to serve as a deposit. This cost includes transportation, housing, and food.

The other co-chairman of the Y Conference Committee is Richard Love.

Mardi Gras Tickets Are Being Placed On Sale

Feb. 28, a week from this Friday, the second annual Mardi Gras weekend will begin.

Tickets for the two Friday events, the concert and dance, went on sale yesterday in the Graham Memorial Information Office. Mardi Gras Chairman Gerry Boudreau said tickets would be distributed to other points today. Cost to students is three dollars.

Boudreau estimated that if the Graham Memorial Activities Board were not subsidizing the cost of Mardi Gras, the cost of each ticket would be around $8. The $3 ticket includes both the concert and the dance.

Dance And Concert

The concert will be held from 3 o'clock to 5 o'clock the afternoon of Feb. 28 in the Tin Can. The dance will be held from 8 p.m. to midnight the same day.

Featured entertainer for the occasion will be Buddy Morrow and his orchestra. Morrow is well known for his recordings of 'One Mint Julep" and "Night Train."

The Tin Can is being turned into a giant outdoor ballroom for the occasion. Vice Chairman Jim Menzel said six 3,000 foot rolls of crepe paper have been ordered of help create this atmosphere. Menzel and Jim Vance are in charge of decorations.

GMAB has set aside $1.000 to convert the former airplane hanger from a gym to a ballroom.

Semi-Formal

Dress for the all-campus event will be dark suits for the men and cocktail dresses for the girls. Boudreau explained that the dance was not made a formal affair in order to keep the expense down for the students.

"The dance is for everybody, and everybody can afford the tickets, but having to rent a tux would run the price up," he said.

Permanent Committee Is Formed

By SARAH ADAMS

At the urging of Student Body President, Sonny Evans and IFC President, Bill Redding, an emergency meeting of a special committee to discuss fraternity problems has been called for this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Due to recent probems affecting both the fraternities and the University at large, both Evans and Redding feel that a meeting "to both pinpoint the problems and make specific recommendations" has become expedient.

Pressures

According to Evans, "The pressures on responsible students from all areas of the campus to come up with solutions and recommendations to alleviate various situations is great and urgent, and we are hoping for immediate action, the results of which will be a better and more contributing fraternity system.

Redding said, "After some discusssions and recommendations, I feel that the entire problems can best be solved through the efforts of a committee of this type."

Too Much Hypocrisy

Redding further added, "I feel that it is time for fraternity men to realize their problem and solve it. There is entirely too much hypocrisy in the present situation.

"It is important for us to govern ourselves if we are to continue to have this responsibility."

The committee, which promises to be of a continuing nature, is composed of Bill Redding, Mark Cherry, Mac Patton, Sonny Evans, Don Furtado, George Ragsdale, Charlie Ashford, Kit Whitehurst, Julia Ann Crater, Dot Pressly, Ann Morgan, Don Millen and Wade Smith.

Campus Chest Drive Emphasizes 'Student To Student Giving Idea

In this year's Campus Chest Drive, the members of the 1958 Board of Campus Chest are emphasizing the "student-to-student" idea of giving. They have expressed hope that each Carolina student will identify himself personally with the common effort of all members of the world university community to overcome the obstacles faced by some in the achievement of university training.

Fifty per cent, the largest allocation, will go to World University Service.

"It is not just a financial drive," says Libby McCord, Co-Chairman of Campus Chest, "but an educational one. Successful education brings thoughtful giving, based on an awareness of world student needs on a conviction that the needs of others are important to each of us personally and to our future."

World University Service is an international organization dedicated to mutual assistance in meeting the most crucial needs of the university community.

Throughout the world, it offers American students and professor an opportunity for giving to students abroad who are in need and for increasing international understanding, both at home and abroad.

The initial program of World University Service, launched after World War I, provided for universities in central and southern Europe. Since that time, the organization has grown into a world-wide operation of students and professors fighting ignorance and need on an international scale.

In Europe, where World War II disrupted lives and weakened the physical and moral fibre of almost every student, World University Service offered aid to refugees; provided scholarships, medicines, and food; and contributed to the operations of an international center offering rest cures.

Legislature To Meet Tonight

The Student Legislature will meet tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of Old East.

A bill introduced by Ralph Cummings (SP) "to organize administration of the Bell Tower Parking Lot" will come out of committee.

John Brooks' (SP) bill concerned with the composition and organization of the Carolina Quarterly, the Carolina Forum and the Publications Board will come up for action.

The bill to revise the Student Council, has been held to committee because, according to Jack Lawing, chairman of the ways and means committee the bill's introducer, Roger Foushee (SP), can not be present.

Lawing also said his committee wants to talk with members of the Student Council and study the bill more fully.

Seminar Slated For Summer

Three main speakers will be Howard Becker, professor of sociology in the University of Wisconsin; Will Herberg, Adjust Professor of social philosophy at Drew University and former labor research official; and William Kolb, professor of sociology in Tulane University. Each of the three is known for his writings in sociology or religion.

Another speaker during the institute will be Dr. John Hallowell, professor of political science at Duke University, who will discuss his experiences as director of a similar seminar.

The Danforth Foundation has allotted funds to provide scholarships for the 25 participants in the UNC institute. March 8 has set as application deadline.

Applications should be addressed to Director of the Danforth Seminar, Box 1057, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Phi Debates Pound Case

The Phi in its weekly meeting Tuesday night debated the case of Ezra Pound, a noted American poet confined in St. Elizabeth's Mental Hospital in Washington.

High Point of the evening was guest critic Dr. Lyman A. Cotten's comment on the problem with reference to the arguments given by the members of the society.

A large crowd of between 30 and 60 students was on hand to listen to the debate.

The bill favoring Pound's release from the asylum passed the society by a vote of eight to five, with one abstention. In an unofficial vote of all present the bill was rejected 37 to 21.

The President of the Phi, Jess Stribling, turned the chair over to Parliamentarian Don Gray at the opening of the meeting and introduced the bill himself.

President Strbiling began by showing how Pound's abnormal youth tended toward irrationality and even insanity. He also minimized the effect of the allegedly treasonable statements made by the poet over the Italian radio during World War Two.

Urges Release

Finally stating that since Pound's insanity is not criminal and since his imprisonment impairs his poetic out-put, Strbiling urged that Pound be released into the care of his wife.

Various other speakers referred to Ezra Pound's insanity and pointed out that no insane man, poet or not, should be released.

Rep. Don Jacobs noted that Pound would have to stand trial for treason if released and was still managing to write good poetry in St. Elizabeth's. The vote then was taken, and the bill passed.

Dr. Cotten of the Department of English rose to give a criticism of the arguments presented during the debate.

Work At Summer Resorts Is Topic For Meet Friday

For students interested in working at resorts this summer, a meeting will be held in 210 Gardner Hall, Friday at 3 p,m,

Marion Harris and Bill Stewart, two students who have worked several summers in resort hotels in New England, Canada, the Mid West, the West, and Western North Carolina, will be available to give suggestions on picking the hotels, writing the best letters of application, and applying for the right job.

They will also show slides of some of the resorts where they worked.

Gary Greer Is Elected President Of Di Senate

By VIRGINIA SANDIDGE

Gary Greer was elected president of the Dialectic Senate Tuesday night by acclamation, succeeding Gerry Boudreau.

Other new officers include: Rick Wolfer, president pro tem; Andy Canoutas, clerk; Rudy Alberts, critic and Buddy Gardner, treasurer.

The Di defeated a measure which would have called for sharing of corporation profits between management and labor. The vote was 4-3.

The measure stemmed from an idea of United Auto Workers President Walter Reuther, who recently suggested that members of the auto industry share their profits with their employees.

The positive debators said that labor should receive the majority of the profit, while the negative side said that labor has no right to the money invested by the capitalists.

A vote of the senators resulted 4-3 for the negative. Boudreau cast his vote, making the final result a tie. The vote of the guests also resulted in a tie.

Boudreau, in an out-going speech, said, "I would like to encourage students to come and hear the debates and to join the Society. It is a very valuable experience in public speaking."

Next week's topic has been changed to, "The Bombing of Tunisia."

State College Deserves A Spanking For Its Behavior

In their turn, State College students last night returned the harassment which the Wolfpack received in a game at UNC but went one further in their persistent boos against the Tar Heels.

Student behavior in the coliseum was so severe, in fact, that Tar Heel Coach Frank McGuire said after the game that never again would he introduce his team via the court in pre-game announcement of the starting lineup.

We criticized in earnest the humiliating behavior of Carolina students when the Wolfpack played in Chapel Hill earlier in the season. State College, in its turn, is now due a good spanking for the utterly ridiculous manner in which students there behaved Tuesday night.

Such demonstrations of partisan misconduct are nothing new in the Atlantic Conference. So well known are we for riots and demonstrations at our basketball games that national magazines call them trademarks of the ACC.

The incident Tuesday night was not an isolated one involving the Tar Heels this year. At Maryland they were booed and jeered practically out of the coliseum, and treatment elsewhere has several times been little better. Such demonstrations, it seems, have become more the expected than the unusual.

These facts point to the need for ACC officials to tackle the problems of spectator conduct with an eye to insuring fairness to both teams whenever highly competitive basketball squads within the conference meet before a singularly partisan crowd.

We highly favor all the cheering and yelling possible from a college crowd, but when it comes to jeering the opponent when he is playing the game fairly, when you boo players on the foul line and when they're being introduced—then it gets down to confirming what a lot of people think about you anyway.

Somehow, we feel that even the boys in Raleigh don't want to be viewed in that light.

Baby, It's Cold Outside

United Press carried this little story Wednesday:

The cold wave resulted in some tales about extreme weather around the Greenville (S.C.) police station.

During a yarn-spinning session, Detective G. H. Godfrey said he saw the statue of a Confederate soldier that stands at the end of Springwood Cemetery throw down its rifle and stick its hands in its pockets.

Detective L. G. Dill said he saw the flame of an oil lamp freeze and when the house holder attempted to extinguish the lamp with a stick, the flame broke off and set the house afire.

Policeman J. L. Tabor said the furnance at his house got so cold he had to wrap it with a blanket to keep it from freezing.

But Detective Godfrey topped that by telling that he put a bucket of water on his back porch and "it froze so fast the ice was still warm."

We'll offer these little tales heard in The Daily Tar Heel offices during the cold spell:

One resident in Old West gave up in despair when his bucket struck ice at the bottom of the Old Well.

A Carolina coed became so cold on her trek from the sorority house that by the time she got to Hanes Hall she couldn't even hear the pipes banging away in Anthropology class.

When one Carolina student began to take notes, he discovered a blue icycle dangling from the end of his pen.

Then there's the one about the professor who arrived late for class. The streets were so icy, he said, that he had three spills on his bicycle before he ever let his children off at elementary school.

Finally, a second coed braved the sub-zero temperatures to run to class, but left the building after reading this note on the door: CLASSES TODAY NO EXCUSES ACCEPTED.

Next class meeting, when asked to explain her absence of two days before, she cited in her unpolished English the note as she had read on the door: CLASSES TODAY? NO! EXCUSES ACCEPTED.

'Bohunking' Hurts Start In Business

Duke University is losing two football players who still have a year of eligibility but who have decided to get on with their life's work instead of staying around college for another year just to play football.

The Duke announcement on the subject says it is Duke policy "to allow these so-called five-year men to make their own decision as to whether they will take advantage of their final year of eligibility." It is good to hear that that is Duke's policy.

What would sound even better would be a hard-and-fast national ruling doing away with this business of five-year men or bohunking as it is sometimes called. That is simply the practice of not allowing boys to play football during their sophomore year, even though they practice regularly, thus giving them a year of eligibility after their playing time normally would have ended.

The additional year of age and experience might well give the coach a real star during the boy's fifth year.

The big thing, though, is that this, in effect, cuts a year off that boy's adult life. During a year when he should be in some sort of graduate school or actually out at work in the profession he has chosen, he is simply playing another year of college football. He might be helping the team and the coach but he's not helping himself in the long run.

Unless a boy has real reason for not playing a year—such as having to drop out of college—he shouldn't be allowed to have this fifth year.

Odd-Number Council Would Eliminate Ties

To the Editor:

Please allow me a little space in which to make a few comments on the bill to revise the Student Council which I introduced into the Student Legislature last Thursday night.

First, I feel that the proposed bill is very necessary in building a more uniform judiciary system for the campus. I, also, would like to congratulate you on last Saturday's comprehensive analysis of it. I feel that you helped immeasurably in presenting the essence of the bill to the student body, and I hope that your editorial gave the student body an understanding of it which will win support for its ratification.

However, I feel that I must disagree with you on one point stated in your Sunday editorial. You propose an "equal" number of members as opposed to an unequal number of seven (four men and three women), as presented. Whenever any democratic body is composed of an even number of members, without some procedure to break a tie, it is left open for frequently occuring tie-votes. This leaves the alternatives of a chairman, non-voting except in case of tie, or an "unequal" number of members. The Legislature had quite a discussion last week about such non-voting members, and it was agreed that such cases aren't practical and should be avoided, if at all possible. Thus we are back again to an uneven number of members.

You say that I doubletalk in proposing "equality" and at the same time providing for more men than women on the council. An even number of members is unfeasible for the above reasons; therefore, the fact that enrollment is not evenly divided between the sexes would seem to indicate that, if an unequal number is necessary, then the additional member should be a male student. I have said that the proposed system would give the coed population a greater and more nearly equal voice in deciding on the constitutionality of legislative and executive action, statutory and constitutional interpretations, and the hearing of cases appealed from agencies within the executive branch of student government.

Apart from this point, I think that we are in agreement on the bill, and it is my hope that I have logically presented to you why the bill should stand as proposed with an uneven number of members instead of an even number.

I thank you for giving me this opportunity to reply.

Sincerely yours,
ROGER B. FOUSHEE

Recession - Benson's Contribution

By CURTIS GANS

Pity the poor president.

A little over a year after his last successful campaign, and all his campaign issues are turned against him.

Well, one issue wasn't really valid at the time, since when he talked about peace, there was a cold war going on that is still in progress.

He stumped the country talking about progress and within a year the U. S. was lagging behind the Russians in the race for technological supremacy.

Moreover, the president had the audacity to attribute to his regime the prosperity that then was current. However, lately the stock market, the producers, the farmers, and the consumers got together to prove to the president that he had nothing whatever to do with prosperity, indeed that his policies lead to recession.

Whatever the circumstances, the country is in the midst of a recession the end of which is not in sight.

It should call for a careful re-examination of the economic policies of the government with special emphasis on critcial examination of the farm policies of Ezra Taft Benson.

After five years of balanced budgets, the Eisenhower administration had to go this year into deficit spending, and still the government cannot hold up the struggling economy.

Moreover, the new defense contracts have not curtailed the continued rise in unemployment as well as the decrease in corporation profits.

The real evil lies in the farm program of Agriculture Secetary Benson, whose system of low and flexible price supports, although theoretically correct, do not conform to practically reality.

The problem here is the old one of supply and demand. When demand exceeds supply the prices are high. However, seeing the high prices garnered for the crops the farmers endeavour to get more benefits and hence produce more. The result is an oversupply and low prices.

Under the Benson plan the low prices are not fully compensated for, and the economy suffers, as well the fact that products are wasted on the markets.

In a system of high fixed price supports, the farmer gets compensation for the overproduction, as well as a fixed payment for not producing or not farming certain fields. Although this may be considered unnecessary governmental intervention in the affairs of the private farmer, the economy needs it, and the farmers want it.

It must be apparent that this system of rigid supports must be reinstated for the preservation of the U. S. economy. It must be kept in until the farmers learn that they cannot overproduce because it will lead to reduced profits and unbalancing of the national economy.

This day may be never, since the profit motive or the desire for individual benefits will be hard to overcome.

Until that day comes, however, it might be a good idea to get a farm program that isn't 100% Benson proof, but will maintain the stability of the American economy.

No matter how changeable your climate may be, chances are you never saw the mercury go down as fast as it did when Robert Sherfield swallowed a clinical thermometer in a hospital at Bournemouth, England.

BEGAN AT BIRTH

A Few Words From 'De Lyon's' Mouth

FRANK CROWTHER

We fought the elements and a desire to finesse the whole cold mess last Saturday afternoon to meet Leo De Lyon at Memorial Hall. After having an early morning breakfast, courtesy of the ATO fraternity hospitality, on Friday night—or rather early Saturday morning—we had promised to interview Leo at 2 p.m. while he was dressing for the German's performance.

"Well, man, I hope lightening doesn't strike twice!" he laughed as we were blown through the door. The reference was to his last performance two years ago when Stan Kenton failed to show for the afternoon concert and Leo had to hold out on the stage for about an hour and a half. It was then a little after two and Ray Anthony had yet to make a showing.

After a bit of banter, we got to the business.

"It all began when I was born," he began. We asked him how long he had been working as a commedian. "Well, I've been at this type of performance for about nine years. Before that I worked as a musician, playing a piano and arranging It all changed when I made it with a cobra."

We asked about his TV and stage appearances in England. "I really had a ball on TV in England. You know, it's not like the business here in the States. Here you do a guest shot and you're the pawn of the technicians. They try to redirecf what some performer has been doing successfully for years! And they play tricks with an artist. Not so in England. They tell you that you have five or ten minutes and just let you go.

Another thing that I liked about the English was that they would listen to your suggestions. Do you think they would in this country? Ha, you can't tell them anything about their business."

He related to us how well he had liked England overall and confided that he was tempted to live there with his family.

"You know, I'm a big star in England. I mean that sincerely. I'm not just blowin' my own whistle. I found a great deal of professional freedom and satisfaction with the entertainment set-up.

"I made my first appearance at the Palladium during April-May of 1957 and made such a go of it that they held me over with Frankie Laine on the next show. I came home after that, packed up my wife and two children and went back to Stockholm, Sweden to appear at the China theater.

"I had some trouble there for the first four days. I wasn't getting across, and it was the stage manager who finally set me straight. Over there they don't like a performer to try to reach out for his audience, but rather that he perform as if he were on the screen. So I made the change, and after my four weeks were over the manager said that I had had the best luck of any English speaking commedian."

We asked him when he had decided that he might want to remain in England as a performer.

"After Sweden, I took the family to England and we lived there—not as tourists. We all loved it. I worked several of the best clubs there—one of them was 'Pigalle'—and finally turned down a one year contract. The crowd at the Savoy—a club which is supposedly very tough—was surprising and I went over quite well. The reason I turned down the contract was that I didn't feel that I would have grown any over the period of time. If I had been offered a part in a musical or on TV for a year, I might have remained.

"Later that year I met Princess Margaret two or three times and capped my stay off with the Command Performance on November 18, 1957. They had only three single acts—of the American contigent, that is—and I was one of them. (The other two were Judy Garland and Mario Lanza.) For those of us in the U.S., it is hard to realize exactly what a Command Performance means to a performer. It was really one of my greatest thrills. I mean it."

It was by then well past 2:30 and still no Ray Anthony. We both thought that history was about to repeat itself. At any rate, we continued by asking about his TV performances in this country.

"Well, I've done a few, but I don't like to appear in this country on television. Some of the reasons I mentioned before, being at the mercy of the people who run the show and having to live and swear by the clock. But it's also a big drain on my own material and, as you may realize, my type of humor is rather difficult to put across. The only thing that I have going now in the field is with CBS. They're trying to work something up for me that will have a loose format, but nothing is definite."

At exactly 20 minutes to three, the bus with Ray Anthony's ensemble arrived. "Man, here's the bus," said Leo, "so we're in business."

And we were. Anyone who attended the concert will agree that it was one of the most successful Germans presentations in some time. And, as was expected, Leo De Lyon was at his best.

Ten-Million-Dollar Tip

Just before leaving Ankara, Mr. Dulles announced that the United States was prepared, subject to Congressional approval, to make a grant of $10 million to the Baghdad Pact countries.

Is it from force of habit that U.S. attendance of international conferences can no longer be conceived without our delegate leaving a tip for the host?

The $10-million tip made headlines, while few remembered the $1.5 billion that the U.S. government has spent in the pact countries. Thus, rich Uncle Sam is made to appear in the role of handing his hosts a five-cent candy bar at the end of his visit, doing his best to make his hosts —and everybody else—forget that he has been making the mortgage payments on their house for the past decade.—THE REPORTER

Tar Heels Are Hungry Now

It could well be that Carolina's losses this season have been a great advantage to the ball club. The 37-game winning streak that went down the drain in the Kentucky Invitational and the Tar Heel's subsequent four losses have made the McGuiremen something they really weren't until the State game Tuesday night—a hungry ball club.

In the game with the Wolfpack, it seemed to this observer that the defending champs were, for the first time this season, battling from a "we have to prove ourselves" position.

If this is true, then the five losses will be of more value than it was ever thought. Carolina is no longer the invincible ball club which it was a year ago—and the most encouraging thing about this is that the boys seem to realize it. Now they know there's nothing mystical about the game; they'll have to scrap for everything they get just as the other teams do.

Best Regular Season Game?

Aside from the Dixie Classic, the 81-69 victory over the Wolfpack was perhaps the best game of the season for Frank McGuire's boys. The second half was a real dilly and it proved that this ball club could lift itself up by the boot straps and play excellent basketball. The Tar Heels would not wilt and resembled in some respects the ball club which ripped through everything last season.

Pete Brennan is the man who held the club together. His 18 free throws and a total of 32 points plus 10 rebounds kept State on the defensive. But Pete had to share the spotlight with sophomore center Dick Kepley. Dick definitely has not come along as fast as expected this season but against State he shook his lethargy and played a wonderful ball game.

Harvey Salz continued to gain prestige as a future great with another fine performance. The hustling little guard who lives only a half-block from Brennan in Brooklyn, dropped in 19 points and played a great all-around ball game.

Bobby Cunningham got in trouble with fouls and wasn't used as much but he played well when he was in there. Most spectators did not know before the game that Tommy Kearns had a fever before the game and almost didn't get to play. Tommy went to the infirmary immediately after the game—still he scored eight points before fouling out late in the contest.

Forward Lee Shaffer had another bad night for the Tar Heels. Lee is currently experiencing one of those slumps which athletes are constantly in danger of. But Shaffer has two more games in which to shake that slump before the all-important conference tourney March 6-8.

Labeled As Team To Beat Now

Carolina now has a wonderful shot at first place on the regular season title. Duke is 9-2, Carolina 9-3. Both have to play Maryland and finish the season against each other. Thus, it should be an interesting battle right down to the wire with only Maryland now being conceded a chance to wrest away the lead from Carolina and Duke.

The Tar Heels should be ready now. They are definitely the team to beat for the NCAA representation. There is more talent on this Carolina club than on any other team in the conference. It is to be hoped that the players are finally now realizing their potential. This is the stretch drive and what they do from now out will tell a very interesting tale.

Something Should Be Done About Sportsmanship

There is a growing need for officials of the Atlantic Coast Conference to take some action to curve the poor sportsmanship which is constantly growing around the conference.

We will not go into details about the conduct of the State fans. We do not criticize them either because we were guilty of of the same thing when State played us here. Poor sportsmanship is becoming a far-reaching thing. It is not confined to the Big Four schools, it is prevelant throughout the conference and this is a black mark on the name of the ACC.

It is assumed that the reason for this downward trend in sportsmanship in the conference is the fact that competition becomes tougher and tougher each season. But is this any reason for the fans to go to the extreme in creating ill-feeling between the players, coaches and everyone connected with the teams?

The regulations governing sportsmanship are vague and in no way stringent enough. At present the home team is responsible for the action of the crowd, but penalties for the crowd's behavior are seldom enforced.

The time has come for ACC officials to put their heads together and attempt to come up with some solution to this problem—a problem which, if not curved soon, will become malignant.

Kearns And Brennan Are On All-ACC Team

Two members of Carolina's 1956-57 national basketball championship team have been named to the All-Atlantic Coast Conference honor team chosen for the Associated Press by sportswriters and sportscasters.

Seniors Tommy Kearns and Pete Brennan were selected along with Virginia's Herb Busch, Clemson's Vince Yockel and Al Bunge of Maryland.

Brennan, a 21 year old forward from Brooklyn, has almost clinched the ACC scoring title with a 21 point average. He recently led his Tar Heel teammates to an 81-69 victory over N. C. State with 32 points. Brennan also leads the conference in rebounds.

Kearns is a 5-11 guard from Bergenfield, N. J. and his 17 point average is good for third best in the conference. One of the smaller men in the conference, Kearns has won the plaudits of sports authorities for his excellent ball handling and team leadership.

Only One Soph

Busch is 6-7, 245 and a junior from Short Hills, N. J. He is second to Brennan with a 17.6 average on the season. Yockel, a 6-3 180 senior from Jersey City, N. J. has been the spark behind the Tigers all season long. He has a 14.2 average. Bunge is the sophomore on the honor squad. He stands 6-9 and weighs 215: The Palmrya, N .Y. native has averaged 11.1 for the year.

Carolina's sophomore forward Lee Shaffer was named to the honorable mention team. Shaffer's average is just below 13 points per game.

SECOND TEAM

Lou Pucillo, North Carolina State; Dave Budd, Wake Forest; Ray Pericola, South Carolina; John Nacincik, Maryland, Bucky Allen, Duke.

HONORABLE MENTION

Lee Shaffer, Carolina; Bob MacGillivray and John Richter, North Carolina State; Dickie Prater, South Carolina; Jim Newcome and Bobby Joe Harris, Duke; Ed Brinkley, Clemson.

Coach Frank McGuire Blasts Poor Sportsmanship

RALEIGH, Feb. 19 (AP) — Carolina basketball coach Frank McGuire, irked by booing basketball fans, says "I am never going to allow a team of mine to be introduced again, no matter where we are."

The statement was promoted by two incidents last night during the Carolina-North Carolina State game which the Tar Heels won 81-69.

McGuire's star forward, Pete Brennan, a candidate for All-America honors, was greeted by a loud chorus of booes when he ran out on the court in pre-game introductions.

McGuire motioned Brennan off the court and the other members of the Tar Heel starting five were not introduced. The other incident was the booing of Dick Kepley as he got set to shot a foul.

The Tar Heel coach told newsmen he is "fed up" with noisy, booing fans. He said, "we have to draw the line on this sort of thing before it gets completely out of hand."

Fox Speaks

State coach Everett Case and referee Phil Fox both acted to quiet the crowd enough for Kepley to take his shots, but not until Fox had taken the unusual step of speaking to the crowd over the public address system.

Fox told the crowd that a player was entitled to take his shots free of interference and that it was the responsibility of the home school to maintain order. McGuire said he had requested Fox to speak to the crowd.

"I thought that was an excellent thing Fox did," said McGuire. Discussing the booing when the Tar Heels were introduced, McGuire said:

"Why should I allow my kids to go on the floor just to get booed?" "And every time I go out there I subject myself to ridicule."

Fans Are Intelligent

McGuire said he did not think "we need conference legislation" on the situation yet because "I think it can be remedied by coaches and athletic directors. The student fans are intelligent and will listen to the coaches. I have started it over at our place and other coaches should carry the ball."

McGuire said he had been criticized for his practice of frequently requesting crowds on the Tar Heels' home court to quiet down.

"When I first came to Chapel Hill," he said, "the football players would line up behind the visiting team's bench and razz the visiting coach and players.

"I immediately stopped those things and have done my best to maintain order at our ball games," McGuire said. "I'm sorry to say I have found no such order at any other place in the conference."

State's coach Everett Case also told reporters he could not "recall a time when our fans acted the way they did" last night, and "I hope we don't have this again.

Pete Brennan Nearing ACC Cage Scoring Title

GREENSBORO, Feb. 19 (AP) — North Carolina's Pete Brennan just about has the Atlantic Coast Conference's season scoring race locked up, but Herb Busch of Virginia is a close second in efficiency.

Brennan, according to latest ACC Service Bureau figures, leads the scoring with 20.5 points a game, and in rebounding with 12.5 recoveries per outing.

Busch Averages

Busch, a 250-pound, 6-7 junior who played only half of his sophomore year for the Cavaliers, is second in scoring with a 17.6 per game average, second in rebounding with 10.7 and is not too far off the pace in the shooting departments.

Bob MacGillivray of North Carolina State and Paul Schmidt of Duke rank one-two in field goal shooting with respective averages of 53.0 per cent and 52.1 per cent.

George Ritchie of Wake Forest tops the free throw shooting with an accuracy mark of 84.8 per cent.

Field Goal Accuracy

In field goal accuracy, the capable Busch has hit 49.0 per cent, or 98 goals in 200 shots. From the free throw line he has hit 121 of 150 tries for 80.7 per cent.

He could get the season's free throw title unless Ritchie, just on the borderline of eligibility for contention because of only 46 attempts, becomes more active in the stretch.

Tar Babies Beat Pfeiffer, 104-56

Carolina's Tar Babies defeated the Pfeiffer College freshmen last night with the top-heavy score of 104-56. Carolina's high scorers were Lou Brown with 40 points and Hugh Donahue with 30.

Fire Ravages Presbyterian Church Here

By PAUL RULE

A fire of undetermined origin broke out in the Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church last night at approximately 11:30.

Flames at first appeared to be confined to the roof and the rear portion of the building. Shortly after midnight the blaze spread to the main part of the structure.

At 12:30 a. m. local fireman aided by a unit of the Carrboro Fire Dept. were still battling the blaze which apparently was not as yet under control. No estimate of the possible extent of the damage was available as of press time last nite, but it was considered a total loss.

news in brief

Percy Weeps

SMITHFIELD, N.C., Feb. 20 — (AP)—His eyes filled with tears, alleged bootleg liquor baron Percy Flowers was sentenced today to a total of 18 months on the roads and fined $150 and costs on 11 charges.

In passing sentence on Flowers, Superior Court Judge W. H. S. Burgwyn described the 53-year-old merchant-farmer as "one of the largest manipulators in liquor in North Carolina, at least that is his general reputation."

Double Trouble

SEATTLE, Feb. 20 (AP) — Dave Beck Sr., retired and wealthy president of the Teamsters Union, today was sentenced up to 15 years in prison for stealing $1,800 from his union.

His son, Dave Beck Jr., a short while earlier had been fined $2,000 and his sentence deferred three years for taking $4,650 from the teamsters.

Postal Hike

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20—(AP)—A 5-cent postal rate for letters mailed out of town was approved 7-6 today by the Senate Post Office Committee. It would be effective for three years.

President Eisenhower and Postmaster General Summerfield have been pushing for increases since 1953, but up to now the Senate commitete has always blocked the legislation.

Shakin' Goin' On

WILMINGTON, Feb. 20—(AP)—Is Mother Nature defying the record book and the odds makers with four grinding earth tremors in as many days along this coastal area?

Is it the fickleness of her capricious disposition that has caused the earth to tremble for 10 seconds daily almost at the same time of day? Or is man in some way responsible?

This was the prime topic of discussion today after a fourth tremor shook the area from Southport to Wrightsville Beach, 25 miles away, and as far inland as 15 to 20 miles.

Churchill Better

ROQUEBRUNE - CAP - MARTIN, France, Feb. 20 — (AP) — Stout hearted Sir Winston Churchill made slow but steady progress tonight in his battle against pneumonia and pleurisy.

Scottish Debators Coming Here For Debate March 13

UNC Students Match Scots In Local Debate March 13

Two Scotish debators will be on campus March 13 to participate in a formal debate with two UNC students, according to an announcement yesterday by John Brooks, president of the Forensic Council.

The Council and the Carolina Forum are co-sponsoring the event. The UNC debators and the topic for debate will be announced later.

The two debators from Scotland are Leonard MacKenzie Turpie and Ronald Bernard Anderson, both from Glasgow. Both hold M.A. degrees from Glasgow University.

Turpie formerly participated in the Glasgow University Dialectic Society and now is a member of the Debates Conveners of the Glasgow University Union and Scottish Union of Students. In addition, he is a member of the Students Representative Council.

Anderson was a member of the winning team in the National Student Debating competition in 1956-57. He also engaged in such other Glasgow University activities as the Empirical Society and the Parliamentary Debating Assoication.

At the present time, both Anderson and Turpie are students in the Law faculty at Glasgow University

The debate between the UNC and Scottish teams will be held in Carroll Hall at 8 p.m. on March 13.

Campus Chest Fund Aids Exchange Program

By MARY MOORE MASON

"I am here at your university not only to study but to learn about your student government, your other organizations, your ideas and attitudes, and your country," said the blue-eyed, blond German boy.

This was Eberhard Boecker talking, the Goetingen student representative to UNC this year.

Few students at Carolina know that UNC has an exchange program with Goettingen University in Goettingen, Germany. Each year this University picks at least one boy to go to Goettingen to study and learn about the students and the country for a year. The German university in turn sends us at least one student.

These scholarships are made possible through the students at UNC who contribute to the Campus Chest which is just about to start its campaign for funds for this year.

This year the Campus Chest is planning on putting 20 per cent of the money it makes in its fund drive toward the Goettingen scholarship. Last year it made approximately $1500, and this year its goal is $2000. The money put toward the Goettingen scholarship will be used for travel and living expenses.

Plans To Travel

At present there is no fund which provides for the Goettingen students travel through the United States after they get here. Eberhard is planning on working part of this summer and paying for his own travel around the country .

"We had planned to send two exchange students to you this year," said Eberhard, "but you only had funds to send one student to us, so we canceled our other scholarship."

Eberhard was chosen to come by a special group on his campus. This group was composed of three students from the student government, one student who had been over here before, several professors, and a couple of Americans. The student who is chosen to come is chosen on the basis of intelligence, interest, ability, and general attitude.

IDC Council Court

An official session of the Inter-Dormitory Council Court was held Wednesday.

Two students were brought before the court and were charged with violations of University residence hall regulations.

One student was found guilty of violating quiet hours for repeatedly playing his radio too loud. The court placed him on indefinite probation.

The other student was found guilty of setting fire to a tennis ball and throwing it into another resident's room. He had an official reprimand placed on his record and was warned by the court that any such indiscretions in the future would not be tolerated.

Auto Crash Involves Two UNC Students

Two UNC students were involved in an automobile accident Wednesday night in front of Memorial Hospital.

Local police officers said Frank Edwin Adkins of Victory Village and Miss Gwendolyn Duncan Lemly, nursing student from West Jefferson, were driving the same direction in front of the hospital at about 10 p.m.

Miss Lemly was in the left lane and Adkins pulled in to the right lane beside her. Officers quoted Miss Lemly as saying she thought Adkins was going to pass her.

Adkins told the officers he thought she was going to cut left.

When neither did what the other expected the front bumper of Miss Lemley's car hooked rear bumper Adkins'.

No one was injured, but the Lemly car received $75 damage. Damage to Adkins' car was $150.

Emergency Frat Committee Will Recommend Reforms

Constitution Amendment Presented

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The amendments required to make the Honor Council revision bill constitutional were introduced by Al Goldsmith (UP) at the Student Legislature last night.

The body voted to reconsider the Honor Council bill at the next meeting when the necessary amendments will also come up for action. These amendments change the jurisdiction of the councils.

Roger Foushee introduced changes for his bill to revise the Student Council. These alterations are in the form of amendments to the Student Constitution and will make the constitution correspond to the new bill.

Foushee's bill provides for his amendments to come before the student body for a vote at spring elections. The Constitution would be altered to include a Men's Council to try men violators of the Campus Code and a Student Council which would have original jurisdiction over questions of constitutionality.

After some explanation and a few questions the Legislature passed four bills.

The first was John Brooks' (SP) bill to appropriate $100 to the Foreign Exchange Student Committee.

Next came Brooks' bill which set the membership of the Carolina Forum at four and defined the terms of office of Student Legislators on the Carolina Forum, The Carolina Quarterly and the Publications Board.

Ralph Cummings' (SP) bill to organize "administration of the Bell Tower Parking Lot" and Al Goldsmith's (UP) bill to appropriate $375 for the purchase of "In the Name of Freedom," a film concerning UNC were the last bits of legislation passed.

This movie will be lent "to foreign universities as an 'ambassador' from UNC." It will belong to the Foreign Exchange Committee.

Pat Adams (SP), chairman of the newspaper research committee, introduced a bill to reorganize the selections board for The Daily Tar Heel.

The new board would be composed of the two party chairmen, an elected non-salaried member of the newspaper staff, an elected executive member of the staff, the Chairman of the University Faculty and an appointed member of the faculty of the School of Journalism.

Adams also introduced a bill to limit the campaign expenses of every editorial candidate to $30.

Goldsmith introduced a bill to require any future National Student Association to attend at least one NSA convention before he can be eligible for the position.

UNC's European Tour Has A Few Places Left

The UNC tour to Europe for this summer has just about been filled. However, there are still a few places open.

The 10-week tour which will leave New York on the "SS Italia" June 7 and will arrive back on Aug. 29 has been planned by a group of Carolina students under the leadership of Dick Stoker and Tog Saunders and the advisorship of Jim Carse and Claude Shotts, the directors of the YMCA.

Such places as Hamburg, Berlin, Cologne, Heidelberg and Munich will be visited in Germany. The next stops will be in Salzburg, Vienna and Klagenfort.

In Italy the tour will visit Venice, Rimini, Perugia, Rome, Florence, Siena, Milan and Bologna.

Lucerne will be visited in Switzerland, and then the tour will move on to France where it will visit Strasbourg, Nancy and Paris.

To Visit World's Fair

The Brussels World's Fair will be taken in when the tour arrives at Belgium. Amsterdam will be the next stop in Holland.

Four days will be spent in London, and there will be excursions to Windsor, Stratford- on-Avon, and other interesting sights.

Then a week of free time will be given to the students so they can travel on their own.

This "UNC Goes to Europe" program is unusual for three reasons. First of all, it is the first student tour that the University has sponsored.

Inexpensive

Second, it is being done through National Student Association Educational Travel, Inc. and thus is unusually inexpensive, costing only $996.

Third, it is not just a tour. The students will have opportunities to talk to student and government leaders throughout these countries. In Berlin they will visit the Berlin International Student Seminar as representatives of UNC.

Otherwise, the purpose of the tour is for students to study these countries, to see beneath the surface of them and to see and appreciate their culture, art and architecture. They will also serve as student ambassadors from the U. S. A. and from UNC.

Tour Programs

Consequently, interesting and educational programs will be given throughout the spring semester for these European bound students so they will know something about the art, architecture, politics, geography, history and culture of the various countries before their visit.

The following students have planned to go: Ward Sims, Thelma Ragland, Linda Chapell, Mack Pearsall, Pat Anderson, Roberta Hastings, Dorothy McNeill, Ann Harvey, Mary Olmstead, Susan Inman, Tog Sanders, Mary Moore Mason, Darlene Hardin, Charlotte Williams, Cynthia Seagraves, Norm White, and Lib May and Kathy Dwight from Woman's College.

Students Tried In Recorder's Court

The following UNC students were tried in Recorders Court in Chapel Hill this week:

LeRoy B. Frasier, Jr., Durham; speeding, $10 and costs.

Lowell Graham, Goldston; using expired operators license, $10 and costs.

James Monroe Long, Blanch; speeding, $5 and costs.

William A. Bridges Jr., Wilson; using expired registration plates, costs.

Samuel Cole Guy, High Point; speeding, $10 and costs.

Emergency Body Starts Frat Probe

The Emergency Committee on social fraternities got down to business Thursday afternoon, but specific areas of discussion were not submitted for publication.

All a spokesman for the group would says was that problems related both to the houses themselves and the University were discussed by the committee set up by student government and the IFC.

However, Student Body President Sonny Evans said the body will "recommend reforms in the fraternity system to the responsible parties concerned." To that end it will study many aspects of fraternity life, he said.

Although reasons for the committee's institution have been vague, it was generally believed that recent publicity about an alleged fraternity "pajama party" put emphasis on the need for such a body.

Problems Discussed

Evans said the committee Thursday discussed problems ranging from fraternity social rules to future chapters on the campus, and reached agreement on the need for specific recommendations to present to the University administration.

Just what those recommendations will be, he said, will be determined in future meetings where fraternity problems will be discussed and acted upon by the body.

High on the list for consideration is a new "visiting agreement" proposed by the IFC to amend current regulations pertaining to drinking habits at fraternities when coeds are in the houses. The laws as now written are frequently violated.

Evans, refusing to comment specifically on "problems" aired by the committee, said the body "realizes the urgency of the situation which exists on campus."

Committee Purpose

"They also understand that the purposes of the committee are to discuss many aspects of fraternity life in an effort to propose and recommend reforms in the system to the respsonble parties concerned," Evans continued.

He said that he is "hopeful for suggestions" and is certain that "significant proposals will be forthcoming" following future committee meetings.

The commitee's next meeting has been set for 3 p.m. Monday in Evans' office in Graham Memorial.

Student Union Committee To Hold Open Hearings

The Building Committee of the Graham Memorial board of directors will hold an open hearing on the question of facilities to be included in the plans for the new student union building on campus Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 26 and 27, from 4-6 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room of GM.

All students who are interested in expressing ideas on what should go into the new building are encouraged to appear before the committee.

In any student wishes a specific appointment for a certain time they are asked to call Miss Staples at 4352 from 1-5 p. m. any day.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Sally Horner, Barbara Koch and Julia Redhead and Glean Meltzer, Richard Midkiff, Nelson Hinton, William Covin, Cecil Rand, John Clare, Dewey Weir, Norman Draper, Willard Ward, Bryan Grimes, William Lytle, Robert Fromer, William Dunn, Thomas Brandon, Michael Smith, Gordon Theiln, William Evans, Daniel McKenzie, Willis Whitehead, Walter Long and Johnny Culp.

Spring Election Success Depends On Student Body

Now that Vice President Don Furtado has announced spring elections for April 1, the political pot and all that it signifies will soon begin simmering at UNC.

We would, therefore, remind the electorate that the whole of student government is dependent entirely upon the participation of the individual student at Carolina. At election time, his status as a voter supercedes that of the politician.

Unfortunately—and we are no exception in this respect—student participation in campus-wide elections of the past has not reached the point needed of it. The ballot count has consistently fallen far short of the number enrolled at the University. We sit by idly and let the other man do the voting.

Yet student government at UNC plays such a vital role in the life of the student that all qualified voters should take, in some way, an active part in determining who is to head it. To that end, the ballot box is available for all.

Indeed, apathy toward major elections has been in the past a blow to democracy not only on a campus level, but on the national scope as well. And often it makes of non-participants the loudest critics when policies of new regimes go against their own.

However, the voter is not the only individual to be pleaded with before election time. Candidates, too, should be reminded of the magnitude of the duties which accompanies a successful campaign, and they should pledge themselves to work at all times for the betterment of student government and the University.

In this respect some office holders fail once they have been instated by the popular vote. Absences at legislative sessions are often frequent, and news stories tell of special appointments by the political parties to replace a legislator resigned from his post.

Thus election time brings with it two problems which only the student body can correct: (1) apathy toward participation in the elections, and (2) selection of a candidate who will best perform the job for which he is running.

In spring elections, 1958, we challenge every student to assume the role expected of him.

We May Be Down, But Reds Must Reach Up To Hit Us

The Moscow newspaper Soviet Russia has taken a look at the American economy and came up with this story to tell its brain-washed readers:

1. The number of hungry, homeless and unemployed Americans is rising rapidly.

2. The practice of medicine has been turned into a cold-blooded business in the United States and new housing is being built not for the working people but for the rich.

3. In the Soviet Union, things are much better off; new housing soon will be available for most of the Soviet citizens still living in cramped quarters.

4. More than five million Americans lived on charity last year, thousands were homeless and "millions of people are asking themselves, 'How are we to live?'"

Well, you don't have to pick up a Moscow daily to find that many Russian comments about the United States are true. You can read the story in your hometown paper, you can see it on television, or you can watch it on the movie screen.

But the question raised in our mind is, who in Russia can afford the newspaper to read, who in Russia owns a television set to be told about his own country, much less about another, and who in Russia has money enough to go to the movies to learn of bad times in America?

Furthermore, what Soviet worker would refuse to trade his pittance of a salary and lack of domestic comfort with the average American worker? The truth is that the United States would be overrun by the Communist proletariat if workers there could leave the country at their own whims and afford a trip to the West.

Economics books would give the Red brethren a close look at worldly comparisons and show these facts to those not too blind to read them: the United States worker has the highest income of all nations; his property and savings far outreach those of any single country; he works fewer hours and buys more for his money than any of his foreign equals.

Yet in recent months we have been plagued by declining employment, some are wondering about their sustenance for the future, and not all workers can afford the new homes which they desire. But even these facts don't elevate conditions in Russia above those of the United States.

There's an old story about not hitting a man when he's down. We are, in fact, down at the present; but the Soviet Russia must still stand pretty high on a pedestal to strike even the feet of our currently problem-ridden nation.

Could Be The Law Needs Suspending

Down at the University of Georgia they've come up with a new meaning for "instruction." That's the reason given for the suspension of six coeds for going on a Georgia Tech houseparty which became snowbound in the mountains last weekend.

"This is not for punishment," declared Dean of Women Mrs. Edith Stallings. "It is for instruction. We felt suspension was in their best interests."

Well, it looks like punishment to us. And what makes it wrong is the fact that Mrs. Stallings said, in a statement, "They are all nice girls. As far as we know they did nothing wrong at the party." It was incidentally, chaperoned.

The girls were suspended under a University rule prohibiting coeds from attending out-of-town, off-campus house parties during a school quarter. But, officials said, they can re-enter in the spring semester.

That leaves us to wonder if perhaps the University of Georgia should not rewrite some of its rules. They're obviously almost as old as the University itself.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Dress Habits Used By Coeds To Judge Men

By GAIL GODWIN

Last Thursday on page four of the DTH, "Coeds Spoke Out" on what they expected their boy-friends to wear. It seems crew necks and back buckles were still a prerequisite before the little bundles of femininity would say "yes" to a date.

This proves interesting. When he calls on he phone, does one say, "Er, excuse me please, but what have you got on?" The answers to this question might be acceptable . . . then, again the young man might not be properly attired at the time he dialed Betty Coed's number.

The dilemma is somewhat simpler when he asks her for a date in person. Then she can simply turn him around and look for the back buckle herself!

Many cheers have been uttered in homage to the lass from Winston Salem who declared that "A really attractive boy outshines the clothes he wears," and made no specifications except that he "had some on."

True, some boys need to muster up every bit of neatness, dress consciousness, and money for clothes in order to even appear presentable. If there are any Carolina gentlemen who consider themselves in this category, they would do well to subscribe to every rule set up by Betty Coed. The best of luck to them in their pursuits in prescribed suits.

No real girl could possibly respect a man whom she could tell, "Now, darling, be sure and wear your brown tweed coat tonight," and he would meekly respond, "Yes, dear."

The man who has got what it takes knows when to wear what. He thinks of his own comfort—both physical and social. You will usually see this type wearing dark clothes to a concert, thick sweaters (in any color he happens to prefer) on cold days, and blue jeans to romp around in and to study by the fire.

The funny thing is, clothes are usually the last thing one notices about such a person. They are too busy looking at the color or the expression in his eyes, the jaunty way he walks, or the way he lights a cigarette. They are probably more interested in what he is saying than whether his tie stripes go up or down.

Some girls date boys; others date clothes. If the girls in the second category ever find themselves running short of dates, I am sure the clothes stores uptown would be more than glad to rent out appropriately dressed dummies for the night.

"Baby, It's Almost As Cold Outside"

Oh, Minerva, Lend Us Thine Owl!

By FRANK CROWTHER

We received our copy of "The New Republic" today and found, as usual from Gilbert Harrison & emsemble, a rather biting observation—this one supposedly from the viewpoint of the Russian children. Although this bit of banter may seem almost harmless on the surface—at least one might think so when viewing the continued inactivity in Washington circles, semi-circles, triangles and wreck-tangles—we may all learn one of our most bitter lessons from this terse parody. Be sure to follow closely and answer all the questions.

IVAN AND NATASHA

"Look, Natasha, look. I can read English," said Ivan.

"Look, Ivan, look, look. I can write English," said Natasha.

"Look, look, they both said. "We are little Russians but we can read and write English."

"You read English very well Ivan. You write English very well, Natasha," said their teacher. "You read and write English as well as American boys and girls. Comrade Krushchev will be happy."

"Does Comrade Krushchev look after American boys and girls too?" asked Natasha.

"No, no," said the teacher. "No, no, no. Comrade Krushchev does not look after the Americans. Not yet."

"Then who looks after the Americans?" asked Natasha.

"The Americans have a government," said the teacher. "The government is in Washington. Who can describe the American government?

"I can, I can,' cried Ivan. "It is neo-anti-crypto-proto-fascist."

"Very good, Ivan," said the teacher. "That is correct."

"The American government is awful stupid," said Natasha.

"Awfully stupid," said the teacher. "Why do you say that, Natasha?"

"Because it does not make nice schools for American boys and girls to study in," said Natasha. "When Ivan and I grow up, we will be able to read and write English very well. When the American children grow up, they will not able to read and write Russian at all.'

"Most of them will not even read English very well," said Ivan, laughing.

"To say nothing of blueprints," said the teacher.

Questions:

(1) Why are Ivan and Natasha learning English?

(2) Why doesn't the American government build schools?

(3) What is a government for?

(4) What did the teacher mean by that last crack?

Well, I am not sure that we can really chide the government for inaction. I mean, they have ben moving around quite actively as of late, what with the FCC investigation, Sherman Adams refusing to testify by claiming executive privilege, President Eisenhower "heartlessly" sporting around in Georgia for golf balls and birds in the bush, Vice President Nixon (not to be outdone) being a sport by addressing all the sports fans, and Secretary of State Dulles planning a trip which will make Mike Todd look like a piker.

And we are told that our school system isn't as bad as the wooly-boogers would have us believe. We did learn something from John Dewey, didn't we? And isn't it wonderful how our parents are enjoying the wonders of life by growing up with their children? Oh joyous days, bliss and plenty. "Dear old dad, how 'bout a twenty?"

Sail on, O Ship of State,
Sail on, O Union, strong and great
Humanity watches us degenerate
Because we fail to educate.

SEPARATION OF COURTS UPHELD

To The Editor:

I believe firmly that the Honor Councils should remain separate. My reasons for this conviction are based on direct contact with the Women's Honor Council as a student who was tried and found guilty by this body. It seems to me that the people most qualified to speak on the revision of the Honor Council system are the members themselves, and the students who have appeared before them. On this ground I am presenting my views and arguing for the continued separation of the Councils.

In my opinion there are several valid reasons why separate councils can investigate a case more thoroughly and ultimately arrive at a more just decision than a mixed council. Most important of all is the fact that a student on trial would feel embarrassment about presenting certain facts to a mixed group. Although some have stated that this argument is senseless, I can assure them from personal experience that appearing before Honor Council is difficult without the added obstacle of embarrassment which I am sure students would feel at times before a mixed council.

Secondly, I believe separate councils are much more able to understand a case from the personal angle. Nothing is more important to a person on trial than the feeling that the group which will sentence him has every reason to understand him as a person and to weigh with justice the cause of his action. In separate Councils of men and women there is a basis of understanding between the Council and the student on trial—a similarity in social rules, codes of behavior, experiences, and trends of thought. This assurance that you will be understood as a person and as a fellow student is vital to the person on trial and essential in forming a just sentence. Separate councils can, I believe, investigate more effectively and sentence more justly because students before them can testify without fear and can be assured of complete understanding on the part of the Council in the weighing of their case.

I am strongly convinced from my own experience that only through separate Honor Councils can cases continue to be dealt with fairly. To a student who appears before the Council two things are uppermost in his mind—the wish to state his case honestly and freely and the hope that his case will be handled with true discernment and justice. Under our present system I feel that we have these privileges and I sincerely hope that we may continue to have them. —Anonymous

WHO IS CROWTHER?

To The Editor:

Some days ago while glancing over the mat of names on the staff of The Daily Tar Heel, I noticed that directly under the name of the editor appeared the name Frank Crowther, Associate Editor. Not knowning too much about the intricacies of the paper, I immediately wondered what the function of the Associate Editor could be. I looked through the paper for several days for an article announcing the appointment of Mr. Crowther, yet none came to my attention. There was no official announcement, and there was no article in The Daily Tar Heel.

While I realize that since you were voted to be editor of our (?) paper by the student body, and that you have the power to make appointments as you choose, I am dubious of such a sudden and unannounced move on your part. I know not whether Mr. Crowther receives payment for whatever services he renders to the "voice of the student body," but I feel that as a member of the student body who supports The Daily Tar Heel I, and others, have the right to know who this person is and what his function may be.

The crowning blow came the other day when I noticed that editorial copy had made it impossible to include all of the names in the mat. Now, this is easily explainable but it appears to me that the entire sports staff, edit staff, and much of the news staff was omitted while the name Frank Crowther still appeared.

I wonder if you could enlighten the students about this question.

JOHN R. RUDY III

(Ed. Note: Mr. Crowther's duties are whatever the editor specifies. And, it might be added, he is one of the hardest-working, non-paid members of the staff. He is a junior from Washington, D. C. That his name followed that of the editor on the mentioned page is purely coincidental. For if the edits had been a bit longer, Mr. Crowther's name, too, would have been dropped. Until that occurs, his name will appear as is, upon request of the editor.)

LIBEL PROTECTION IS ED.'S INTEGRITY

To The Editor:

Wholeheartedly I agree with your recent statement that "freedom of the press is a two-way proposition." But I am shocked at the means you propose to insure a student editor's fulfillment of his part in the relationship. Even more appalling is the admission of your own lack of integrity. This, in effect, is what your editorial confesses. For, when you write that at present there is a "total absence of any plan to protect an individual student," and when you say that "the editor holds a powerful stick which can be raised and dropped at his discretion, bringing down with it the defamation of character of any individual whom he wishes to attack," a reader must surely conclude that you either possess no standards of professional behavior or that you presume the right ruthlessly to disregard them. Whence, sir, derives this right to defame?

I perhaps am one of the gullible voters who thought the latest election placed in the editor's chair one whose "discretion" would be guided by ethical principles. I believed that the individual student DID have a protection against "detrimental and untrue statements." In my innocence I thought that protection lay in your own sense of honor and responsibility. Naive of me, perhaps, but I have actually argued that moral considerations would deter you from such journalism. Now here you are advocating fear of legal redress as the student's really effective protection. You would make the basis for an editor's conduct purely economic. This, sir, is disillusioning to those who thought the foundation was something more noble. In view of the repeated claim that the recall which "one time succeeded" was sheerly a matter of the former editor's incompetence, I am confused by your associating that case with an occasion when "questions of libel have been raised."

Interviews Scheduled For Campus Orientation

Interviews for prospective members of the Campus Orientation Committee will start next week, according to Chairman Herman Godwin.

Announced dates and times are: Tuesday, 2-4 p.m., Wednesday, 2-4 p.m.; Thursday, 4-6 p.m. and Friday 2-4 p.m. All interviews will be conducted in the Woodhouse Conference Room at Graham Memorial.

Eighteen positions are open on the committee, eleven of which are for men and seven for women. Selections are to be made by a bi-partisan committee headed by Student Body President Sonny Evans.

"In making the announcement of interviews for the Campus Orientation Committee," said Godwin, "I wish to emphasize the fact that the success of the entire Orientation Week depends upon the work of the committee in its planning and execution of the program."

"Let me urge all those students, both men and women," he continued, "who desire to serve in a responsible committee position to apply during the interview period."

CAROLINA'S LAST HOME GAME

Terps Here Sat. For Big Contest

Back in the groove and once again looking like their national championship team of last season, Carolina's Tar Heels, fresh from a classy 81-69 triumph over neighbor N. C. State, close out their home schedule Saturday against another ACC foe, Maryland.

The Tar Heels well remember the night of Jan. 11 at College Park when, before a standing room house of more than 15,000, they took a 74-61 shellacking from a hot Terp team. It was their second loss of the season and a bitter defeat to sustain. They do, indeed, remember well.

Three More

Since then Coach Frank McGuire's men have dropped three more numbers, one to N. C. State, one to Duke and then to Notre Dame before another huge gallery in Chicago. But Tuesday night of this week they bounced back to avenge the loss to State, and they are hopeful of doing the same to Maryland.

The redoubtable Pete Brennan will be the tall lad on whose shoulders much of the burden will rest. Brennan shared the evening's top scoring honors with Lee Shaffer in the other Maryland game, each getting 17 points. Against State this week Brennan, hottest All-America candidate on the Tar Heel team, rose to really peak heights with a 32-point output.

Sophs Advance

The Terps, remembering sophomore Shaffer, along with Brennan will be facing two more sophomores, much improved since that other encounter. Dick Kepley and Harvey Salz were just two more ball players against the Terps the other time. Against State this week Kepley got 11 points and turned in probably his best all-around performance of the year. Salz got 17 points and was consistently on the ball while playing the entire game.

Maryland, beaten by State in triple overtime in its last collision with a Tobacco Triangle foe, comes into this area this time with an 8-3 record and challenges Duke first on Friday night before the Saturday night game here. The Tar Heels are now in second place, 9-3, behind 9-2 Duke.

Keen Interest

Maryland this season has a big team. It's 6-9 Al Bunge topped the scoring in the teams' earlier win over the Tar Heels, counting 14 points. Charles McNeil, 6-6, scored 13 points and led in rebounds with 11.

Keen interest has been shown in the game here, both on campus and out in the state. After this last home battle, the Tar Heels have only one more game, with Duke on Feb. 28, before the ACC tournament.

Temple's Cody Is At It Again

WINSTON-SALEM, Feb. 20 — (AP)—Temple University Athletic Director Josh Cody said here last night he fears an interracial incident should the Owls' basketball team play in the National Collegiate Athletic Assn. regional tournament in Charlotte this March .

Cody, who conferred privately with Tom Scott of Davidson here last night, said his school has a large Negro and white enrollment and members of both races on the basketball team.

There is a chance of an incident, let us face it, and we at Temple are responsible for the students and the team," Cody said.

Temple defeated Wake Forest 61-49 here last night for its 18th straight victory Scott, director of the Charlotte tournament, indicated Temple would come to Charlotte.

The subject came up Monday when Cody said his sixth-ranked team would not play in the Charlotte tournament unless three Negroes on the team could live with their teammates.

Charlotte officials said then Cody had been told that players would not be separated. Chet Whelchel, chairman of the tournament committee of the Charlotte Chamber of Commerce, asserted:

'I think it's all starting out of New York. They want Temple at their National Invitation Tournament — Temple has a prize team and one of the best players in the country, a Negro boy named Guy Rodgers. They would draw very well in New York."

Scott said he told Cody there would be no segregation at the games for fans and families of players but "they will be segregated in hotels, of course."

Cody said Temple authorities would make the tournament decision but added: "Naturally, they will take my recommendation."

North Carolina long has been known as a moderate Southern state. Negroes on visiting athletic teams have participated in nearly all sports without incident.

Teams with Negro members also have participated in the Carrousel Basketball Tournament at Charlotte without incident.

McGuire Gets Award; Swim Meet Is Set

Frank McGuire has been named by the national barbers' association as one of the ten best dressed men of the year.

The Carolina basketball coach received notification by wire several days ago and now the word has leaked out. He is featured in the barbers' national publication.

He's in mighty select company too, one of those honored being Richard Nixon, vice-president of the United States.

The others: Nelson Rockefeller; Charles Revlon, president of the Revlon company; Howard Duff, actor; Gen. Lauris Norsted, NATO commander; Robert Preston, actor; Robert Sarnoff, president of NBC; Herman Wouk, novelist; and Caleb Hammond, president of the Hammond Map Company.

The annual freshman invitational swimming meet for Atlantic Coast Conference teams and others in this area, sponsored by Carolina, is scheduled in Bowman Gray Memorial Pool here next Monday night at 8 o'clock.

Carolina varsity coach Pat Earey, the meet director, anticipates a large entry, with most of the conference freshman teams and several others in the field.

A team championship is not decided, the meet being entirely for individual titles for freshmen.

SHOOT FOR 20TH STRAIGHT

Swimmers At NCS Today

Carolina's undefeated swimmers go after their 20th consecutive win in two games seasons with an invasion of N. C. State for an ACC meet with the arch-rival Wolfpack, today.

ALL-AMERICAN FISH—Carolina swimming ace Mac Mahaffy will be counted on heavily in the breaststroke when the mermen meet State in Raleigh today. Mahaffy is one of five All-Americans for coach Pat Earey's fine club.

Coach Pat Earey's Tar Heels wrapped up their 10th victory on a string this season with a 56-30 thrashing of Wake Forest in a recent meet here. The triumph stretched Carolina's ACC mark to seven straight to tie last season's winning mark.

The meet against State ends regular scheduled action for the defending loop champion Tar Heels, who will be favored in the Atlantic Coast Conference meet slated at Chapel Hill, Feb. 27-Mar. 1.

In a previous meeting with the Wolfpack, Carolina forged out a 53-32 triumph, but the losers were more stubborn than most of the Carolina victims.

Several men, among the five All-Americans, continue to pace the Tar Heels. Those who won the top honors last season are Walt Rose, Bill Roth, Mac Mahaffy, Bill Zickgraf and Tony Schiffman. Others include Brent Nash, Paul Wachendorfer, Ned Meekins, Peter Reynolds and Kelly Maness.

IN TIN CAN TOMORROW

Big 4 Track Meet Is Set

By DAVE WIBLE

With the ACC champions only a little more than a week off, Carolina's track team will take part in its final practice meet Saturday when the Tar Heels are hosts to Duke, State and Wake Forest in the Tin Can.

Originally the Tar Heels were scheduled to meet State and Wake Forest last week but the "big freeze" caused the meet to be posponed and it was decided to add Duke to the list and have a Big-four meet Saturday.

Scurlock Will Run

Carolina track coach Dale Ranson said earlier this week that middle-distance sensation Dave Scurlock will probably run here tomorrow instead of going to the National AAU championships at Madison Square Garden. Scurlock has been victorious twice on the big-meet boards while suffering one defeat which came last Saturday to Manhattan's Tom Murphy at the New York AC games.

Sime To Miss

Duke's Dave Sime, holder of seven world's record and a great success on the indoor circuit so far this season, will be at the AAU championships Saturday instead of the Tin Can. Fans will get a chance to see him at the ACC championships in Woollen Gym on March. 1.

Saturday's meet will give the Tar Heels a chance to show their stuff at peak form. Carolina miler Everett Whatley will be clocked for the first time this season. Whatley has been steadily improving this season and is expected to be a threat to outdoor champion Burr Grim of Maryland for the indoor crown.

Chest Drive Set Today

The Campus Chest launches its drive today to attain a $2,000 goal. Within the next week every student will be contacted personally by a representative of the solicitation committee.

In order to publicize the drive a jazz band will play in Lenoir Hall at meal time March 26, and the brown and gold campus chest will be there.

Joe Quigg, UNC basketball star, will explain the Campus Chest, during the half-time of tonight's basketball game. Throughout the week there will be an information booth in Y Court.

Responsibility

"Students at Carolina should feel a real sense of responsibility to the Campus Chest. It is not a question of whether to give, but rather how much to give," commented Libby McCord, chairman of the Campus Chest.

She continued, "As members of the world university community, we should realize the needs of our fellow student and, therefore, through the Campus Chest meet these needs."

One half of the money collected will be turned over to the World University Service, which is a unique "Student to student" aid program for those in other countries.

Scholarships

With 30 per cent of its budget the Campus Chest will aid in the financing of scholarships to Goettingen University in Germany.

The National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students will receive the remainder of the budget. This organization aids Negroes to go to the any US college or university whose admission policy is not exclusive.

Sorority Open House

The six sororities on campus which compose the Panhellenic Council-Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Gamma Delta, Chi Omega, Delta Delta Delta, Kappa Delta, and Pi Beta Phi—will have an open house for all fraternity and dorm men this Tuesday night from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Invitations from the open houses, which will be at the respective sorority houses, have already been sent out to all dorms and fraternities on campus.

Error

It was erroneously reported in yesterday's paper that Al Goldsmith (UP) introduced a bill to require any future National Student Association Coordinator to attend at least one NSA convention before he can be eligible for the position.

Actually Goldsmith's bill would delete this requirement from an early bill. This requirement was deleted from the Student Constitution the last time it was revised, but the Student Legislature bill had not been changed.

'Cocktail Party' Marks First T. S. Eliot Play Presented Here

Formal dress will be the order of the evening, at least for the cast of "The Cocktail Party," for the second Petite Dramatique of the year to be presented Sunday and Monday nights at 8 p. m. in Gerrard Hall.

Producer of the play and chairman of the Graham Memorial Activities Board's Petite Dramatique Committee Seamon Gottlieb announced that the public is invited for both performances, and that there will be no admission charge.

Jack Jackson, graduate dramatic art student and director of the play, said that because this is the first time that a T. S. Eliot play has been presented on the UNC campus, the play represents a distinct challenge.

Jackson announced that the play, originally scheduled for last Sunday and Monday, would be put on this week because the examination period and the beginning of spring semester caused a break in rehearsals.

The play cast will include Peter Sinclair, economics instructor, as Edward; Betty Rhodes, a junior from Kinston, as Lavinia; Russell Link, a senior from Jamaica, N. Y., as Peter; Betty Sinclair, formerly with the Montreal Repertory Company, as Celia; Sam Baker, grad student from Greensboro, as Alex; Dorothy Walters, grad student from Warrenton, as Julia and Ben Clymer of Wilmington, Del., as the "unidentified guest" at the party.

Duke Tickets

The athletic business office has announced that tickets for the Carolina-Duke basketball game at Durham Feb. 28, are available at the ticket window at Woollen Gym for $2.50.

The office has only a limited number of the tickets and will have to discontinue sales after Monday afternoon.

Evans To Lead Honor Council Discussion

Student Body President Sonny Evans will lead a panel discussion of proposed Honor Council revisions at the Baptist Student Union supper forum program Sunday night.

Also on the three member panel will be Sonny Hallford, attorney general, and Women's Honor Council representative Paddy Wall.

The panel discussion will concern both the original bill to combine the Women's and Men's Honor Councils and the more recent bill to revise the Student Council.

Following their discussion the panel will answer questions from the floor concerning the proposed changes.

Melvin Hipps, BSU program chairman, said the program had been arranged so that the students might be "better informed on the measures that will probably come before them in spring elections."

He also announced that all interested persons are invited to attend.

The panel program will be presented in the basement of the Chapel Hill Baptist Church following supper at 6 p.m.

Insurance Covers Charred Wreckage

Plans for rebuilding of the fire-destroyed Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church were being made Friday, even as the charred wreckage of the stately 35-year-old church was still smoking.

Tentative estimates of the damage caused by a midnight fire Thursday were scaled down closer to the figure of $195,000 which is covered in fire insurance on the building. The church officers met with their minister, the Rev. Vance Barron, Friday evening to consider various reconstruction possibilities.

Origin of the flames has not been determined, but Fire Chief J. S. Boone said they apparently spread from a fire in the church basement boiler room.

The church was used last night for an adult supper. The Rev. Mr. Barron said he was the last to leave and closed the building at about 9:30 p.m.

Shortly after 11:30 Chapel Hill Police Patrolmen W. F. Hester and Gene Cozart said they were driving toward downtown Chapel Hill in front of the Church when they noticed smoke. Turning into an alley beside the building they noticed flames coming from the basement window in the furnace room, and immediately turned in a fire alarm via their car radio.

Soars Through Chancel

During the succeeding 90 minutes the flames soared up from the basement through the chancel in the 550 seat church auditorium, enveloping the pipe organ and quickly destroying the newly-decorated pulpit area. Quickly the blaze leaped into the loft above the sanctuary and raced through the all wood eaves to the steeple at the front of the building.

About 1 a.m. the holocaust reached its crescendo as the 65-foot spire roared to the earth, sending hundreds of spectators and firemen scurrying for safety. Subfreezing temperatures froze thousands of gallons of water which were poured on the flames, and created a slippery situation for salvage workers around the church yard.

The main effort of the Fire Department was successfully concentrated in preventing the flames from spreadig into the two story Sunday School section at the rear of the Church. All Church records and almost all equipment was saved in this area by bucket-brigade type lines of students who carried out a major share of the rescue operation.

Presbyterians Feel Loss

Presbyterians across the state felt a stake in the loss of the Chapel Hill church, inasmuch as a $350,000 building expansion program, financed by individual contributions throughout the Synod of North Carolina, is scheduled to begin here imminently.

Of course the entire building matter was being reconsidered here now because of the total loss of the sanctuary of the church and the serious damage to the remainder of the building.

The possibility existed that the entire building might be replaced,

AFROTC Juniors Take Over Senior Offices

An Air Force ROTC Understudy Program began this week with the juniors assuming the positions of the senior officers for a two-week period.

The purpose of the program is to prepare juniors for the duties and responsibilities they will have next year as AFROTC officers.

During the next two weeks the juniors will actually take charge of the corps and carry on all of its functions, under the guidance and directions of the senior officers.

The other understudies are Robert J. Knox, executive officer; William S. Godwin, operations officer; William F. Parker, adjutant; James A. Caldwell, group inspector; Luther J. Davis Jr., information services officer;

Dan. D. Drummond, material officer; David A. Ellis, personnel officer; William S. Bailey, squadron I commander; Neil C. Mullen, squadron II commander; Bogden M. Zlotnicki, flight "A" commander;

Presbyterian Events

The Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church will hold its Sunday morning service at 11 o'clock in Carroll Hall.

The Westminster Fellowship will meet Sunday at 6 p.m. in the South dining room in Lenoir Hall. Dr. Maurice Natanson of the UNC philosophy department will speak on existentialism. Those Sunday School classes held in the church will meet at their regular time in the Hillel House, 210 W. Cameron St.

Mardi Gras Events Set

Two days of activities will be available to Mardi Gras ticket holders this year.

Graham Memorial Activities Board has planned a full schedule for Saturday afternoon and evening to help make the all campus event a complete social weekend.

For their three dollars students will be entitled to the concert and dance on Friday, Feb. 28, and to enjoy the services in Graham Memorial's basement free of charge on Saturday afternoon. This includes free music in the Rendezous room and free games in the Pool Room for students and their dates from 2-5 p.m.

During this period the ground floor of GM will be open only to couples holding Mardi Gras tickets.

Saturday night, participants in the campus Mardi Gras celebration will be able to attend a bermuda dance in Cobb basement from 8 to 12.

The weekend is open to all students. Dress for the dance Friday night will be dark suits and cocktail dresses.

Both the concert and dance will be held in the Tin Can. The concert has been scheduled from 3-5 and the dance from 8-12.

Tickets for the event are available at Graham Memorial, Kemps, Stevens-Shepard, Campus Cleaners and from Gerry Boudreau, Benny Thomas, Don Howard, Jim Menzel and Ray Briggs.

SP To Begin Nominations

The Student Party will meet Monday night at 7:30 in Carroll Hall in order to begin making nominations for the spring elections.

Student Legislators from Town Men's 1,2, Town Women's District and Dorm Men's 1, 2, 3, 4 will be nominated at this meeting.

Leon Holt, vice-chairman of the party, said, "anyone who is interested in running should certainly be there and should bring someone to speak for him."

Tar Heels Face Maryland Terps In Crucial Contest Tonight

By BILL KING

Frank McGuire and his Carolina Tar Heels have a score to settle with Bud Millikan and his Maryland Terps. The opportunity comes tonight at 8 o'clock when the Tar Heels and the Terps get together for a mighty important Atlantic Coast Conference tilt in Woollen Gym.

It was Maryland which handed the Tar Heels their first conference loss in two years up at College Park Jan. 11 and what was more humiliating was the final score, 74-61. From there the Tar Heels went on to drop ACC tests to N. C. State and Duke.

This is the season finale for the Tar Heels and it's the biggest one they've played here all year. Still in the scramble for first place in the regular season, Carolina needs this one badly in order to challenge Duke for the leadership when the Tar Heels close out their regular season in Durham next Friday. Duke and Maryland played last night.

Record

Carolina comes into this one tonight with a 9-3 conference mark and 16-5 for the season. Excluding the Duke-Maryland game last night, the Terps have an 8-3 conference mark and have won 15 while losing four for the season.

Carolina won what was perhaps their best victory of the season Tuesday when it downed N. C. State, 81-69 in Raleigh thus avenging an earlier setback at the hands of the Raleigh club. Now the Tar Heels need a win over Maryland and another over Duke to break even with the three clubs they lost to during the regular season.

This one won't be easy for the 'Heels. Maryland brings a starting lineup with five men averaging in the double figures, plus some outstanding reserve material. Charles McNeil is the top man for the Terps with a 12.2 average but Al Bunge, Nick Davis, John Nacincik and Tom Young all have averages of 10 or better and that's the Terp's starting lineup.

Powerful Counterpunch

The Tar Heels, however, have a powerful counterpunch. First of all there's the ACC's leading scorer and rebounder Pete Brennan. Then there's the third high scorer in the conference Tommy Kearns. Add to that Bobby Cunningham, a scoring threat of late and always tops on defense, steadily improving center Dick Kepley, sophomore forward star Lee Shaffer and Johnny come lately Harvey Salz and you have a "top six" that could get the revenge the Tar Heels want so badly.

Kearns, Brennan, Cunningham and reserve Roy Searcy close out their home career in this one and they'd like nothing better than to close it on a sweet note.

This one has all the earmarks of a real thriller and a capacity crowd of over 5,500 is assured. A freshman game between the Carolina Tar Babies and Wake Forest Deaclets will begin at 6 o'clock.

Special Committee Probe Is Good For Fraternities

Student government has now taken the bull by the horns in discussion of so-called "fraternity problems" by setting up an emergency committee to air fraternities at UNC. Nothing but good could come of that committee's meetings.

When The Daily Tar Heel first sounded out the need for reform in certain areas of fraternity activities, a cry of indignation swept across the campus in what appeared to be unified opposition to the encroachment upon fraternities by the judiciary of student government.

What fraternity men failed to realize at that time, however, is that neither student government nor the administration itself is out to rob the local fraternities of what privileges are rightly theirs. They simply recognized the need to control fraternity activities to thus make the organizations responsible units of the University community.

It is not a complimentary picture which student government, the administration and the state as a whole have seen in their evaluations of the biggest stories coming out of Chapel Hill during the past several years. Virtually all have involved, in one way or another, the large fraternity bloc.

We don't like to continually remind fraternities of their own evils, for doubtless these are far outweighed by contributions they have made and are continuing to make at the University of North Carolina and throughout the United States. Yet these evils should be pointed out with an eye to retaining the distinction of fraternal life.

It is, then, that purpose for which the emergency committee has been set up—not necessarily a committee that will publicize all its discussions ad findings during the next several weeks, but one which will meet in closed sessions, talk freely and frankly, and then make recommendations for presentation to University officials.

And, insofar as student government has taken it upon itself to make the study and recommendations, students are attempting to discipline themselves in an area which surely would be subject to administrative and trustee regulations had the emergency committee not been established.

In earlier periods of American history there was strong sentiment against the growing participation of the government in respect to control of the individual, his rights and property. But as time passed it became evident that certain restrictions must be handed down lest our freedoms become for us liabilities.

In no small measure these same circumstances apply to fraternity life at UNC. For without control, freedom can become a cancerous growth which ultimately destroys that which it intends to protect.

Leopold's Freedom Adds To Rehabilitation Program

The story of Nathan Leopold, who gained freedom Thursday from the state parole board in Illinois, will go down in American history as among the greatest crime stories of the century.

And in that story may lie the beginning of a criminal's rehabilitation program toward which Leopold has pledged himself to work in his sickly, diabetic life ahead. We wish him great success in his endeavors.

Convicted of the "thrill" killing —along with Richard Loeb—of a neighborhood boy in Chicago in 1924, Leopold was sentenced to 99 years and life with the judge's orders that never would he be granted a parole.

So Nathan Leopold went off to prison. For 33 long years the brilliant student devoted himself to teaching in Stateville Prison, to mastering 20 languages, to working in medical departments of the penitentiary.

He made several attempts to gain his freedom. The paroles board consistently refused him. He made a plea to the Governor of Illinois, but that, too, failed. Poet Carl Sandburg appeared in his behalf, but to no avail.

Finally, Nathan Leopold won the freedom for which he had so long pleaded. His own lawyer said Leopold was "guilty as sin" of the crime but that his time in prison has been "33 years of remorse and reformation."

Now, the freed convict has told his inmates, he will work toward a program of rehabilitation as a step toward readjustment of convicts into the society from which they have been cast. In Leopold, the campaign should have a qualified leader.

Everybody Can't Get Into Heaven

The clergy, it seems, sometimes feels itself exempt from laws which govern their laymen brethren. Take the Raleigh minister who was cited to court for displaying his 1957 license tags after the date for '58 tags had arrived.

The minister registered a complaint with the arresting officer, who had this to say:

"He said he thought it was very unfair to jump on someone for being only a day late," said the patrolman. "And he asked me under whose authority I was citing him to court."

Later, the arresting officer's supervisor received a call from the minister, who said he had purchased his '58 tags 30 days ago but had been unable to get them put on his car because garages had been so busy.

"I told him we had no alternative other than to enforce the law," the supervisor commented. 'He then asked me if my conscience didn't hurt me because I put officers out in the cold on such a job."

Well, we'll go along with the patrolman's action and with the answer he gave the minister. Even white robes don't exempt select individuals in our society from the laws which govern the remainder of us.

You'd think that a man whose job it is to set straight the conscience of others would have his own feelings about abiding by the law. After all, none of us laymen will get in heaven on an earthly license tag.

Sonnet To A Flower

Once there was a man named Flowers
Who ruled the East with his powers.
The law would start coming,
Then he'd take off running,
And no one could find him for hours.

The cops said Percy was mean,
But Percy said Percy was clean.
So they took it to court
Where the battle was short,
'Cause he wasn't so clean as it seemed.

So the moral this story tells:
Pretty flowers 'oft have bad smells.
They lead you to think,
That they really don't stink,
Despite what the odor compels.

Committees

By WHIT WHITFIELD

Scene: Graham Memorial Student Union, Roland Parker Lounge

Event: Fourth Regular Meeting of the Committee on Committees.

The Chair calls the meeting to order. The preliminaries are taken care of with due respect given to Robert's Rules. The speaker is interrupted by a member:

"Mr. Chairman, may we have a report from the committee that was set up to regulate committee operations?"

"Who is chairman of that committee?"

"I am, Mr. Chairman."

"Would you give your report to the body at this time."

"Mr. Chairman, the committee on committee regulations met in the Woodhouse Conference Room on January 4th at 2 p.m. The first item of business was the establishment of a subcommittee on the operations of the commitee that was set up to regulate committee operations. Then we proceeded to set up a rules committee to determine requirement regulations for membership on the main committee. A subcommittee was also set up in this committee to aid the chairman with the committee reports. A sub-subcommittee was set up to validate excuses of members from committee meetings. We adjourned at 5 p.m.

"Orders of the day, Mr. Chairman."

"The chair would like to say that orders of the day will be considered after all committees have submited their reports and the body has had the opportunity to vote on them. Remember that some of our most important work is done in committee."

"The chair would like to hear the report of the special committee set up to arrange a social at the next meeting. I'm sorry, I almost forgot that one."

"Mr. Chairman, the special social committee met last evening for two hours in the Tempo Room. Six subcommittees were set up; one for physical arrangements, one for procuring a combo, and four for beer. We adjourned at closing time."

"Thank you. . . ."

"Orders of the day, Mr. Chairman."

"Just a moment. The Chair vaguely remembers another committee that was set up a few weeks ago. Does anyone remember its function, or who the chairman is?"

I'm chairing that committee, Mr. Chairman. We have as our function the investigation of the disappearance of twelve committees during the past two months. I am happy to report that two committees were located. One was in Person County trying to make arrangements for a social. The other called from Kansas City. The chairman said that they were in jail; seems they got lost looking for a place to have a social. Not only that, but they're booked for public drunknesess and vagrancy."

"I move adjournment Mr. Chairman."

"Second that."

"Is there any opposition to adjournment? Seeing none, I declare this meeting adjourned."

Taxes, Credit Not Answer To Slump

By CURTIS GANS

There have ben two proposals advanced to stop the recession that is currently in progress in economic circles. Both augur ill for the future.

The first proposal, advanced by both Republicans and Democrats, has been a reduction in taxation.

When the last Atlas missile blows up in the mid-air not two minutes off of the firing pad, this possibility of tax reduction seems foolhardy.

When the current education budget is inadequate to meet the country's needs, the prospect of tax reduction should be to the minds of the sensible far off.

When the defense budget of the country in a time when the need is very great is at a level lower then that of five years ago, the very idea of a tax reduction is dangerous.

America must be prepared for the worst, which with the still unreleased Gaither Report hanging over the U. S. might exist. The U. S. is unable to pursue the job of protecting itself when the funds for this job are not at hand.

The second suggestion--easing of credit—provides a better means of giving a shot in the arm to big business and investors. However, this program will hurt the small business man.

As it, stands now, the small business man has most of his profits lying on the books and not in the bank. Any greater extension of credit will put more credit on the books.

There is currently many a small business man who must annually turn to a bank for a loan to meet the cost of the merchandise that he has purchased, simply because whatever profit he makes on the merchandise he sells is not realized. This profit lies in extended credit. This extended credit expands annually, and the small business man realize none of it.

Then when the government decides to tighten credit, the small merchant has an overstock that he can't get rid of because people have not the money to pay cash.

This dilemma is caused by the credit built economy that currently exists. This economy gives the semblance of prosperity, but puts the small business in such a predicament that someday he will become non-existent.

The economy itself is unstable since if all the merchants in the country and all industry decided one day to demand payment, the entire economy would collapse.

To open credit further would only drive the U. S. further towards an unsound economy, a dollar without value, and the abyss of poverty.

The answer to this recession must lie elsewhere. Perhaps Eisenhower might look to the record of Franklin Delano Roosevelt for a few answers that don't include raising taxes or letting out credit.

Be My Valentine

(Probable sequel to the American-Soviet agreement on cultural exchange)

I

(To Washington)

This valentine is just to tell
We may in co-existence dwell
If you will scrap the H-bomb test
And atom bases in the West.
My Tender passion I declare.
But if my courtship should be spurned
I pray that it may be returned.

II

(To Moscow)

The lily's white, the violet's blue,
The rose is red and so are you.
I your proposal keep in mind,
But don't suppose I'm color-blind.

III

(To Washington)

Though love so far seems unrequired
I hope our lives will be united.
On wings of hope these words will fly
To join the hearts of U and I,
For no good reason can I see
That parts the hearts of B and D.

IV

(To Moscow)

Your note between the lines I read,
But still await a sign, sir;
Unless you follow word with deed,
I'm not your valentine, sir.

V

(To Washington))

Good-morow, valentine, betimes,
With boundless hope I greet you:
My heart right to the summit climbs,
And there I trust I'll meet you.
Just take my word you won't repine
If you will be my valentine.

VI

(To Moscow)

In spite of all the vows you make
I see no sign of give and take;
I don't believe the love you swear
And so return your lock of hair,
Your fond attentions I decline,
You diplomatic valentine.

SAGITTARIUS in The New Republic

THE NEW REPUBLIC

That Un-Americanism!

We have just been reading the creepycrawly seven-part report of the House Un-American Activities Committee and, my, we are frightened! The House created this Boris Karloff committee years ago, and though McCarthy is dead and the Daily Worker has folded, the members must justify themselves by scaring us. (The House group just got another $305,000. The Senate put up $209,000 for its own side-show.)

Communist subversion, you will be alarmed to hear, "presents a danger to the America people equalling that of Soviet satellites and long-range missiles." Doesn't that make your flesh creep? "The Kremlin has succeeded in enlisting, at a conservative estmate, more than a million Americans into this campaign.' What campaign? Why, to modify the Immigration Act! Charman Walter heads the Un-American Commttee, and he is also the leading voice in Congress for excluding foreigners.

The courts, it appears, have been quite nasty to the committee and maybe a little bit, well, unpatriotic. Walters doesn't actually say the Supreme Court is tainted, but anybody can see it has been terribly short-sighted. A great part of the report is filled with the sorry story of cases dismissed for no other reason than that civil rights of defendants were violated.

The fourth section of the report is a kind of experience meeting. Direct evidence has been gathered by the enterprising committee: Rabbi Fineberg, Bishop Sheen and Dr. Poing all testify that Communism is bad. More than that news analyst Constantine Brown has come before the committee and testified. His global evidence is pithily summarized. Here are some Brown distillations: "Spain is extremely friendly to the US and the only country in Europe willing to risk everything in its fight against Communism." "We have performed diplomatic miracles by keeping Communist China out of the UN." "Western Europe in my opinion is indefensible."

Section 7 of the report offers as a public service, thumbnail sketches of such little known figures as Khrushchev, Bulganin, Chou En-lai and others, including Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito and Poland's Gomulka You can't fool Walter; they are all bad, bad men. Don't let the "White House" and the State Department" confuse you either about the last two by designating Poland and Yugoslavia "as potential allies." Ha, Walter knows better! He has $305,000 to back it up: "During the last few years, in fact, he (Tito) has clearly moved closer to political alinement (sic) with Moscow." (p. 62).

For a moment we thought our hero Walter had slipped by misspelling "alignment"—made himself silly, you know. But good sense promptly reasserted itself. Congressmen instinctively distrust good spellers: something sneaky, intellectual, well, unAmerican about them. Would the House, do you suppose, give $305,000 (with oly two dissents) to a man who boggled over a dropped "g," or a small matter lke a missing Constitutional safeguard? Of course not.

Senseless

A high school football star who had signed a grant in-aid with Tennessee and later had indicated he might go to Clemson is now saying that he'll go to South Carolina.

Such competition between institutions of higher learning for athletic talent is senseless, to put the most charitable light on it. Whe a boy signs a grant-in-aid, he is in effect signing a contract. If is induced to break that contract, he surely isn't being taught anything that will help him later in life.

The sooner the institutions get together to break up such practices, the better off everybody concerned will be. —The Raleigh Times.

Mira Winking Among Devils And Demons

Morehead Planetarium's presentation, "Devils, Demons and Stars," is also featuring its latest technical advance. The variable intensity of light from the star, Mira, can now be seen in the planetarium's skies.

A new projector was made in the planetarium's shop especially for showing Mira. Heretofore, Mira had been shown at a fixed intensity. The new projector now permits demonstration of Mira in its natural variable magnitude, which varies from the magnitude of the North Star to invisibility.

"Devils, Demons and Stars" deals with the characteristics of the individual stars. It is the first time in the planetarium's history that an entire program has been devoted to this topic, Manager Anthony F. Jenzano said. Past programs referred to stars as groups or constellations.

Celestial Whims

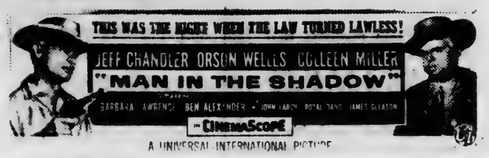
The title of the program refers to the ancient concept of the celestial bodies. Certain occurences both good and evil were atttributed to the whims of these bodies conceived as devils, demons and gods.

"In describing the characteristics of the stars, an atempt is made to dispell any superstitions and to fortify the modern concept by presentation of factual information," Jenzano said.

Some of the questions about stars will be answered such as whether a star is larger because it appears brighter and whether stars move.

Stars Colors

Also to be discussed are why stars vary in color, why do stars can be seen with the naked eye.



The importance of the sun as another star will also be discussed.

The present program will run continuously through March 10. Programs begin each week day at 8:30 p. m.; on Saturdays at 11 a.m., 3p. m. and 8:30 p. m. and on Sundays, at 3 p. m., 4 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

since a three-stage program had been planned to enlarge the existing facilities to meet the needs of the growing congregation.

Temporary Facilities

Meanwhile temporary worship facilities for the congregation of 500 and the over 1,000 Presbyterian students at the University are to be provided in University buildings. The Rev. Mr. Barron said that Sunday services would be held at 11 a.m. in Carroll Hall, with Sunday School in the Hillel House for classes that have been meeting in the church itself.

Final drawings for the projected church expansion project were to be received from the architect and bids on the work sought within a week. This was to include a new wing for a student center, and a complete renovation with additions to the Sunday School area. Expected cost was $350,000.

A Synod-wide campaign for this and other college campus projects is being carried on now by the Campus Christian Life Committee. The local congregation has contributed almost $110,000 toward the construction.

Faulty Steeple

The flames brought to nought an $8,000 job of exterior renovations to the church. Nearly complete were extensive repairs to the eaves, roof, and front porch. It was discovered recently that the steeple was in a faulty condition structurally, and so the church bell had not been rung in the last few weeks.

Thursday's fire followed by exactly one week another Orange County blaze which caused an estimated quarter million dollars damage—the latter being the one that leveled the Central High School for Negroes in Hillsboro last Friday morning. Exactly five weeks previously to last night the major fires of an even dozen arson attempts began on the University campus with the $50,000 Swain Hall blaze and several smaller fires.

Four Seniors In Last Home Game Tonight

Tonight in Woollen Gym four seniors will be making their final home appearance for the Carolina Tar Heels. The past four years have been good to Roy Searcy, Tommy Kearns, Bobby Cunningham and Pete Brennan. Woollen is nothing to brag about and the boys have seen better gyms in their collegiate career but undoubtedly each will carry away many fond memories of "the box" when they leave the court tonight.

All four were members of the team which won the national championship last season. Their history-making exploits of a season ago were probably the highlights of their career. And despite the inadequacies of Woollen Gym, the boys know that for the past two years at least, they've gotten the warmest reception they'll ever get right there in Woollen.

Brennan, Kearns and Cunningham matriculated South and they found a home away from home at Carolina. Searcy, a Draper native, has always been right at home here. Certinly then this will be a night of memories for the boys. Woollen Gym might not be the greatest in the land, but it's been home to four great guys and the only recollections they'll ever have of the Carolina gym will be good ones.

Maryland Starters All In Double Figures

Maryland will bring into the game a terrific aggregate of well-rounded hardwood talent. With each of its starting lineup averaging in the double figures, the Terps should be just as tough as they were when they beat Carolina, 74-61 at College Park on Jan. 11.

The main hope for the Tar Heels is that they'll be better. The game at College Park was a miserable one for the McGuiremen. That was probably their worst game of the season and it actually started them on a downward trend which they have just recently recovered.

Carolina is playing its best basketball now and just in time. A win tonight should complete the mental lift they'll need when they go to the ACC tourney in Raleigh, March 6, 7 and 8.

At this writing the outcome of the Duke-Maryland game last night is not known—and it really doesn't matter. Regardless, the Tar Heels need this one badly; even more so if the Blue Devils won. First place for the regular season could easily be riding on the Carolina-Duke game next Friday in Durham.

Lot's Riding On Carolina's Sportsmanship

The Tar Heels and the Terps will be in the spotlight tonight, but they're not the only ones. The Carolina student body will be very much in the center of attraction.

The recent airing of poor sportsmanship by coaches, officials and writers in the Atlantic Coast Conference has made conduct a testy subject. Tonight, many of those who have said so much about it will be in Woollen Gym and they'll be viewing the action of the Carolina students with more than passive interest.

So far, the attacks on Carolina have been of the milder variety. We are not looked upon as poor sports as strongly as some of the other schools but we are not exempt from surveillance; we still have to prove ourselves.

This is the last home game of the season. Let's make it a point to close out the year here on a good note. Let's forget the treatment we have received at other schools and prove that, win or lose, we can act gracefully. It's completely in the hands of the students!!

Big Four Tracksters In Meet Here Today

By DAVE WIBLE

The finest track and field athletics in the state will be showing their stuff this afternoon when the Carolina track team plays host to Duke, State and Wake Forest beginning at 2 o'clock in the Tin Can.

Carolina track coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton expect many fine performances to result from the practice meet which is designed to give the athletics their last stab at outside competition before the upcomingACC championships which are only a week off.

Carolina's Dave Scurlock will be running his speciality the 880 at approximately 4:25. Coach Ranson said that there is a chance that he will run in several other events, but it depends "on the weather".

"Right now our primary concern for Dave is the 880," Ranson stated. Asked if Scurlock might go after a record, Ranson would only say, "When Dave gets on the boards, he always does real well."

Wayne Bishop, outstanding Tar Heel distance man, will not compete today. After his bad knee forced him out of a race last week, Ranson has decided to save him for the championships.

Time Of Events

2:00—Pole Vault, shot, broad jump; 2:45—High and Low Hurdles; 3:10—60-yard dash; 3:40—High jump, 2-mile relay; 3:50—mile; 4:00—330-yard dash; 4:05—600-yard dash; 4:15—2-mile; 4:-125—600-yard run; 4:35—mile relay.

Freshman Baseball

Freshman baseball coach Pat Earey has announced that there will be a meeting of all freshman baseball candidates Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Tin Can.

Giles Gaca Returns As Monogram Proxy

President Giles Gaca was returned to office for the spring semester by vote of the club members at the last meeting of the Monogram Club.

Also reelected were Vice-President Buddy Payne, Secretary Dave Wall, and Treasurer Don Kemper.

Track ace Dave Scurlock was elected as the Monogram Club representative to the Carolina Athletic Association.

Ken Hoke was returned to his position as Social Chairman by acclamation.

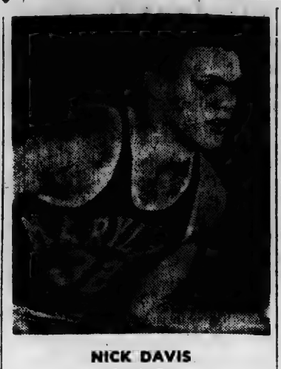
Frosh Play Deaclets In Prelim Tonight

Tar Babies Hold 2-1 Advantage

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Tonight marks round four of the Carolina-Wake Forest freshman basketball feud when the Tar Babies meet the Baby Deacons in Woollen Gym at 6:00 in a prelim for the big varsity scrap between Maryland and Carolina.

The last time the two clubs met, in Winston-Salem, the Deacs walked off with a 90-63 win over their archrivals, marking the first Baby Deacs victory over the Tar Babies. Carolina swept the other two contests, 76-72 and 72-52.



Wednesday night the Tar Babies soundly whipped the Pfeiffer Junior Varsity 104-56, hitting the century mark for the second time of the season. Their only other 100 point performance was also against Pfeiffer, in Chapel Hill, when they routed the Christians 101-41.

Lou Brown had his hottest night yet against Pfeiffer as he whipped the cords for 40 points. Hugh Donahue followed with 30.

Carolina will have to keep one eye on the big pivot men, Bill Fennell, Norm Snead, and Jerry Steele, and another on the slick little guards, Al Hart and Dave Adkins. It was Hart who led to the downfall of the Tar Babies in Winston, as he pumped in 28 big points in addition to starting most of the fast breaks used by the Deacs.

After running up a winning streak of eight straight games early in the season, the Tar Babies went into the proverbial nosedive. They have managed to salvage only two of their last five outings. Carolina has only a 2-7 record against Big Four competition, while their slate reads 8-0 against outside foes.

The probable team to take the floor for the opening tipoff is Donahue at center, Brown and Bill Hart at guards, and Billy Dunlap and Tam Shuford at forwards.

Swimmers Take Victory Over State, 47-39

The undefeated swimmers made it number 21 last night when they defeated the State College team, 47-39. This was the mermen's last dual meet of the season, and it cinched the ACC title for Coach Pat Earey's boys.

The divers Ned Meekins and Dick Cashwell turned in their best performances of the season. Senior Bill Roth was a standout in his specialty, the 50 freestyle. High point scorer of the meet was Dick Fadgen of State.

The ACC Championships will be held here on Feb. 27, 28, and March 1.

THE SUMMARY

Carolina Wrestlers Meet With Duke Grapplers Today

Maybe it's witchcraft, or sheer power. But Carolina's wrestlers haven't beaten Duke's Blue Devils since 1947, a feature the Tar Heels will atempt Saturday (Feb. 22) in a 3 p.m. match at Woollen Gym here.

It's the final test on the schedule for Coach Sam Barnes' up and down musclemen before the Atlantic Coast Conference mat show March 7-8 at the University of Maryland.

Carolina is grim and determined in preparations for the Blue Devils. The team wants to end the long Duke skein and prove themselves after a 30-0 white washing at the hands of VPI in a recent meet. The Tar Heels own an even 4-4 record for the season, but have won only one loop test over N. C. State.

Barnes is counting on three top performers to carry the weight, Perrin Henderson of Charlotte, Atkinson of Asheville and J. W. Elborn of Boone.

Collectomania—

Don't ever tell them we said so, but collectors are a queer set of fish.

There's a certain madness that one breathes in with the dust of old books that is out of this world. The feel of old bindings, the glitter of worn gold letters, the knowledge that one holds in one's hand the very book that the author himself may have casually lifted from a pile at the binder's—these odd things intoxicate like wine.

Collector's shelves reflect a variety of tastes, but wherever you go, the chaps who have found the joy of owning the very best copy of the books in their field form a sturdy and loyal brotherhood.

Maybe you're the stuff collectors are made of. If so, you have many a happy day ahead of you. Come over and spend a leisurely half hour in our old book corner. Better men than you have discovered a rich personal satisfaction in just such a spot.

'The Cocktail Party' Opens Tonight In Gerrard Hall For Two-Day Run

"The Cocktail Party" by T. S. Eliot, one of the most influential poets of the 20th century, will be presented tonight and tomorrow night in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m.

All the cast has had previous dramatic experience, and many have appeared in Playmaker and Petite Dramatique productions on this campus.

Jackson in his announcement added that he believed that T. S. Eliot was perhaps the most influential poet of the 20th century.

He felt, however, that Eliot, probably largely due to his background, was a snob. This is not to say that he was not cognizant of vulgarity, but, according to Jackson, Eliot was always seeking refinement.

Jackson went on to say, "This innate and cultivated snobbery has always tended to lessen Eliot's impact as a philosophical writer, both poet and playwright, for it is a common fault in us to seek in our lives a credo for the majority—the mass."

Concern Over Struggle

Jackson went on to explain that "Eliot, for all his intellectualism is deeply concerned with the struggle of the human personality to reach some kind of spiritual fulfillment. We defy anyone to see "The Cocktail Party" and not feel a certain sympathy and understanding for at least one of the protagonists."

In explaining Eliot's meaning in the play Jackson said, "He is for all his faith a pessimist. The most we can hope for are 'fragments to shore against our ruins.' The clue to salvation and the solution of our problems is to be found in absolute honesty."

Seamon Gottlieb, producer of the play, announced that the public is invited and that there is no admission charge.

The play is sponsored by Graham Memorial Activities Board's Petite Dramatique Committee.

Senator Spencer Bell To Speak Here Monday

The possibility of sweeping changes in the North Carolina judiciary system will be discussed by State Senator Spencer Bell at a meeting here Monday night.

The program, a joint meeting of the Law School Association and the Chapel Hill chapter of the League of Women Voters, will begin at 8 p.m. in the court room of Manning Hall.

The senator from Charlotte is an attorney and is chairman of the N. C. Bar Association Committee on Improving and Expediting the Administration of Justice in North Carolina.

He will discuss the work of that committee in his talk.

Senator Bell has been active also in the legislative movement to reapportion representative voting districts in North Carolina.

A reception is to follow Bell's speech, and both functions will be open to the public.

Herbert Toms Jr. of Shelby is in charge of arrangements for the Law School Association's part of the program. Chairman of the League of Women Voters' participation is Mrs. R. H. Wettach.

New Union Discussed

The pressing need for a new student union at UNC was pointed out to the Board of Higher Education Friday as administrative officials met with the board in its biennial visit to the campus.

Chancellor William B. Aycock said the board looked with "manifest interest" upon the proposed student union building for which the University will seek funds in the next biennium. The structure is expected to cost over $1 million.

Problems Aired

Meeting with the board for about two hours of discussion Friday, the administration also cited needs of the library and aired other problems and projects confronting the University, Aycock said.

Noteworthy among these were the "importance of the balanced program of the University in the sense of strong undergraduate school, graduate school and professional schools," Aycock said, along with salaries and research at the University.

"They showed a great interest in the graduate work and wanted to know a great deal about it," the Chancellor continued.

Importance

Concerning the proposed student union, Aycock said Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver "made a presentation to show its importance in an educational system, not just something of luxury, but of vital importance to the University."

He said the administration pointed out to the board its intentions "to push for a new student union" in the next biennium, 1959-61, as a key project to be implemented during that period.

The visit here was one of three to the Consolidated University by the Board of Higher Education on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Visits were made at State College in Raleigh and Woman's College in Greensboro before the meeting here.

Of even greater significance next week will be a meeting of the Board of Trustees in Greensboro, slated for a session Monday.

Several Positions Are Open On Carolina Handbook Staff

Don Herring, chairman of the YMCA Publications Board, announced Friday that plans are being made now toward the publication of the 1958-1959 Carolina Handbook—orientation guide for new students.

An extensive evaluation program is being carried out by the Board with the help of administration officials. The report of the Board should be completed by March 3.

Herring asked that all students interested in working on the Handbook fill out applications available in the YMCA office.

Positions of editor, business manager, section editors, and office staff are open. All applications should be in by March 3.

Interviews will be conducted with those interested in being editor or business manager beginning March 5.

The Handbook is published annually by the YMCA in cooperation with the Student Government.

Note Of Thanks

Fire Chief J. S. Boone has issued a note of thanks to the Carolina students who aided the Chapel Hill Fire Department in salvage operations during Thursday night's Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church blaze.

Large groups of students helped firemen remove furniture, fixtures and valuable church records from the flaming structure. One unidentified student was slightly injured when struck on the shoulder by a piece of falling debris.

Campus Chest Fund To Aid Nessfeness

The Campus Chest theme of this year "Help Them to Help Themselves" will certainly apply to "Nessfeness," one of the three agencies which the raised money will go toward helping.

"Nessfeness," abbreviation for the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, is geared to bring together qualified student and educational opportunities. However, it is a service and not a social action program.

It accomplishes this purpose by attempting to seek out gifted individuals.

The organization was established in 1947 for the purpose of broadening and increasing opportunities for qualified Negro students who are accepted by universities whose admission policy is not exclusive.

Out of the organization has grown the Community Talent Search, which assists local communities in discovering their hidden talents, human resources or their undiscovered gifted youth from all economically and culturally deprived groups, regardless of race, creed, or sex.

"Nessfeness" began after research revealed how few negroes really had an opportunity for college education. It was also discovered that many of the Northern colleges welcomed the application of qualified Negros. Since these discoveries, "Nessfeness" has helped to enroll 2,800 Negro students in over 280 different colleges with over $800,000 worth of scholarships aid from all sources.

The 20 per cent of the Campus Chest goal that will go to this organization will be used not only to seek out gifted individuals but also to offer supplementary help to those who have already been awarded scholarships by colleges but in insufficient amounts. The agency is almost totally dependent on grants from foundations and allocations from college Campus Chest drives.

Air Force Team Coming Here To Counsel Seniors

Capt. Wister B. Traynham Jr., commander of Air Force recruiting activities in eastern North Carolina, will head a special team of Air Force personnel visiting the UNC campus Tuesday and Wednesday.

Members of the team will be available to counsel seniors on the advantages and opportunities offered by the Aviation Cadet Pilot and Navigator Programs.

Rev. Gordon T. Charlton Jr., former missionary in Alaska, will deliver the Lenten Preaching mission "Intercontinental Faith Missiles" sponsored by the Episcopal Student Congregation.

The series of sermons begins with "Blueprints for ICFM" at 11 a.m. today, and will be followed by "Launching the Episcopal Missile" tonight at 7:30.

Tomorrow night at 7:30 the topic will be "Blasting the Barriers."

The final event of the week will be on Tuesday night at 7:30, with "Orbits for the Individual."

All sermons will be given at the Chapel of the Cross, and refreshments will be served after the talks at the parish house.

Interested students and townspeople have been invited to attend.

Tar Heels Hold 10-3 ACC Record

By BILL KING

Pete Brennan swung a wicked hatchet and his Carolina teammates celebrated George Washington's birthday by chopping down the Maryland Terps, 66-59 before 5,500 screaming fans in Woollen Gym last night.

The senior forward from Brooklyn hit 15 for 20 shots from the free throw line and wound up the night with a total of 29 points to lead the way making Maryland's trek along Tobacco Road a most unprofitable one. The Terps lost to Duke Friday night.

It was a great home finale for four Carolina seniors who closed out their Woollen Gym career. Brennan, Tommy Kearns Bobby Cunningham and Roy Searcy all finished their cage career in Chapel Hill.

It was no pushover for the Tar Heels, they had to battle the tall, hustling club from College Park right down to the proverbial wire. It was Brennan's nine straight points over a four and a half minute period that gave Carolina a lead with which to work, but the Terps fought back.

The Tar Heels held a 27-25 lead at halftime and came back in the second half to run that lead to 33-28. But the fighting Terps came back to tie it at 35-35 and go ahead 38-36 with exactly 14:00 remaining.

Brennan Gets Hot

That was when the handsome All-American candidate hit his streak. Brennan hit two field goals and four charity tosses before Maryland could get another basket and the Tar Heels led 43-38 with 11:26 to go.

Carolina held a sizable lead until John Nacincik hit two free throws to tie it again, 51-51 with a little over five minutes to play. Cunningham dropped in a couple of free throws to send Carolina ahead again but Nacincik's jumper tied it at 53 all at the 4:51 point.

Sophomore Lee Shaffer, who proved valuable in the clutches, then hit a follow shot but Maryland's Julian Weingarten countered with a jump at 4:21. Brennan did it again with 4:04 left to make it 57-55 and Shaffer's tap moments later ran the point spread to four.

Harvey Salz, who played another great game, then drove in for a basket to make it 61-55. Salz stole the throw in, passed to Cunningham who was fouled. Bobby hit two free throws, then turned right around and stole another throw in, passed to Brennan and Nacincik fouled out as he tried to stop Pete's shot.

Brennan dropped in two from the line and Carolina had an insuperable lead of 65-55. From there out the two clubs battled on almost even terms, Maryland finally closing the gap to seven points.

Half-Game Behind Duke

It was Carolina's 10th conference win against three losses. The Tar Heels now trail Duke (10-2) by a half game with only the game in Durham left to play. The Tar Heels are 17-5 for the season. The loss made the Terps 8-5 in the ACC and 14-6 overall.

Election Of Mardi Gras Royalty Set

Elections for the king and queen of Carolina's Mardi Gras Weekend will be held in Y Court this Thursday.

Mardi Gras Vice Chairman Jim Menzel said that the election will be held under the same conditions as a general campus election, except that there will be only one polling place. Each student will have one vote and their identification cards will be stamped.

Candidtaes will represent all dorms, fraternities and sororities. Menzel asked that groups that have not yet turned in the names of their candidates do so as soon as possible. The names should be turned in to either Menzel or Gerry Boudreau at the Delta Upsilon House, telephone 9-1301.

Nominations for the title of King and Queen from each dorm and greek group should be a couple who are going to the dance together, Menzel said.

Candidates will represent all Monday night about having their pictures taken.

The winners will be crowned at the dance Friday night.

Tickets for the Mardi Gras are available at GM's Information Office, Kemp's Stephens-Sheperd, Campus Cleaners and from Gerry Boudreau, Jim Menzel, Jim Vance, Benny Thomas, Ray Briggs, Don Howard, and other members of the Mardi Gras committee.

The tickets cost three dollars and include the concert and dance Friday, special activities in Graham Memorial Saturday afternoon and a Bermuda dance in Cobb Basement Saturday night.

SONNY HALLFORD
Symposium Student Chairman

William Geer and Sonny Hallford are guiding the destinies of the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs as faculty and student chairman respectively.

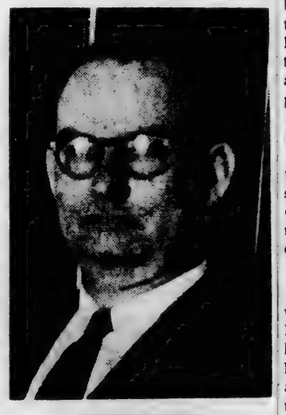
Geer is a familiar figure on campus, being employed in the Social Science Department. He did his academic research here in Chapel Hill and at Emory. The Citadel and Columbia and has taught at Furman, George Washington and the United States Military Academy.

He has published "The Governments of the Major Foreign Powers" and in collaboration wtih Herman Beukema wrote "Contemporary Foreign Government." He was awarded a Tanner Memorial Prize for "excellence in inspirational teaching of undergraduates" in the year 1956.

Hallford too has proved himself worthy of the position he now enjoys. His membership is numbered in the Order of the Old Well, Order of the Grail, Order of the Golden Fleece and the IDC Honorary.

Attorney General

He is currently serving as Attorney General of the Student Body, on the Board of Directors of Graham Memorial and is a past president of the Interdormitory Council, chairman of the Student Party, and floor leader and parliamentarian of the Student Legislature. He is a senior from Rocky Mount and an applicant for the Law School.



Geer in a prepared statement for The Daily Tar Heel said, the program for the 1958 Symposium is timely and important. Various contributors to the program will attempt to measure the Dimensions of Survival from their respective viewpoints with respect to scientific, political, educational and ethical problems.

"In the past, the Symposium has directed its attention largely to problems of the Southern United States. This year, the South will not be neglected, but its problems will be discussed in universal rather than in strictly regional terms."

Student Interest

Hallford stressed student interest as the key to a good Symposium.

Legislature Should Look At Editor Libel Proposal

Several days ago we cited the need within student government to handle alleged libel cases involving the editor of The Daily Tar Heel and individuals in the campus community subjected to reckless accusation not based on fact.

We hope, in all sincerity, that our suggestions did not fall on deaf ears — despite certain fallacies which existed in the proposals. For basically the idea is a good one, and should be implemented for the protection of individuals on the campus.

There currently is some question as to whether student courts, as suggested in the initial proposal, possess the power to levy a monetary fine against any student at the University who in some way violates laws of the student courts. It is doubtful that this power would be sanctioned by the State of North Carolina.

However, student courts do have other means to punish those among us who refuse to abide by rules and regulations operative within our judicial system. These include reprimand, probation and suspension depending on seriousness of the violation.

In view of the student court system, the question arises: would not libel, if proved in student court trials, be a violation of some law currently written into or implied by judicial provisions? Would not an editor who has libeled an individual be in violation of a law over which student courts currently have jurisdiction?

If not, he certainly should be. For to make false accusations about a person, to bring about defamation of character or reputation is, in our mind, a breach of responsible student behavior just as are numerous other violations falling under the courts' jurisdiction.

However, if no such threat of a trial in student courts looms over the editorship, the legislature should take all proposals for such power into consideration and come up with a new court or revision of an old one so as to include jurisdiction in cases of libel.

Recently several proposals have come to mind. An individual who feels he has been libeled could take his case to court, where a verdict of guilty against the editor could result in his probation in the post which he holds.

Upon a second violation, involving the same editor, when facts presented in court show he has again libeled an individual within the campus community, a verdict of guilty could bring with it the automatic suspension of the editor from the newspaper post.

Such action would leave the editor's chair vacant. A recall election then could be held in which the deposed editor could be a candidate for reinstatement in the post, dependent upon the sentiments of the student body. Or perhaps he should not be allowed to be a candidate.

This is only fair if we are to conduct our judicial system fairly in all areas of student life. An editor who libels an individual is doubtless as guilty of a violation of responsible behavior as the student who cheats on an examination. Yet the courts have overlooked the former while they have enforced the latter.

Furthermore, the student who now is found guilty by a student court is ineligible to serve in any extra-curricular phase of student government, or even other areas of campus life, due to his violation of the laws. Admitting that libel is a violation of law, an editor is under these circumstances exempt from the punishment handed his fellows.

It would indeed be a liberal judgment, in view of implications of guilty verdicts now rendered by the courts, if an editor were put only on probation after libeling a member of the university community. For under other circumstances he would be expelled from his office entirely.

We point these factors out in view of North Carolina law which protects a person under 21 years of age from direct suit in cases of libel. It is true that when a minor editor libels an individual, state courts exist through which suit could be brought. But those suits would be directed at the editor's next friend, of the Publications Board, or the administration, and not the editor.

This, we believe, is a major fallacy in our student court system. For no other person, or no aggregate of persons, should be held responsible in a civil court for the malicious whims of a 20-year-old who sometimes is inclined to criticize more severely and in such a manner than state law permits.

Put yourself in the position of the individual who is subjected to malicious attack by The Daily Tar Heel. Would you desire the recourse to protect yourself from defamation of character, or should the editor be permitted to continually injure those who bring his whims to fore?

Could Students Help Firemen?

The recent rash of costly fires in Chapel Hill has led one University of North Carolina student to make this suggestion:

Why doesn't someone initiate a program of training to instruct a small group of college students in the methods of fire-fighting. This way a great potential could be utilized.

Currently, hundreds of students stand idly by every time a fire breaks out on or near the campus. They represent a potential fire-fighting team that could serve immeasurably in protection of University and private property in Chapel Hill.

With no reflection on the Chapel Hill fire department, very real threats do exist for which a larger and better-trained force should be prepared to serve in time of emergency. That emergency may never come, but we should at all times be prepared for it.

Could a Civil Defense organization train students who are interested in helping in time of tragedies? Certainly, such instruction would not be wasted since these same students would be available for emergencies in their own towns once they leave school.

It at least is worth some consideration.

Frank Sinatra, Doris Day Hit With 2 Records

Columbia Records has recently released two, two-record sets that bear consideration by every buyer. One of these, a collection of old masters, is called "The Frank Sinatra Story," and the other is a Doris Day collection entitled "Hooray For Hollywood" and features the best musical efforts of the films in the past twenty years.

The Sinatra record is an important document both historically and musically. It traces the Sinatra career from his first days with Harry James through his last Columbia recording session. Of course a good deal has been omitted, due to inter-label hostilities, such as the great work he did for Tommy Dorsey on the Victor label, and his work for the Capitol label in the nineteen fifties. Nevertheless, the set has many merits and should be heard.

The first number on the set, a recording of the Harry James theme "Ciribiribin," with the James orchestra, is fascinating. It takes at least three close listenings to recognize the singer as Sinatra, because the vocal is done in the style Ray Eberle made famous with the Glenn Miller band. Two songs later the Voice is more recognizable, and by the end of the record any plumber could tell you to whom he is listening. High points on the disk are the long, beautiful, "Soliloquy" from Carousel and the nostalgic "Castle Rock," with an exciting if a little exhibitionistic solo by Mr. James.

Doris Day, whom I have always regarded as a Hollywoodish singer with a superficial manner of delivery, finally shows her potential on the excellent "Hooray For Hollywood." The purpose of the album was to combat the plethora of recordings of great songs from Broadway shows with an album of great songs from motion pictures. The songs are great, the arranging is unpretentious and swinging ,and Miss Day is delightful.

It's really amazing how many good songs the movies have produced. Among the selections on the disk are such standards as "In the Still of the Night," "I've Got My Love to Keep Me Warm," "A Foggy Day," and "The Way You Look Tonight." Perhaps the most delightful song on the album is the wonderful "It Might As Well Be Spring," from 1935's State Fair. Miss Day's rendition is at once sad, swinging, and very musical—an achievement some of our so-called "jazz singers" are not always able to attain.

It is a real compliment to the Columbia artist and repertoire department that two so excellent recordings should be released. It is a terribly bad break for this great company that the amazingly talented George Avakian has chosen to depart, but as long as disks of the quality of these two are released we can continue to count on Columbia records for fine jazz and pop music.

VIEW FROM THE HILL

The Case For Delayed Rushing

When the emergency committee on fraternities looks into fraternity problems, at least two problems should come to light.

The first change in the current fraternity system should come in the field of rushing.

Delayed rush would be the best thing that has happened to the campus in a long time.

Every year now about a month after school starts, and a good deal less time than it takes for a freshman to get settled, fraternity rushing begins.

Not only do boys go home disheartened because they were balled for some reason or another, but the fraternities lose in getting a person about whom they know too little.

Fraternities lose in other respects because they sometimes reject a man they later would have wanted, and with rejection a certain amount of ill feeling is created. Moreover, in losing this person, the fraternity will try to fill its roster, and the avenue for bringing the student into the fraternity will be closed.

For the student on entering the fraternity, the present system is bad, since at the beginning of a student's first semester the student has no idea of the responsibilities that are his as a college student. Furthermore ,he probably at that time has only a vague idea of what fraternity life is like or whether he actually likes any of the fraternity's members. No amount of booklets, information sheets, or short meetings within the space of a week can tell him.

What is necessary is a postponement of rushing until the middle of the spring semester and perhaps an elimination of any "silent" period, except after rushing has been completed and prior to pledging.

This probably would tend to make rushing informal throughout the year with a set period for pledging, and this would be good.

The opportunity for students to know what the academic and activity load is upon them is afforded. The opportunity to get to know what fraternity life is like will be given. The opportunity for students to get to know their future brothers, and to find out whether they want to call them brothers is another good facet of the delayed informal rush system.

From the fraternity point of view, not only do they get the opportunity to see what their prospective pledges are like, but they have the opportunity of looking into the whole range of the freshman class rather than the small group that runs around in frantic circles during the present rush week.

Moreover, in the elimination of a "silent" period, both fraternity members and prospective pledges have a real chance to get to know each other and like each other, and in doing this, avoid some of the friction that is involved in pledging.

For those that are rejected, it gives a chance for the blow to come easily rather than in one great loud crash. Furthermore, it gives the rejected student a chance to make friends with fraternity members despite being rejected. Lastly, it will rule out those who in Fall might have wanted to be in a fraternity, but later find out that fraternity life isn't for them.

What is most important, it will relieve both fraternity and student of the need for a quick high pressure sale of the individual's talents or the fraternity's merits. Both fraternity and student can be shown as they are normally, without pretense.

The change to delayed rush would be a change for the better.

FROM THE SCHOLASTIC

Alfred Stephan on 'Man & his Values'

The tragedy of most of our lives is that we are afraid to recognize what we are. We only look at ourselves in oblique glances. Shallow as these fleeting inquiries are, we recognize a deep and persistent state of unrest. We are aware of a sense of unfulfillment that seems basic to our lives. We are afraid of its implications. Most men yield to the stream of circumstance and necessity that carries them onward and lets them bypass any contemplation of their nature and how it can best be fulfilled.

Yet some men refuse to be swept in the current of life without knowing "where am I going?" and "who am I?". The world doesn't like the man who starts to struggle with the questions of existence. This apparent centering on self seems antisocial. The world calls him a brooder. It tells him to adjust. This novice seeker of self plunges into his nature with the hope of satisfying his vague sense of unfulfillment. The majority of these seekers of self lose their dedication when the ultimate answer to existence begins to take vague form in their minds — the answer doesn't fit their conception of earthly happiness. It seems too austere, too incompatible with their easy existence . . . "and the young man went away sad for he had great possessions."

Yes, the young men leave the way and go back to their possessions, to the world. They almost saw themselves but they were afraid so they ran to the world; the world which tells them it can give them happiness, the world which tells them that everyone was meant to be happy and that the only reason they feel unfulfilled is that they lacked certain obtainables — wealth, position, prestige, the pride of doing "nice" things. The world tells them that when they once obtained these then they will be content; that the restless drives and desire within them will be satisfied.

Most people, once they commit themselves to seeking these obtainables, ask no more questions as to the "why" of existence. They plunge themselves into the work world. "I must work. I must work very hard for these goals." Work becomes an avenue to the highest good. Work then is the virtue of existence. The World, "the totality of reality," in this insecure and muddled thinking is limited to the work world and its ends. The worker attempts to fulfill his full human existence in the goals of the work world. He sacrifices at the altar of work. He attempts to satisfy his strange and spiritual vessel of self by satiating it with material and social goods. Man does this not so much through greed or materialism but rather through his desire to quiet that sense of unfulfillment that brings him back to the questions of who he is and what is he living for.

Work and attainment seem to him a philosophy of life, an answer to the question, "What is it all for?" Men can't face life without some reason for existing. By their very nature they must strive for some sort of fulfillment, some development. This of course requires a system of values as a center for the development. The tragedy of most men since the passing of the theocentric age is that their limited world view constricts their development to the means and ends of the work world. The master value is not spiritual but material. In their muddled logic, most men equate happiness with pleasure, and since pleasure seems to be enjoyment of material and social goods: "I must have these goods, so I must work to attain them, and if I work hard it is good because it is in the direction of why I live."

While their ultimate pleasure in life, they believe, lies in attainment of material and social goods, they seek momentary pleasure in various ways of non-recognition of self. They often seek a frantic fleeting pleasure. They have to do things — see new places, start hobbies, meet new people. And when they are tired of fleeing themselves, they try to forget self by idling the motor of their minds while they sit in a stupor before a television set, they throw down a shot, they read pulp romances, they play solitaire.

Once a man commits himself to the idea of the work world with its material and social goods as the panacea for all his human needs, he shapes and vitiates all of the basic institutions to conform with his philosophy. Education, instead of being an avenue of approach to the ultimates, a developer of wisdom, is viewed merely as a utilitarian tool or a finishing school. Marriage is not so much a dynamic union of love and souls as, in effect, a necessary social connection. A wife is reduced to the status of a social asset and a satisfier. And religion instead of being a vital communion with God becomes a badge of respectability, a weekly tranquilizer.

Most of these men die still clinging to the idea that if they could only have gotten a few more of the world's goods they would have been happy. They never recognize their true nature. They die not knowing that the fulfillment of self must "pierce the dome of the work world." They never love a man, never communicate with the spiritual world. They are men but do not participate in the uniqueness dignity of man. They never indwell in the spiritual world of the soul and wrestle with questions of "Who am I," and "Why am I living." If they had they might realize that they have a capacity for a higher order of being, they might transcend their environment and establish relations with the absolutes wherein their natures could be fulfilled. But they refuse, they are afraid to recognize the dignity of their natures.

Symposium

In a statement of his which appeared recently on the back of the official Symposium brochure he said, "we expect broad participation in these activities, (Symposium Week), by students, faculty and citizens in what we hope will be a most stimulating series of experiences."

Under the direction of Geer and Hallford, the 1958 Symposium will try and focus the interest of the citizenry on the great issue of the times—"Survival."

In doing this, the Symposium is bringing to Chapel Hill many of the outstanding minds in the fields of politics, diplomacy, finance and science, for a week of lectures and seminars. The names of the participants will be announced in the Tuesday edition of the Daily Tar Heel.

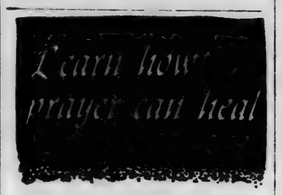
Both Geer and Hallford wished to express their collective thanks to all those people, both faculty and students, who have worked so hard to date. Special mention should also be given to President William C. Friday, Chancellor William B. Aycock, Dean James L. Godfrey, Sam Magill, James Wallace, William Mackie, William Powell, Miss Anne Queen and Dean Katherine Carmichael.

HUMANITIES LECTURE

Prof. Norman Eliason of the Department of English will deliver a Faculty Humanities lecture at 8 p.m. Tuesday in Room 106 Carroll Hall.

Collectomania—

Don't ever tell them we said so, but collectors are a queer set of fish.



There's a certain madness that one breathes in with the dust of old books that is out of this world. The feel of old bindings, the glitter of worn gold letters, the knowledge that one holds in one's hand the very book that the author himself may have casually lifted from a pile at the binder's—these odd things intoxicate like wine.

Collector's shelves reflect a variety of tastes, but wherever you go, the chaps who have found the joy of owning the very best copy of the books in their field form a sturdy and loyal brotherhood.

Maybe you're the stuff collectors are made of. If so, you have many a happy day ahead of you. Come over and spend a leisurely half hour in our old book corner. Better men than you have discovered a rich personal satisfaction in just such a spot.

WHAT TO WEAR ON THE SATELLITE

SCENE: It is almost zero hour at Los Bismuth. On stage are Capt. Carruthers, the man in charge of the launching of the satellite, and Manfred Faustus Sport, the man who will ride the satellite.

Carr: Well, Sport, this is it.

Sport: Real gas, Cap. I'm almost flying already. How do I look?

Carr: You could wear cat-gut and lemon-peels, and who would be the wiser?

Sport: Wake up, Cap. What about that crowd at Mt. Palomar with that big, spooky telescope? Got to look spiffy for them.

Carr: That shirt's a beaut. But, where's the rest of your luggage?

Sport: Who needs more? This shirt is a Van Heusen Vantage shirt. It's one of those all cotton, drip-dry numbers that never needs ironing.

Carr: What a discovery! But how will you wash it up there?

Sport: In the rain, man, in the rain.

Carr: And how will you dry it?

Sport: In the sun, man, in the sun.

Carr: Well, it's zero minus one. Sport, you'll be gone forever. (SOUND OF WHOOSHING). He's gone.

EPILOGUE: The scene is the observatory at Mt. Palomar.

Yes, in outer space, or right here on terra firma, no drip-dry discovery ranks with Van Heusen Vantage shirts. The tariff? Only $5.

Kappa Psi's Honor Pledges

The Kappa Psi Pledge class was the guest of honor at a cabin party at Hoenig's and a banquet and formal dance at the Carolina Inn last weekend. Music for the cabin party was furnished by the Hot Nuts combo, while the Five Dimensions added gaiety to the formal affari.

SAEs Entertain Dates

Scurlock Tops Own 880 Mark

By DAVE WIBLE

Running with beauty and grace, Carolina's Dave Scurlock breezed his way through the best indoor 880 of his career as he clocked a 1:51.6 at the Big-Four practice track meet held here yesterday afternoon.

The lanky junior from Greensboro has come within bolder throwing distnace ofthe World's record of 1:50.3. He has been chopping away at his time all season and still has several weeks left to top the big mark.

The entire meet was centered around Scurlock's run and the excitement gradually built up to the crack of the starting gun when he quickly jumped to the lead and left the remaining field unnoticed, watching his dust and style. He finished amid the applause of the several hundred spectators and after a short breather and a look at the clock got together with Carolina coach Dale Ranson.

"Fine race," said Ranson. "You had a good 660, but started reaching the last lap instead of speeding up your leg action. Nice going."

Though the 880 was the climax, there were many other fine performances in the meet. However, no team scores were kept in the practice affair which set the stage for the ACC championships here next Saturday.

"Judging from the times here today, and the performances of the other ACC schools during the year, I believe that this year's meet will be the best ever." Coach Ranson beamed later, "several boys have been going under ACC marks already this season and I believe that we can expect to see many new records Saturday."

Brennan was top man for the night. Salz and soph center Dickley each had 10. Kepley turned in one of his finest performances of the season. Charlie McNeil was high for the Terps with 15, followed by Nacincik who had 12.

Carolina had the lead four times but only for short periods. Kepley's hook shot at 3:17 tied it at 24 all and a Brennan free throw at 1:39 made it 25-24. A follow shot by Kepley ran it to 27-24 with 1:34 to go.

Deaclets Edge Frosh, 69-68

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Wake Forest's Baby Deacons pulled a real thriller out of the fire here last night, beating the Tar Babies 69-68 in the final seconds. The victory gained an even 2-2 split against Carolina for Wake Forest.

Gridder Lenny Beck almost clinched it for the Tar Babies as he came off the bench after Bill Hart had fouled out to pump in two field goals and two free throws to give Carolina the lead for the first time in the second half.

The lead see-sawed back and forth during the first portion of the first half, with neither team able to gain over a four-point advantage. Then Wake hit a hot streak, outscoring the Tar Babies 14-2 and running their lead to 28-17. They pulled away to 36-20 before Carolina rallied to 42-36 at intermission.

The Tar Babies came back onto the court into the second half, cut the Deac lead to four, and held it there for most of the game.

Hart Tops Deacs

Once again guard Al Hart of the Deacs was the thorn in the side of the frosh, pouring in 29 counters including 25 in the first half. Jerry Steele trailed him with 11. The Deac fast break was in evidence again last night, and Hart and his running mate, Dave Adkins were the boys who ran it.

Three Tar Babies hit in double figures-Lou Brown had 19, Hugh Donahue had 12, and Pete Longnecker had 10. The Frosh worked the ball well all night, and hit well from the outside when they couldn't get it inside. They hit a big snag when Brown and Bill Hart fouled out, and Donahue had four on his back in the closing minutes.

The loss gives the Tar Babies a 10-8 season record, with the final game of the season Friday night at Duke.

THE SCORING

Carolina—Deaton 6; Longenecker 10; Donahue 12; Dunlap 7; Hart 6; Brown 19; Beck 8.

Wake Forest—Snead 9; Fennell 4; Wilner 7; Steele 11; Hart 29; Holbrook 2; Adkins 9.

Wrestlers Beat Duke; Break Losing Streak

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Carolina's varsity wrestling team ended an eleven year famine yesterday when it defeated Duke 15-11 on the mats in Woollen Gym to give the Tar Heels their first victory over the Blue Devils since 1947.

The win over the arch rivals from Durham gave the Tar Heels a 5-4 season record and assured them of at least a .500 finish with only one more regularly scheduled meet against Wake Forest Monday night remaining on the slate.

The Tar Heel grapplers won five of the eight matches in posting their fifth victory. All the Carolina wins came via the decision route while the visitors combined two decisions and a fall to gather their eleven points.

Carolina started fast by winning the first three matches in a row. Curt Champlin, Bill Suttle, and Henry Rhyne, who filled in for the injured Perrin Henderson, did not allow the Devils to take a single point in three bouts. Duke's Ken Labone picked up his team's first win when he bested J. W. Welborn in the 147 bout.

The two most exciting bouts of the afternoon were Kenny Hoke's 5-4 win over Bill Melfert and Jack Gray's narrow 9-6 loss to Sam Menefee.

THE SUMMARY

123 — Champlin (C) decisioned Carr (7-0); 130 — Suttle (C) decisioned Davidson (5-0); 137 — Rhyne (C) decisioned Dille (3-0); 147 — Labone (D) decisioned Welborn (5-1); 157 — Hoke (C) decisioned Meffert (5-4); 167 — Menefee (D) decisioned Gray (9-6); 177 — Atkinson (C) decisioned Kemper (3-0); Heavyweight — Speer (D) pinned Hayes (2:52).

In winning the meet, the freshmen copped 7 out of the 10 events. High point honors were shared by Tar Heels Harry Bloom, Joe Kalkhurst, Vinny Simonton, and Randy Dodson.

Harry Bloom set a new UNC Freshman record in the 150 individual medley with an outstanding time of 1:32.4.

"Problems keep life interesting for a telephone engineer"

"I've taken part in all kinds of engineering projects during the five years I've been with the telephone company," says Bill Rhode, M.E., Tulane, '52. "Each project brings special problems to solve.

"Take a couple of recent jobs I did as examples. One was to plan and oversee the relocation of telephone facilities near a new drawbridge. The job included designs for attaching telephone cable to the finished bridge and for providing service to the bridgetender's office and the locks.

"The other job was completely different. I was asked to make an experimental installation of some newly developed line concentrator equipment. After selecting the test location, I engineered facilities for the remote concentrator unit, and trunk plant to the central office.

"Another thing about these jobs — they're a result of the growth of the telephone business. Not only do problems like these keep life interesting for a telephone engineer, but they mean that careers are full of opportunities to show what you can do and get ahead."

Wilmer J. Rhode is with Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company. He is one of many young men who are finding interesting and rewarding careers with the Bell Telephone Companies. Ask your placement officer for information about the careers these companies offer.

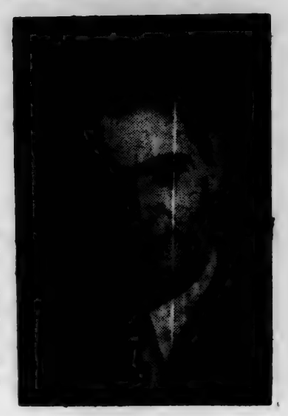
Production Of Daily Tar Heel Involves The Work Of Many



By DOUG EISELE

The Daily Tar Heel, celebrating it 65th anniversary today, is among the top college newspapers of the country, employing student help to perform a man-sized job in the world of communications.

What goes into the making of that newspare which is offered six days weekly during the regular shcool years? Who are the people and what do they do who write the thousands of words for you daily?

Basically, The Daily Tar Heel is like any daily newspaper published by private concerns or organizations anywhere in the United States. There are no restrictions on it which are not placed against other publications in the "outside" world.

Yet The Daily Tar Heel is unique in that its editor is elected, pay where it exists is small for the pobs rendered, and many manhours of free labor daily go into its making.

DOUG EISELE
Editor

These facts, however, do not handicap the purpose of the newspaper and its role in the overall development of the University. It has gained respect comparable to the independent newspaper and paretices a freedom not always found on University campuses.

Patterned after dailies, the Tar Heel has as its key employes an editor, managing editor, news editor, sports editor, business and advertising managers, a circulation and subscription manager and other persons coming under authority vested in these.

Like any other publication of its nature, the Tar Heel relies on advertisements as its chief source of income and as the determining foctor in how large each day's issue of the paper will be. Once the latter is determined, it becomes the tashk of the news department to fill the pages with copy.

The normal news release comes to the managing editor for placement in the paper. Stories picked up by Tar Heel reporters on their "beats" are written by these reporters and then passed on to the managing editor after a close look by the news editor.

It is the managing editor who writes headlines, "dummies" in the page and decides what stories should go in what places in the paper. This post is at the pinnacle of the news department.

Copy is carried from the Tar Heel offices in Graham Memorial to the shop in Carrboro wher type and ads are set in preparing the paper for its publication. Press runs are made after midnight, with a total of some 6,502 copies printed daily.

This then, it the routine followed by the Tar Heel six days a week for about 30 weeks a year. It costs you about two and one-half cents per day, while the work going into its publication is measured in terms of experience for those who contribute to it.

Primarily, the newspaper caters to students who have an interest in journalism as a livelihood once leave college. But it also attracts those in other fields of study who have the time and desire to learn what only work on a newspaper can offer.

What it can teach is largely dependent upon the individual who exposes himself to it.

After Sixty-Five Years' Publication Editorial Issues Remain Unchanged

By CHARLIE SLOAN

Editorial issues don't change much.

Before The Tar Heel was a daily, 65 years ago, editors found topics for their editorial columns that have been rehashed in edits within the memory of many undergraduates today.

Thomas Wolfe once wrote an editorial on three-man dormitory rooms, an issue that is still vital to "third men" all over the campus.

Back then the dining hall was in Swain. And what some RTVMP majors now affectionately call "Swine Hall" probably picked up its nickname in those days when a piece of bread was used like an early guided missile.

The Tar Heel didn't pass up the opportunity to comment on the conditions, and when the chow line moved to Lenoir, the editor followed his target to its new location.

The first isue of the paper appeared on February 23, 1893. The front page carried a church directory, a list of the University Magazine staff, a directory of Campus organizations, two short articles on the newspaper, and a story headed "The Legislature Commitee Visit The University."

1,300 Students

In 1919 The Tar Heel ran a blazing five columns (the full width of the page) banner announcing "Thirteen Hundred Students Register."

A few issues later signs of extra-curricular activities appeared.

"Nuricas And Fatimas Mingled With Oratory Open Dialectic Smoked," announced a single column, three line head. Nuricas and Fatimas are profitter manufacturing cigarette brands.

On the other side of the page in type of identical size, over a story of identical length, was a headline declaring "Phi Legislature Debates Legaue of Nations; Sixty-seven Men Initiated."

Using jokes for filler was common practice for a long time, and many of the funny stories are still kicking around today with only slight polishing.

In 1919, the year Wolfe was editor, Carolina's basketball game apparently didn't have the leadership it is trying to retain tdoay. A paragraph filler noted, "The passing of the Carolina basketball team is excellent'-The Washington Post. Would that we had passed Virginia and Georgetown!"

Advertising in that same year may have seemed up to date, but today it seems a little unwise. The phrasing of the advertising, appearing on every Tuesday in June, read, "Turkish cigarettes because they contain too much Turkish. They seem over-rich and heavy."

Becomes A Daily

In 1929, under the editorship of Walter Spearman, The Tar Heel became The Daily Tar Heel and continued without interruption under that logotype. Spearman is now a professor of Journalism in the UNC J-School. He is studying this year at Harvard on a Fund for Adult Education grant.

The Daily Tar Heel has fluctuated in size betwen 4, 6, and 8 columns. Today it is 8 columns high and 21 inches long. But in spite of the changes in page size, and the switch from type set by hand to type set by linotype, the paper has always tried to "Cover the Campus."

The rating of its success in this aim lies with the students who read it.

SPORTS STAFF—Presenting you with last minute coverage of the sports world are Dave Wible, assistant sports editor; Rusty Hammond and Elliott Cooper, sport staffers. (Norm Kantor Photo)

Paper Has Big Budget

The Daily Tar Heel is a business organization that handles $46,000 a year. This amount of money must be brought in through student fees and advertising to provide for the efficient operation of the newspaper.

The single, biggest part of income of the paper is from student fees, which accounts for one-half operating budget. Local and national advertising bring in neatly 45 per cent of the money needed. The rest of the income is from subscriptions and special adverstising.

The expenditures of the newspaper are divided among some five big categories and some 11 lesser ones.

The biggest chunk of the $46,000, goes for printing costs. These costs run to almost $31,500. Farther down the expense scale is the $7,100 paid all the salaried personnel of The Daily Tar Heel staff.

Wire Services

The three Associated Press wire service machines cost the paper $1,770. Engraving rental costs run to $1,775. And the fifth big expense item is the telephone and telegraph charges and postage, which takes $1,000 of The Daily Tar Heel budget.

These are the biggest items that are taken care of, but hundreds of additional dollars must take care of such things as photography, news features (Peanuts, Pogo, the crossword) and the Metro advertising service.

No Rules For Coeds Then

First UNC Coed Graduate Recalls Time When Women Wore Veils To Class

By RUTH WHITLEY

Carolina coeds. Their presence is no novelty.

But, a lady with silver hair and sparkling brown eyes relates quite interesting and amusing stories of times when things were different.

She is Alice Edward Jones, a resident of Chapel Hill. In 1900, she was the first coed to receive a degree from Carolina 20". She has amazing vitality and a zest for living which gives a ring of truth to her statement, "I came from a family of terrific energy!"

Talking with her is both an inspiration and a period of strength gaining. Her philosophy in life is a challenge, one that declares nothing impossible when desire is strong and hard work is not shunned.

Alice Jones and Marcia Latham came as the first two women to register for a degree at the University and graduated in 1900.

First Coed Graduate

"I was the first coed to graduate from Carolina only because my name began with J," said Miss Jones. "I was a lucky person and I owe that her to it."

"Boys didn't like it at all when coeds began entering the University," she said. 'They liked us personally, but resented us as members of UNC."

"When Miss Latham and I graduated, we were seated behind the faculty in a hidden spot. It never occurred to the boys or the faculty that we should be in the academic line and march in as they did at the exercises. But, when we rose to receive our degrees, they greatly showed their apreciation with loud applause."

When the legislature passed the law that women could attend the university, the law stated that they might attend for post-graduate work, which meant the junior and senior years.

Miss Jones recalls that she lived in a boarding house where the post office is now located, coeds payed not tuition and there were no rules made for them to follow since they lived off campus and were so few.

It was not until 1921 that Archer House, the first women's dormitory was built. Until that time, as the coed enrollment increased, housing them was a problem. Most places took only men for room and board.

In 1934, 35 years after the first coeds entered the University, they were allowed to enter fraternity houses for the first time—at stated hours.

"In the days when I was a coed, girls never appeared on campus without gloves and a veil," said Miss Jones. "We did remove the gloves and lift the veil to take notes in class."

Miss Jones received her Bachelor of Philosophy Degree from UNC in 1900, taught at St. Mary's Junior College in Raleigh three years and returned to UNC where she received her masters.

She was head of the Latin Departments at Winthrop College, Rock Hill, S. C. before going to the American Academy in Rome where she worked a year towards her doctorate. When World War I began, she returned to the United States, and was unable later to go back and complete her work.

Fiss Jones proudly states that she was devoted to teaching. She loved her job, and believes that teachers must love to teach in order for students to benefit.

She does not deny that she was what is known as a "stiff" teacher today. But, she recalls with satisfaction that when the girls she taught transferred to UNC, they were accused by male students of using Latin "ponies." "The boys were quite shocked to find that those girls could actually read Latin without them," she chuckled.

Graduation Gown

Mis Jones proudly states that wil be worn for the 30th time this June. It has been through quite a few exciting experiences since it was first worn in 1900.

"My great-niece and her brother wore it for graduation exercises the same day," she recalls. "There was quite a bit of confusion as we had to rush it from an 11 p.m. graduation in Sweet Briar, Va. and let the hem down for a 6 p.m. graduation at UNC.

Another dramatic event occurred when two UNC students, whose mothers had both worn the gown, felt that they each had a right to graduate in it. They both graduated the same day and both wore the gown.

Miss Jones has never been able to figure out how they did it, but the gown has a mended tear on one side as a result of that day.

Miss Jones's graduation gown is presently well preserved. When she ceases to lend it, it has been bequeathed to the UNC library.

Famous Tar Heel Editors

Following is a list of a few former Daily Tar Heel editors now distinguished in the business and journalistic capacities which they pursued after years at Carolina:

Thomas Wolfe	Famous author who ranks among the all time literary figures of this country.
Jonathan Daniels	Editor of the Raleigh News and Observer and press secretary to President Roosevelt.
Walter Spearman	Professor in the School of Journalism, now studying at Harvard University this year.
William J. Woestendiek	Editorial director of the Long Island Newsday and former Nieman Fellow at Harvard.

Some Things To Remember On Our 65th Anniversary

Today The Daily Tar Heel celebrates its 65th anniversary.

Unlike a man, or a country, or a philosophy, it is difficult to present in a single issue a vivid picture of what a newspaper has been throughout its history.

Yet by recalling those associated with The Daily Tar Heel in the past—by reviewing briefly several high points in the publication's life—it is possible to show that The Daily Tar Heel has indeed played an important role at the University.

To illustrate that role is the purpose of the numerous feature articles and columns written by former editors and men in the newspaper world which you will find in your Daily Tar Heel today. Lying behind those stories is the six-times-a-week publication which frequently the student takes for granted.

If The Daily Tar Heel has at times failed in looking at campus affairs broadly, if at times it has erred in giving you a good newspaper both objective and fair in its presentations, it nevertheless has produced top journalists who rank high in the United States today.

We are, after all ,a sizeable publication printed exclusively at the hands of the student body. Sometimes we make mistakes; often we are wrong. But the paper's contribution to the University and the converse contributions to those who work on the Daily Tar Heel will forever justify its existence on the campus.

In reading your Tar Heel today, remember the countless hours which your classmates spend—most of them without remittance — on bringing the paper to you. It often times is a thankless task which many would refuse to perform even with a salary.

We cannot, however, accurately measure the newspaper's role by a bird's eye view of the present. We point to men like Thomas Wolfe, Jonathan Daniels, Louis Kraar, Charles Kuralt, Ed Yoder, and many others to illustrate the influence of The Daily Tar Heel on those who have been associated with it.

In a word, The Daily Tar Heel is not a thing of the present. It has outlived our administrative officials of the past; it has existed throughout the years to report on the course of the University; and it will live long after today is but a memory in the history of the University.

It is not a chronological view of that history, but realization that it did and will continue to exist, that we want to point out to you today.

Crowd Is Congratulated For Good Sportsmanship

Coach Frank McGuire called Monday afternoon to express his appreciation for the fine sportsmanship displayed by the Carolina crowd at Saturday night's UNC-Maryland game.

"It gives me a great deal of personal satisfaction to congratulate the students, townspeople, trustees, faculty and friends for the fine sportsmanship they displayed Saturday night at the Maryland game in supporting our team 100 per cent, and at the same time in extending to the opposing team courtesy and hospitality as is indeed a true expression of the Carolina spirit," he said.

These people, indeed, deserve congratulations for the behavior which Coach McGuire described. And it was a courtesy extended to those off the UNC squad who played their last game on the home court to which they have brought fame in their past three years.

Pete Brennan, when talking with reporters after Saturday's game, summed up the sentiment of the Tar Heels when he said, "This place has been very good to us." And, Coach McGuire said, "most people here feel the same way Pete does."

Behavior here Saturday night, coupled with the victory which the Tar Heels scored, is truly a grand climax to the season on the home court. We hope it is indicative of what the future holds for sportsmanship at the University of North Carolina.

Like Coach McGuire said, there is little joy in winning a basketball game when going on the premise that boos and jeers of a partisan crowd are a handicap for the visiting team. If you can't win without behaving poorly, then it's better not to win at all.

"If you win ball games with poor sportsmanship, then I'd rather not be a coach," the Tar Heel coach said.

And, for our part, if you have to jeer and harass the visiting team, we'd rather not be counted among those who appear to boost the Tar Heels or any other team on to victory.

Student Nursery Has A Problem

Victory Village Day Care Center—a non-profit nursery operated for the service of married students at the University—has a problem.

Briefly, its board of directors does not have the funds to finance advertisements to tell of vacancies in the nursery open to the children of married students here. So they came to us with their problem.

The nursery, staffed by five full-time teachers, has a capacity for 62 children, ages two to six. There currently are some vacancies for those children whose parents meet requirements for using the student-operated, university - backed nursery.

For a monthly rate of $35 per child (or $30 per child for two in the same family), the nursery offers six-day-a-week service complete with the lunch time meal and a program of entertainment and instruction for all age groups.

You'll find there one teacher who majored in child psychology, and four others whose college training has equipped them to take care of your child during your working hours of the day. They have books, educational toys, playground equipment, phonograph records and other facilities for caring for your child.

Operated throughout the year except during a one-week period at Christmas, the nursery provides a needed service for the young couple going to school and financing an education while at the University. It's the student answer to erase a student problem—a means to care for children while husband or wife is earning the family income.

The nursery isn't soliciting children to meet the capacity of its facilities. It merely wants to remind students that the facilities do exist for those who want to use them. At least look into it— you may be glad you did.

About TV Ads, Rating 'Scales' & Give-Aways

By WHIT WHITFIELD

It'll never happen department:

Have you ever watched the fruits of the Madison Avenue crowd on T.V.? Take for instance some of the ads on electric shavers. They have specially designed heads, exclusive parts, microground, razor-like components that cut the hair off two millimeters below the surface of the skin, little men who work with precision accuracy pulling the hair out by the roots and a hundred other unique devices.

These miraculous machines shave the fuzz off peaches, cut into broomstraw, steel wool, and assorted "hard to cut" substances. Quite often a practical demonstration is given, after which a beautiful model brushes the cheek of the demostrator. This is the ultimate in advertisting, but pity the poor girls who are scarred for life.

On the whole, however, they are good for shaving peaches and brooms if that suits your fancy, but we suggest that you don't try it on the face.

The ultimate has been reached in another field as well. We constantly read about how a TV star owes his life to the various rating scales.

From a small cross section of people interviewed is determined approximately how many people are watching over the whole country. This is fine in theory; the question is who is consulted? We have never met anyone who has been consulted about his or her TV preferences. From this we conjecture that the rating services have devised a new and better system for determining this information, one that saves them time and money and lets telephone operators off early. They simply present the question to the IBM, Vnivac, and who knows what other kind of machines they have now, to get the desired results.

This brings to mind another similar question. Who wins in all of the huge give-away contests every year?

We usually refrain from entering the "Things", but during a weak moment we submitted a solution to several grammar school riddles along with a statement in 25 words or less concerning the product. There were thousands of prizes to be won at intervals of a week or so.

We labored hard on the short statement, writing, revising, etc., finally realizing that only so many things could be said about the product in less than 25 words.

We didn't anticipate winning the grand prize, but we did think that a small one would be compensation for our labors. We didn't even win a used sparkplug. Who won any of the prizes? No one seems to know. If these items are deductible for the company, the government might do well to keep its eyes open this year.

Bias Clauses Should Be OK'd

By CURTIS GANS

The second problem confronting the emergency fraternity committee should be discriminatory clauses in fraternity charters.

There are at least two parts to the problem. The first is whether the University should exercise any control over fraternities, excepting those on university grounds. The second question is whether discriminatory clauses can be considered valid grounds for control.

The first question is more difficult. It is the question of whether a private group should be subjected to any control other than the laws that every individual or group obey — the civil laws of the states.

The University has up to now taken the view that fraternities are made up of students, and the student's welfare is the University's business. Hence, there are such things as social rules, grade requirements, and visiting regulations.

There is indeed some question in this observer's mind that such control is justified. Fraternities are due to the simple fact that they pay their own membership, their own upkeep, and choose their own members as private organizations.

As private concerns, they as a group, or the individuals that go to comprise it, have a right to their own privacy. To interfere in that privacy is a denial of individual rights, provided those individuals possessing those rights do not infringe on the rights of other individuals.

Hence, it might be shown that not permitting a fraternity to select a student with a grade level below C, is infringing on the right of the fraternity to free selection.

To prohibit drinking is an invasion of the privacy of the individual to do whatever he wants to with his time, without the questionable benefit of supervision.

Indeed, any interference into the life of fraternities and their members, is a denial of the rights of the individual which is fundamental to democracy.

There is no question that students coming into the university tacitly agree to abide by university regulations.

On this university, prejudice due to race, creed, or religion is deemed an interference to equality of opportunity.

Hence, although the fraternity has the right to be prejudiced, it has not the right to trangess university regulations applying to all students.

In spirit bias clauses are in violation of equality of opportunity rules that obtain for all students on this campus. Thus, there is no reason that bias clauses should be allowed, since all students and all groups should have to abide by those laws that apply to all groups and students.

This will not deny the right of the individual or groups to be prejudiced, and to ball a person because of race, creed, or religion, but it does prohibit this from being the general policy.

It is hoped that through the double attack of legislation and education, prejudice will be eliminated. This however, is only wishful thinking.

"THE COCKTAIL PARTY"

Eliot Play A Failure

By ANTHONY WOLFF

A renegade herd from the Petites Dramatiques tripped roughshod and unshod over the coals of Mr. T. S. Eliot's "The Cocktail Party" on Sunday evening. To continue the metaphor, they failed this crucial test and their soles were badly burned.

The exact nature of their guilt is difficult to identify, although its degree is all to evident. If Mr. Eliot's poem is a managable play, and is susceptible to a staged production, then the Petites Dramatiques merely failed to realize the potential of its material. If, as it may be well argued, the poem does not really exist as a play—if it is really impossible to stage—then the Petites Dramatiques have compounded their crime: they have attempted the impossible and failed without glory, violating a considerable poem in the process.

As a play, Mr. Eliot's poem is almost insurmountably complex and obscure. Like "The Waste Land," it is not an organic whole, but depends upon a wealth of allusion to a wide variety of sources to carry any but its most superficial meaning.

If art is both surface and symbol, then the theatre arts demand a more substantial surface than do literature and the plastic arts. In the theatre, the images and meanings are transitory; the action progresses without reegard for the audience's inability to keep up. A play on the stage cannot be viewed as a whole; an obscure line is lost to the audience unless it is re-inforced, unless its meaning is almost immediately clear.

Mr. Eliot's difficulty with "The Cocktail Party" lies mainly in this area of surface versus symbol. The antecedents for his characters come from such a variety of more or less obscure, and sometimes unrelated myths, that they become hard to understand and accept. If "The Cocktail Party" is to be produced at all, it must be done by highly gifted and trained people; even then, most of its meaning remains available only to the close, gifted, and erudite reader.

The play can, however, be done effectively, albeit superficially. It has been well done in other places at other times. Mr. Eliot has deftly drawn a gallery of complex and interesting individuals. he has sent four synthetic and symbolic creatures in search of self-analysis salvation.

Technically and intellectually, the Petites Dramatiques were not up to the job. Only one person on the stage seemed to have even the vaguest notion of what he was about, and that was Mr. Frank Clymer, who played the ambiguous Univited Guest. His was the only characterization which could be called mature and acceptable. Clymer's main fault was one of techniyue: his stylized method was perfectly legitimate, but he succumbed too often to the temptation to over do it. He spoke much too softly, counting on underemphasis to provide effect. His pauses were too long and too frequent and too obviously pregnant; used more sparingly, they would have enhanced his performance: as it is they often slowed down the pace and made it seem pompous. All things considered, though, Clymer's performance was quite impressive—especially by comparison with the rest of the cast.

Betty Rhodes, as Lavinia, did a respectable enough job, but it left much to be desired. She is a striking and poised personality on the stage, and one might wish that there were more depth to her characterizations. This is her third appearance here and each time she has done a competent and appealing job; given a good director and a good deal of training, Miss Rhodes might well fulfill her obvious promise and become a good actress.

Russel Link, as Peter, also gave a fluent performance, but the character never developed—it was impossible to tell what he was, or how he could possibly have had any appeal for the two women with whom he was involved. The acting was good enough, but the characterization was shallow.

The only way to describe Dorothy Walter's performance as Julia is to compare her to Dodi Goodman, who has herself been aptly described as "indescribable." It was hard to tell whether Miss Walters was conscious of her acting or not, or indeed whether she was acting at all. Only at moments, very few of them consecutive, did she seem to fill the role.

As the frustrated husband, Peter Sinclair was quite inadequate. His performance was self-conscious, stiff and unreal. His anguish was unbelievable, and his moodiness an obvious pose rather than a real discomfort. His diction was monotonous and his timing was poor. Sinclair saved himself occasionally, but not often enoug.

Betty Sinclair, as his ex-mistress, also had very little to recommend Her voice was high1pitched and piercing, and entirely devoid of any real warmth. She had a penchant for the agonized grimace which was very unpleasant to watch and which could not alone convey the agony which should have been in her voice and body as well.

Sam Baker's Alex was an amusing performance, although he, too, was somewhat lacking in depth.

All in all, the performance was more than disappointing; at moments it was absolutely painful. The blame, of course, does not lie solely with the actors. There is little virtue in attempting something which one cannot hope to accomplish, and "The Cocktail Party" is several degrees too difficult for any but the most expert group to have any hope of doing well. The only outstanding thing about this production was the script with which the Petites Darmatiques strated; they did nothing to enhance it and much to detract from it.

The Petites Dramatiques has been on this campus for a year now, and it has never kept the promise which it made with its first production, "Caligula." It is long since time for GMAB to take a look at its little brain child—to see if perhaps the Petites Dramatiques might set its sights on some goal and set about reaching it, and not have such mistakes as "The Cocktail Party" again.

Former Editors Recall Chapel Hill, Note Changing Times

Issues Will Still Remain The Same-- For The College Students To Solve

By DON BISHOP

(Don Bishop was editor of The Daily Tar Heel during the school year of 1940-41. He holds a Masters Degree in Journalism from Columbia University. An employee of the National Broadcasting Company for the past 11 years, he is presently Director of Community Services for the NBC Owned Stations and NBC Spot Sales.)

If some citizen of Chapel Hill who files old copies of The Daily Tar Heel will do a little research, he will find that the editor in 1941 wrote something to the effect that the world would be a better place if college seniors were running it.

Nothing this former editor has seen in the years since 1941 has done much to sway that rather sweeping opinion.

The above comment may be interpreted as a boost for the intellect of college seniors of all eras, or as a knock for those older hands presently in command of things. Or it may just be an ambiguous statement — which is the prerogative of all Daily Tar Heel editors, active and former.

If there is any lesson for an ex-editor of The Daily Tar Heel in reading the current copies of the paper 17 years after his days of glory, it is that no issue seems really to have been settled. I thought I had everything battened down to a fare-thee-well when I was writing the editorials. But now I find that today's editors are wrestling with the same campus and world problems that my editorialists and I did.

Save yourself some work, fellows. Dig out those files of 1941 and reprint the solutions that we proposed. Or go back to another student generation—around 1920—and get Tar Heel editor Thomas Wolfe's answers. They're all the same.

The editor who will do a little cribbing from the past will learn and important, if obvious, lesson about life: that it's full of both repetition and change.

Take the broadcasting business, for example. My first job at the National Broadcasting Company was in the publicity department. A few years after I went there, and when television was gaining its full momentum, I found myself publicizing a TV chimpanzee named J. Fred Muggs. This effort included the placement of a picture article in a national magazine.

I have since moved out of publicity. But the other day I heard one of my successors talking about a forthcoming pictorial coverage of a chimpanzee that he had arranged in a monthly publication. Same story, and, if memory serves, the same magazine. But a different chimpanzee—this one named Kokomo, Jr.

One of my present assignments is to keep abreast of developments in frequency modulation radio and to help make something of it in a commercial way. I did a prodigious amount of research on FM and was sure that I had come up with some startling and original conclusions.

As the year ended, a secretary in the office who was cleaning out her files came to me with a thick packet of material.

"Maybe this will be useful to you," she said.

It was useful, indeed. It would have been even more so six months earlier. My predecessor twice removed had covered all the FM ground that I had, and then some. And he had come up with all the facts and answers—no doubt previously developed by his predecessor twice removed.

The First Editor

Served 3 Months, Went To Germany

The first editor of the "Daily Tar Heel" was not an undergraduate student, and he only stayed in office three months when he was first chosen editor.

Charles Baskerville, first editor of "The Daily Tar Heel" came to the university in 1890 as a chemistry lab assistant. He had already graduated from the University of Mississippi in 1888 and had attended the University of Virginia and Vanderbilt.

During his first year at Carolina, Baskerville was appointed Business Manager of the football team as he had been an outstanding fullback on the football team at the University of Mississippi. He was also an active member of Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity and a member of the Order of Gimghoul.

Then in 1893 the Athletic Association decided to begin publishing a weekly newspaper called the "Tar Heel." Charles Baskerville was chosen to be its first editor.

Upon accepting the responsibility, Baskerville stated that there had been "a long felt need for a separate medium for the expression of general news and college topics."

So Baskerville went to work with the aid of a managing editor, a business manager, and four associate editors, all appointed by the Athletic Association, and on February 23, 1893 the first issue of the "Tar Heel" came off the press.

However, Editor Baskerville was to leave office in three months. On April 8, 1893, Baskerville resigned his position as editor of the first "Tar Heel" in order to journey to Europe to study at the University of Berlin.

The following year he returned to Carolina and was again elected editor of the campus newspaper. He was also busy as a professor of chemistry at the same time.

He did not stay in this dual capacity long, however, for when he received an offer from the City College of New York, he left UNC to teach there.

1954-55 Tar Heel Editor Notes 'Recollections Of Chapel Hill'

By CHARLES KURALT

(Charles Kuralt was editor of The Daily Tar Heel in the school year 1954-55 and won the Aberberthy Award. In 1955 and '56 he was awarded the Ernie Pyle Award and the first place award of the North Carolina Press Association for feature writing in 1956. Presently, he is a staff writer at CBS in New York, assigned to the Douglas Edwards TV news program.)

Outside my Manhatten window, I can hear the rattle of an air hammer. New York, Mayor Jimmy Walker said, will be a wonderful town if they ever get her finished.

Come to think of it, I never heard an air hammer in Chapel Hill. They are outside the pale, I suppose, like pool rooms and liquor stores. But Chapel Hill is always changing, too. That is a subject of much head shaking among the paunchy alumni who fill Kenan Stadium on fall afternoons. What they fail to grasp is that when the University stops changing, it dies. You can never put your foot into the same river of Carolina life because it is always coursing toward the sea. And when the river becomes diverted and dammed and overgrown with algae . . . well, it will not be our Carolina any more.

But certain things can remain safely constant. The denizens of third floor Battle, I assume, still uphold tradition and defy expulsion by breaking out the beer on Saturday night. The politicians, undoubtedly, still say, "And if I am defeated, I will give my wholehearted support to the winning candidate." The village dogs still are given to appearing on the stage of Memorial Auditorium, are they not? And surely student cars are even now the curse of crowded Franklin Street.

I hope that History teacher who required me to read three volumes of Winston Churchill before delivering my "D" is still laughing easily and grading hard.

I hope that teacher of English still leads his students safely through "The Wasteland" to the light on the other side.

I hope that Robert Burton House, who used to conduct informal classes on the South Building steps, is just as memorable in the classroom.

Certain things don't have to change. The stillness of Battle Woods in winter . . . that, I hope, remains inviolate. And the gravel walks . . . let the movers and builders stop short of bricking up the last one. The long draughts of dark Rathskeller beer and the long embraces which follow outside Alderman . . . let neither be reduced by fiat.

The really important thing is the freshman, the one from Granite Falls or Granite Quarry or from these granite canyons which echo the air hammer sound. The one whose ears absorb such phrases as "academic freedom," or "the honor system," or "Philosophy 41."

He is one of the things about Chapel Hill that changes most. In four years, he may be an unrecognizable sophisticate.

But every year, he is replaced as a freshman by some new seeker after lux and libertas.

And in that way, I hope, Chapel Hill will never change at all.

To Cover Washington

You Must 'Get Understanding'

By RODNEY CROWTHER

(Rodney Crowther is a member of the Washington Bureau of the Baltimore Sun. His active newspaper career began as a reporter on the Asheville Citizen. From 1930 to 1939 he was financial editor of the Baltimore Evening Sun. He covered Washington for the Evening Sun until 1945 when he became chief of the London Bureau of the Sun. In 1952 he returned to London. He is an economic and fiscal specialist for the Sun.)

If I had only two words with which to answer your request for some light "on the problem of a young reporter breaking into the Washington scene" they would be these: "Get understanding."

Like Solomon when he was made King and "did not know how to go out or come in" the young man or woman who wishes to make a career in the most important—and the most difficult—newsgathering Capitol in the free world needs to implore "Give Thy Servant an Understanding Heart."

The opportunity to "cover Washington" does not drop into one's lap like manna from heaven. It comes, usually, after one has first served a period of probation on the local staff of one's paper mastering the tools of the profession, so to speak.

When you've grown old in the reporting business and the pull of venturesomeness has given way under the weight of years, these early probationary times will come romping back in fond memory.

It's these lowly early assignments in the police precincts and magistrate courts, in the city hall and county court house, in the local morgue and at the city jail, in the rough and tumble of pricinct and ward politics and the state legislature that you learn how to be a reporter. It's in those haunts, too, where you walk legs off and worry yourself to a frazzle that you have most of your great adventures. It's there that you learn about human beings and their often strange, mysterious ways, and you learn what it is that makes human society work and communities liveable.

It's in the atmosphere and haunts where human beings live, and toil, love and hate, aspire and achieve, steal and murder and rape and disappear down the chutes of times that you learn to be a reporter.

Then, having won your spurs on the local staff of your paper, and having achieved a discerning eye and a capacious memory, you may one day arrive on the vast stage which is Washington.

It is a vast stage, for hereupon are played out not only the destinies of our own people but here, too, may be launched the programs and policies that hold the fate of other peoples "that cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude." And you soon find that most of the players on this stage take themselves too seriously and need occasional deflating

I often think that a young reporter arriving on this great international stage for the first time is much like a young actress, who, having achieved a measure of competence in her home town little theater or in summer playhouse presentations, lands on Broadway for the first time to play Ophelia to Sir Laurence Olivier's "Hamlet."

I am often asked by young reporters what things they need to study most to prepare for a Washington, or a London, or a Paris, or even a Moscow assignment.

As often as not my answer consists of the three words: "Study the world." I mean by that you must have a vast and deep knowledge of world affairs, or at least have the mental qualifications which enable you to acquire such knowledge rapidly.

History—history of your own nation against the backdrop of world history — geography, economics, some knowledge of law, some knowledge of science, a wide acquaintance with literature,—these are all vital.

In short, you need a broad awareness of the world, of other peoples and nations and their governments and their relationships with the United States. You need to know much about your own government, and when you take up your assignment for the first time you will discover that no matter how much you already know, it is probably infinitesimal beside the real thing, and that you have an appaling lot to learn.

You will need to know something about the structure of your Government and if possible know something of the men who govern and determine the nation's policies. No one really understands Government who doesn't understand the minds and motives of the men who run it.

If one is to succeed in the role of correspondent one must be forever learning about Government, about men, about the crises in human affairs. Like men, Governments have many shadowy realms of being which they try—sometimes successfully—to conceal. Whether you are a plain reporter, an expert on some special subject or a columnist, it's all grueling but honorable business and vital to the preservation off democratic government and human freedom.

A Student's Dilemma: Lack Of Understanding

By GAIL GODWIN

It seems inconsistent that, in a time when this country has more money, more food, more kinds of automobiles and gadgets and devices that mean more pleasure and less war, more opportunities and more diversions, American college students should feel an emptiness which their fathers never experienced and their grandfathers would have called "a lot of humbug."

Educators and psychologists all over the country have expressed concern over the alarming increase in college suicides. We read about a brilliant undergraduate at a large university shooting himself in his dormitory room; A young instructor jumps out of a window; A young med student takes a bottle of sleeping pills. These things aren't pretty and we don't like to talk about them.

What do these students lack? Why do they want to snuff out the youth, beauty, and promise in their bodies?

We all feel this emptiness in some degree. Behind a facade of stylish campus clothes and witty, meaningless conversation, we cower—naked and afraid.

We have learned very little; but we have learned too much ever to be content again with the knowledge we have.

We have been labeled the "Beat" generation, — "the generation who has been through the mill" — and we are pictured as detached and aimless sprigs of humanity flopping around madly in search of something.

We wonder about a lot of things. About whether we will be a flaming success or a little flicker; about all the psychological and philosophical theories of which we have been allowed to taste — theories which have blasted all our earlier, simpler concepts. We wonder if anyone truly cares what to do, and if so, who that someone is.

Isn't it funny that, of all the things that universities lavish on their college children — amusements, buildings for this and that, new parking lots for their cars, new books for the library—that one gift has been so viciously overlooked?

That gift is understanding. That understanding could be materialized in an adequate and carefully planned advisor system.

There are so many times during the four years in which we are expected to find out who we are and what we are going to do with ourselves when we desperately wish we could rub Alladin's lamp and summon a great big understanding genie who will take a personal interest in our little crossroad decisions and tragedies.

Some of us are lucky, either because we have a friend, or a certain professor who will listen; some of us are lucky because we have learned how to help ourselves.

But some of us are not lucky. The unlucky ones, who couldn't quite see clear through the maze to maturity, are the ones we read about in the papers; the new statistics in the psychologists' casebooks on college suicides.

Some of the frenzied rounding up of science teachers should be diverted into an also-frenzied search for intelligent and "available" advisors who will help reveal the purpose of it all to those who see no purpose, or who are looking for a purpose.

Such an investment in advisors would definitely help build future individuals — instead of future corpses.

A Note On Thomas Wolfe: He Was Termed A Genius By Classmates

By CORYDON P. SPRUILL

The editor of the Yackety Yack in Thomas Wolfe's senior year wrote that "He can do more between 8:25 and 8:30 than the rest of us can do all day, and it is no wonder that he is classed as a genius." Thus, with full allowance for the complimentary bias in such expressions, it appears that at least one of Tom's contemporaries sensed that he was an unusually talented person. Naturally, few anticipated the high distinction which he later attained. To most students in his time the dimensions of prospective achievement were only dimly apprehended in a future too remote for serious consideration.

Tom's special gifts brought both general recognition on the campus and warm acceptance of him as a person among his fellow students. When he wrote most of an issue of the Tar Heel on scraps of heavy writing paper, affectionate admiration of his inventiveness and endurance continued long after the paper was bound and committed to the archives. In this exploit he was under that compulsion of torrential writing which characterizes the mature author.

Striking appearance, guileless hunger for all experience, and hair-trigger sensibilities made Tom vulnerable to occasional impositions. Some of his friends suspected at the end of his junior year that he would join an honorary society which had a well-deserved reputation for conducting strenuous initiations beginning after midnight and continuing with excursions over much of Orange County until dawn. The initiate was understood to receive notice to be in his room early every night for a week and to await the call of his superiors. After three uneventful nights, Tom became impatient. The next night visitors awoke him abruptly and gave him stern orders to begin a journey. After going part of the way with the stumbling initiate, the pretended representatives of the society stopped the proceedings and assured Tom that the practice run would be a valuable preparation for the real thing. He made an appropriately explosive comment, grumbled a little, and took the whole thing in good spirit, remarking that he couldn't hold it against tormentors so limited in imagination and general intelligence.

Repatriation Of Arabs Is Phi Society Topic

By ED ROWLAND

The Phi's bill this week for "the repatriation of Arab refugees" is expected to draw spirited debate, President Jess Stribling said yesterday.

The Society will meet at 8 p.m., Feb. 25, on the fourth floor of New East to debate the bill.

Dr. Shepard Jones of the Political Science Department will be the society's guest critic, Stribling said.

Many Invited

Bills have gone out on campus to more than 100 students and faculty members. Members of the political science faculty have been especially invited, along with Jewish and Middle East students.

The bill declares: "That the United States urge the government of Israel to permit the repatriation of these Arab refugees as a step towards the resolution of Arab-Israeli differences and towards the establishment of the durable basis for peace and stability throughout the Middle East."

Interest Increases

In recent weeks the Phi has had increased interest from students and faculty members, culminating last week when more than 60 persons attended the debate on Ezra Pound.

Stribling said he hoped this interest will not fade, but will grow and make the society strong.

An executive session will meet also to discuss current business.

Trustees' Power Being Usurped According To UNC Board Member

GREENSBORO Feb. 24 (AP)—A member of the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina expressed the opinion today that the body's authority is being usurped by the North Carolina Board of Higher Education and urged action to clarify its bounds.

Buck Harris, a member of the Legislature from Wake County, addressing trustees at a meeting said that the situation presented is whether the trustees want to "run the university or let someone else do it."

His comments on the matter were made after it had been revealed that a committee named at a September meeting of the University Executive Board was now engaged in a study of the powers of the trustees and the Board of Higher Education with Tom Pearsall as its chairman.

Pearsall told reporters during a subsequent recess in the meeting that the committee was set up to study the matter of authority invested in the two bodies. He confirmed that this was to be done with an eye toward legislation which might be needed in defining such powers.

Unique New Convention Set By UP

The University Party will meet tonight at 7:15 in Gerrard Hall to organize its "nominating convention" for the spring election.

Members of the party must have their membership certified and pay dues up to June 1 in order to have voting status in coming nominations.

The fraternities, sororities and the five dorm districts will organize their delegations and choose a chief delegate "to coordinate the business of their group with that of the convention."

These organizations will be assigned specific seats in Gerrard Hall with the sororities in the front, the dorms in the middle and fraternities in the back.

No memberships will be certified after this meeting "except in the case of emergencies or valid excuses cleared through the party chairman or the sergeant-at-arms," said Syd Shuford, party chairman.

Seats Marked

The delegations' seats will be marked by placards and each delegate will have to be in his assigned seat in order to vote.

There will be no secret balloting instead the chief delegate will poll his organization and then announce the vote to the party chairman.

Each delegation will be responsible for conducting the voting within its group. No group will be able to cast more votes than the number of members they have recorded with the clerk.

Ed Levy has been appointed sergeant-at-arms and will assist the chairman in tabulating votes, keep order and make sure all those entering the convention floor are certified delegates.

New Approach

"This system is an entirely new approach in nominating on this campus, and I think it is by the fairest that has been devised," Shuford said.

He continued, "It has always been the policy of the UP to permit all campus living units to be represented in the party; but not until this year have all these groups had the opportunity to be recognized on an equal basis."

"We hope that a convention type will permit each group to exercise a voice in the proceedings as a group and not be smitten by a few dominant elements.

BEAUTY & THE CREPE PAPER—That's pretty Martha Fortune, coed from Brevard, and she's sitting atop 36,000 square feet of crepe paper, which will be used to decorate the Tin Can for the Mardi Gras dance Friday night. Tickets for the weekend are on sale at GM's information office, Stevens-Shepherd, Kemps, Campus Cleaners or from Gerry Boudreau, Jim Vance, Don Howard, Ray Briggs, Benny Thomas and Jim Menzel. AFROTC Names Aldridge Cadet Of The Month

Robert Patten Aldridge, son of Mrs. R. P. Aldridge of Durham, presently enrolled here as a freshman, has been selected the outstanding Air Force Cadet of the Month for January in the Air Force Reserve Training Corps here.

A board of five cadet officers made the selection on Feb. 18 in an interview-interrogation of the six cadets competing for the coveted Cadet of the Month Award, an ward given every month to the outstanding freshman, sophomore, or junior Air Force ROTC Cadet of the AFROTC Group of UNC.

A 1957 graduate of Durham High School, Cadet Aldridge is in General College with an intended major of dramatic arts.

After completing the AFROTC program in conjunction with his other university courses, he will receive a commission as a second lieuteranat in the Air Force, being then qualified for pilot training.

At present Aldridge is a member of the Sabre Air Command, an honor society open only to outstanding freshmen and sophomore cadets.

Campus Blazer Sale Starting

UNC blazers will go on sale Wednesday from 10:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Y Building lounge.

Representatives from Robert Rollins Blazers Inc. will fit the jackets and take orders. Students will receive their blazers shortly after the order is made.

Two dollars from each sale made will be turned over to the Interdormitory Council here. Michael Hayes, treasurer of the IDC, will assist representatives from Robert Rollins in the sale.

SP Selects Candidates For Spring

For the spring elections the student Party nominated eight Student Legislators during a three-quarter hour meeting last night.

The party also filled two vacancies in the present Legislature. By acclamation Davis Young was sent to the Legislature from Dorm Men's III and Otto Funderburk from Dorm Men's IV.

For a seat in Dorm Men's I the party nominated Frank Elkins by a unanimous vote. One seat in this district was left open at the present time.

From Dorm Men's II Buck Hundley and Paul Woodard were nominated by acclamation for one year seats. Living in the same district, Walter Keck was nominated by acclamation to run for a six-months seat.

Davis Young and Harold O'Tuel, both from Dorm Men's II, were nominated by accamation to run for one year seats in the Student Legislature.

In the Town Women's District the party voted by acclamation to run Kay McCavern and Toy Johnson for one year seats in the Legislature.

In the next meeting the party will nominate students from Town Men's I, II, III, Dorm Men's III, IV and Dorm Women's District. There also remains an open seat in Town Women's District.

In no case was there any opposition to any of the candidates, and so in the words of SP Chairman Pat Adams the meeting went "like a machine."

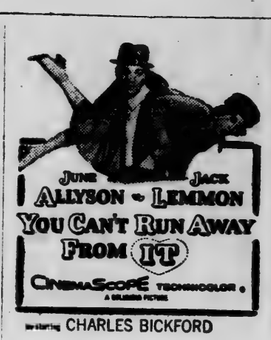
Gary Greer, chairman of the committee to investigate the present advisory system, said he had talked with General College Dean Cecil Johnson and Herman Godwin, chariman of the campus orientation committee.

Greer said his committee would release a mimeographed report when it had completed its work.

Intramural Managers

There will be an intramural managers meet tonight at 7:00 in room 301-A of Woollen Gym, at which time entries are due in soccer, badminton, swimming and the Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree.

John Kerr of the Grail will explain to the managers the details of the Jamboree which will be held next week. In addition, the point standings of all intramural teams will be handed out.



Open House Set Tonight

Sororities will hold open house for dormitory and fraternity men tonight from 7 to 8:30 p.m. The time had been scheduled for the hours 7 to 9 p.m. but was changed due to a recent Panhellenic rule that no midweek socials in sororities should last past 8:30 p.m.

The open house was originally planned for last fall. However, the presence of the flu bug on campus cancelled the plans. It was intended for the open houses to coincide with Greek Week, but Greek Week has been changed to March 10-13. Since arrangements for the open houses had already been made, it was decided to go ahead as planned.

The event has been planned by the scoial chairman of each sorority.

Spring Football Drills Finally Get Underway

By Bill KING

Old man weather finally decided to give Jim Tatum and his Carolina footballers a break yesterday and more than 90 husky men, all candidates for Carolina football 1958 met with Tatum and his coaching staff on Navy Field for the first of 20 practice sessions this spring.

Starting time was a little late, two weeks in fact. Practice was originally scheduled to start on Feb. 10 but bad weather necessitated two postponements. Now the Tar Heels face a battle with the calendar if they are to wind up preseason drills in time to get the Blue White game in as scheduled on March 15.

Word via the grapevine has it that Tatum stands a mighty good chance of making a big improvement on last season's 6-4 record. Nobody doubts this because the Tatummen weren't suppose to finish 1957 with anything like the 6-4 mark.

Nucleus of the 1958 team, which will make an invasion to the Pacific Coast for the first time, is a host of 18 lettermen, a banner freshman corp and some talented reserve strength from last season's fine club.

The Tar Heels will meet Southern Cal in Los Angeles and that's the first time a Carolina team has ever been to that particular coast. Other intersectional competition includes Tennessee at Knoxville and Notre Dame at South Bend plus all seven Atlantic Coast Conference cohorts.

One of the Tar Heel's co-captains for the coming season will miss all of spring practice but the other is expected to lead a host of line prospects. Co-captain Curt Hathaway, who broke his arm against South Carolina won't be available this spring but tackle Phil Blazer, the other co-captain will be right in there.

Also returning for line duty will be Fred Swearingen, Don Redding, Ron Koes, Ralph Steele, Paul Russell, Jim Davis, Ed Furjanic and Don Kemper. In the backfield, Tatum has such boys as Jack Cummings, Emil DeCantis, Jim Schuler, Ed Lipski, Don Coker, Daley Goff; Wade Smith, Nelson Lowe and Bob Shupin.

Tatum also has some fine potential off last season's freshman squad and several of these boys are expected to give some of last year's regulars a real challenge for prominent positions.

Likewise, there are several men who saw little or no action last season will be battling for what Tatum calls his "top 22." End John Schroeder and guard Fred Mueller who were ineligible last season are also being counted upon heavily.

Tatum plans to conduct scrimmage games in Kenan Stadium every Saturday except this coming Saturday and invites students and other fans out to have a look at his club.

The coaching staff is the same as last season. Along with Tatum there are Emmett Cheek, Ed Kenslar, Pat Preston, Jim Hickey, Fred Tullai, John Murphy, Bud Carson, George Barclay and Ernie Williamson. Tatum will also have several boys who graduate in June helping him during the spring drills.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Patricia Pressly, Elizabeth McCutchins, Jean McCauley, Anita Edwards, Jane Stainback, Edith Anne Morgan, Hevia Junca, Martha Rouse, Sarah Shaw, Dorothy Pitman, Roberta Linda Taylor and Amy Peck and Bryan Grimes, David Priest, James Mann, William Henderson, James Braswell, Lloyd Ensinger, James Kerr, Cey Garner, Eddie Gore, William Evans, James Phillips, William Neighbors, Thomas Teague, Doyle Driver, Ernest Knoll, Perrin Henderson, William Turner, Willis Whitehead, Thomas Blume and John Cochran.

FROSH BASEBALL

Freshman baseball coach Pat Earey has asked that all freshman baseball candidates report to the Tin Can at 2:00 o'clock on Monday Feb. 24. Earey is also looking for a manager for the team.

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

Carolina students are to be commended for their conduct at the Maryland game here Saturday night. That's the way a student body should act.

It might seem to many students that all this sportsmanship jag was a little "Mickey Mouse" but believe me, it wasn't. The boys in the press box were watching the students carefully and they were pleased with what they saw. More than one sportswriter who had made extensive comment upon the prevailing situation commented favorably about the good conduct of our students.

Frank McGuire praised the students for their behavior. He has been striving for six years for just such sportsmanship and it must be quite a satisfaction to him to see his students conduct themselves as they did Saturday.

Pete Brennan made his last one a memorable one. Pete's performance against the Terps in his Woollen Gym finale was just another great feat that should win him All-American honors this season.

A big share of credit for the victory should also go to sophomore center Dick Kepley. Once again Kepey turned in a fine performance. Until the State game in Raleigh Kep had been a big disappointment but now he seems to have found himself and this should aid the Tar Heels considerably in their quest for another title.

It is ironical that Kepley should have perked up just about the time Lee Shaffer hit his slump. Lee didn't play much against Maryland but he did hit two vital baskets right at the end. Big Lee seemed a bit reluctant to shoot when he was in there but those two important goals might have restored his confidence.

It was obvious to everyone that Tommy Kearns wasn't up to par physically. He had been sick all week and looked as though he felt very bad against Maryland. Bobby Cunningham was his usual efficent self. It's very seldom that he turns in a poor game.

Brennan needs a rest very badly as do several of the Tar Heels. The final regular season game isn't until Friday at Duke and the team should be physically ready by then.

All things considered, the Tar Heels should be in pretty good shape by tourney time. If Shaffer comes though as he is capable and Kepley keeps playing as he has in the last two games, Carolina will be tough to handle March 6, 7 and 8 in Raleigh.

"The New Chinese News Agency reports that many intellectuals are shaving their heads and putting on peasant's clothes to get 'nearer the people.' In this country college students have been wearing blue jeans for years." — Greensboro Daily News

Nine Records Set In Frosh Swim Meet

Records fell last night as the forth annual Freshman Invitational Swim Most got under way. There were teams entered for Maryland, Duke, State, Wake Forest, Davidson, and Carolina, in what was probably the best meet since 1955.

Harry Bloom was the star for Carolina setting two meet records, in the 200 individual medley, and the 220 freestyle, with exceptional times. Bloom was also second in the 100 freestyle. Bob Hunter won the 200 back. Vinny Simonton was the other Carolina record setter, with a time of 61.5 in the 100 butterstyle, race.

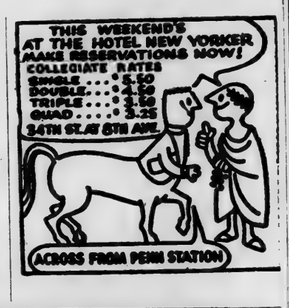
Stephan Smith of Duke set 3 meet records, in the 100 backstroke, 50 freestyle, and the 100 freestyle, with three outstanding times. Donald Schumacher of Duke set two meet records, in the 200 and 100 breaststroke events. Thurlow Fark of Maryland set a meet record in the 440 freestyle.

Other outstanding swimmers for the Carolina team included Joe Kalkhurst second in the 50 freestyle. Simonton third in the 440 freestyle. Bill Hamill and Sam Douglas and Charles Wrye respectively in the breaststroke, and Harv Hamrick third in the 200 and 100 backstroke.

Tom Gurrand was third in the 200 individual medley, and Billy Tarn was fifth in that event. Dick Nichols won fourth in the 50 freestyle and third in the 100 free, with Tarn forth in the 100 free. Dick Olive won the 200 butterfly, and he placed forth behind teammate Barney Barrett in the 100 fly. Harvey Wilkinson won the diving for Carolina.

Wrestlers Hand Deacons Defeat

Carolina's varsity wrestling team ended its season on a winning note last night by stomping the Deacons from Wake Forest 24 8 on the Woollen Gym mats.



The victory over the Deacons enabled the Tar Heels to compile a 6-4 season record and their first winning season in eleven years.

Coach Sam Barnes juggled his lineup in order to give his charges a chance to wrestle in a division above their normal class. All the squad members except David Wail and Larry Hayes pumped a division and still were able to win their bouts.

The team now has two weeks to practice for the upcoming ACC tourney in College Park, Md.

GRAHAM MEMORIAL STUDENT UNION

"Eight Hearts? Double!" snapped Crobie, his voice cutting the smoke like a well-honed razor blade.

Crobie led the Ace of Spades, and dummy went down. Groin, sitting South, quickly analyzed the desperate situation, and sweat began to pour down his furrowed brow as he counted down six, doubled and vulnerable. There was only one way — cheat! Although he held three small spades, he trumped the opening lead. Suddenly an idea came to him. The table was covered by a blanket of smoke which partially obscured the cards. Leading the King of Diamonds, Groin remarked, "You can never win the Ace of Trumps when you don't have it." Crobie, thinking a heart had been led, played his Ace of Trumps and took the trick. Groin was silent. Crobie returned a club. Groin again trumped, drew the remaining trump, and then skillfully, hidden by the smoke, substituted his low clubs, diamonds, and spades in the tricks he had already taken and replenished his hand with trumps and the Ace of Spades. He then laid his hand down, claiming the rest of the tricks.

Crobie, amazed, pointed to the one trick he had taken with his Ace of Hearts, but declarer skillfully showed him that he had reneged by trumping the diamond, claimed two tricks as a penalty, and the bid was made.

Appeals For Support

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25. UP—President Eisenhower, appealing for nationwide support of his foreign aid program, described it tonight as "not a maneuver carried out by a dictator" but an expression of good-will and common sense.

Eisenhower climaxed a day-long conference organized by the Administration in behalf of the $3,900,000,000 aid program. The President said that under present conditions the urgency of both mutual security and reciprocal trade agreements legislation "leaves no margin for error."

Put To The Test

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25. UP—Russia's proclaimed intention of boycotting the United Nations Disarmament Commission may be put to the test next month.

The United States and its NATO allies were reported near agreement today on calling a March meeting of the 25-nation commission.

Then, if Russia sticks by its refusal to attend, the whole issue of breaking the deadlock which has blocked disarmament negotiations since last fall may be handed over to the U.N. Security Council.

Negro Rapists

CHICAGO, Feb. 25. UP—Five boys were reported named by the Cook County Grand Jury today in true bills charging them with slashing and raping a 13-year-old Girl Scout.

All five were reported charged with assault to kill and two of them with rape. The boys are Negroes. The girl is white.

The boys were seized yesterday and confessed, police said, after the victim, Carol Foss, identified them as the gang that set upon her around 6 p.m. Feb. 4 as she ran an errand a block from her home in a racially mixed neighborhood.

Think It Was Cold Here?

AUCKLAND, New Zealand, Feb. 25. UP—Dr. Vivian Fuchs and his party were reported today halfway between Plateau Depot 280 and Skelton Depot on their journey across Antarctica.

The Fuchs' vehicles have covered about 45 miles since leaving the plateau depot, the report from Scott Base said.

When the party camped yesterday the temperature was 40 below zero. This morning, the sun was shining and the temperature rose to 30 below.

Chief Subject

TUNIS, Feb. 25. UP—Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba said tonight the Algerian rebellion was the chief subject in his first talks with U. S. Envoy Robert Murphy, here to try to ease French-Tunisian relations.

"Algeria was the center of our discussion," Bourguiba said after a session of more than two hours with Murphy. "It is the key to the whole problem."

Statement May Be Released Soon In State Board-UNC Trustees Fray

Byrd Changes Mind; Will Seek Re-Election

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 25. UP—Sen. Harry Flood Byrd (D-Va) reversed today an announced decision to retire.

Byrd, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and a long-time advocate of fiscal conservatism, said he would seek a fifth term. He announced his decision in a message to the General Assembly of Virginia.

It quoted a statement of consent from Mrs. Byrd whose illness was given as the reason in his retirement statement Feb. 12. She has been going to Washington in an ambulance.

Today's message was greeted with applause in the Assembly which had asked him to reconsider retirement. Gov. J. Lindsay Almond hastened to offer unqualified support. Four former Virginia governors who had joined in a request that he run again expressed gratification.

Sen. Frear (D-Del) interrupted a meeting of the Finance Committee in Washington to announce that Byrd would run again. Sens. Martin (R-Pa) and Williams (R-Del) joined Frear in expressing pleasure.

Many Letters and Telegrams

Byrd's statement to the Assembly here indicated he had received hundreds of letters and telegrams from individuals in Virginia and other states asking him to run again.

It is known that many came from those who approve his fiscal policies and also from persons who support his "massive resistance" policy to the supreme court's decree for desegregation in the schools.

Republicans in the Virginia Assembly went along with a resolution of praise for Byrd on Feb. 12 but Sen. Ted Dalton, twice a Republican candidate for governor, said the minority could not vote for an amendment asking him to reconsider. The Republicans may nominate a candidate to oppose him in a convention probably to be held in June.

Curtails Contest

But the announcement calmed Democratic politics in Virginia and abruptly ended a rapidly shaping contest between former Governors John S. Battle and William M. Tuck for the nomination to succeed him. Both issued statements of pleasure at his decision.

DICK ROBINSON
Assistant Attorney General

Dick Robinson Is Appointed Asst. Att'y Gen.

The appointment of Dick Robinson as assistant attorney-general was announced yesterday by Sonny Evans, president of the Student Body.

"In order to compensate for the additional duties which must be assigned to the staff, it has become necessary to expand the staff of the attorney - general's office," Evans said at the time of the announcement.

Phi Eta President

Robinson, a sophomore from Greensboro, is president of Phi Eta Sigma, freshman honorary fraternity, and a Symposium committee head.

A former member of Legislature, Robinson is a member of Phi Kappa Alpha fraternity and this fall served as chairman of the PiKA "Beat Dook" float committee. As a freshman, he was in the "suicide 25 squad."

Hallford Pleased

Sonny Hallford, attorney-general, complimented Robinson on his appointment. "Due to the anticipated additional functions of the Attorney-General's staff, I am quite pleased to have a person of Dick's integrity and ability serving in this capacity.

"The Attorney-General's staff will take on a significant role in campus justice.

Controversy Flares Up Over Student Housing

RALEIGH, Feb. 25. UP—A statement from the State Board of Higher Education in its row with trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina is expected within the next few days.

This was indicated today by Dr. J. Harris Purks, the state's Director of Higher Education. He conferred by telephone with members of the higher education board about criticism of the board voiced at a meeting of the UNC trustees yesterday in Greensboro.

Dr. Purks said, "It's very likely" that the board will issue a statement. He declined to make any comment himself and said that "Any statement with respect to these matters will come from the board." The board's chairman, D. Hiden Ramsey of Asheville, commented similarly.

Discontent of the trustees with the new higher education board flared into the open as the result of a dispute over the provision of quarters for married students at North Carolina State College.

The University administration had asked for permission to build a 500-unit housing development for married students, but the Board of Higher Education said it could not approve more than 300 units.

Provision For Housing

It said the state should make provision for housing married graduate students and for veterans but should not at this time undertake to provide quarters for other married undergraduate students.

The University trustees voiced approval of a report by one of its committees which said, "We are strongly of the opinion that this [illegible] the discretion of the Board of Trustees of the University."

Meanwhile, it was disclosed that another trustees' subcommittee is at work studying whether the dispute between the higher education board and the trustees is an administrative problem that can be settled through reaching an agreement with the board or one that would prompt a request to the legislature for a change in the laws.

Either One Or The Other

During a discussion of the situation, one of the trustees, State Rep. W. C. Harris Jr. of Raleigh asserted that, "We may have reached the point where either we do not need this board of trustees or the board of higher education.

"The issue is whether we run the University or somebody else runs it," Harris asserted. "I think it is as simple as that."

UP Readies For Spring Nominations

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The University Party held an organizational meeting and heard an explanation of the "entirely new, untried" nominating convention last night.

At the next meeting, Monday at 7:15 in Gerrard Hall, the UP will [illegible] Student Legislature.

The following evening at the same place the party will nominate the executive officers of the Student Government and any Legislators not elected the preceding night.

Syd Shuford, party chairman, said he hoped to conclude the nominations March 10 after selecting the senior class officers and the NSA Coordinator.

He commented, "We have got to get these nominations over before the Symposium sets in.'"

Those students who have not yet paid their party dues for this semester will have one more chance to do so Monday afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Shuford said that at the convention there would be placards for 45 organizations. The members of these organizations are to sit to the right of the placards and must be seated in their seat in order to vote.

Each delegation will have a chief delegate who will report his groups, vote to the chairman. However, any member will be able to make a nomination without going through the chief delegate.

Only certified members of the party will be allowed on the first floor; guests will sit upstairs. A running account will be kept of each delegation in order to insure there no mistakes made when casting votes.

Visiting Committee Lists Seven Recommendations To UNC Trustees

The Consolidated University Board of Trustees' Visiting Committee has "urged that every effort be made toward securing an adequate student union at Chapel Hill."

Adequate student union facilities was one of seven recommendations made by the Visiting Committee at Monday's Trustees' meeting in Greensboro.

The group also asked that "every effort be made to provide the necessary funds for the support of the University at Chapel Hill" in order that its standing among the country's universities be maintained.

Extension Division

Restoration of the Extension Division "to a sound and realistic position in the budget" was asked. The Committee's report also requested that the unit be extended to provide additional services.

"Careful consideration" was recommended in the planning and construction on a self-liquidating basis (should) be thoroughly re-examined." The report explained that this is in connection with adding more facilities without increasing room rent.

Other Recommendations

The other items included recommendations concerning the need for a School of Public Health Building, research leaves and emphasis on the Graduate School in the Long-Range Planning Program.

In its report the Committee pointed out that Graham Memorial was built in the late 1920's when the enrollment was "barely over 3,000 students." The present student union facilities are now "grossly inadequate to meet the minimum social and recreational needs," the report said.

Board, Trustees Pitted One Against The Other

North Carolina's press told the state Tuesday of a growing breach between the University of North Carolina Board of Trustees and the State Board of Higher Education—and the reason is that old familiar problem of who should have the most power.

The cleavage came to fore when the Board of Higher Education—acting against the recommendations of the Board of Trustees—slashed from 500 to 300 the number of housing units to be built at State College with self-liquidating bonds that rentals will retire.

Now, it appears that a strong fight may develop in the next Legislature over which of the two bodies—the Board of Higher Education, created by a 1955 legislative act, or the Board of Trustees, elected by the legislature—will have ultimate control over the Consolidated University.

It should be made clear here that when it was created, the Board of Higher Education was envisioned as a body to have broad authority over the "functions and activities" of the state's 12 institutions of higher learning—a rather broad delegation of authority over the trustees themselves.

Meanwhile, however, trustees of the Consolidated University felt their offices carried some control over the institution and now have arisen apparently in unanimous opposition to any usurpation of that power by the Board of Higher Education.

It is likely that trustees of the other nine state-supported institutions—excluding UNC at Chapel Hill, N. C. State College in Raleigh and Woman's College, Greensboro—likewise will uphold the respect of their offices—a traditional respect which has long given the trustees a great deal of authority in the operation of the institutions.

Taking into consideration the number of colleges supported by the state, it becomes almost necessary to bring their various programs and requests to a single body where the merits of one can be weighed against the merits of another. And that, in a few words, is what the Board of Higher Education does.

However, the question arises as to whether that board—appointed and not elected — should have a veto power over the recommendations of the trustees who are elected members of the legislature.

It is over this veto power—expressed when the Board of Higher Education disregarded recommendations of the trustees and State College administration for 500 housing units instead of 300 at the Raleigh institution — that the current rift between the two boards has been brought to fore.

If the Board of Higher Education is intent on performing the functions of the board of trustees, with the applause of Gov. Hodges, then the former should replace the latter in the operation of our educational institutions. However, we don't believe the education board is equipped to serve in that capacity.

The very nature of the trustees and the fact that they are limited to the single Consolidated University—or, in other cases, to only a single state - supported institution—in their offices would provide them with closer insight into the needs and problems of the institutions over which they have control.

For these reasons it is easy to appreciate the sentiments of the trustees in their general opposition to trespassing on their functions by the Board of Higher Education.

It now becomes the duty of the legislature to define which of the two bodies—the Board of Higher Education or the Board of Trustees—will make the recommendations for development of our educational institutions.

So long as the two are working against one another, neither can serve the purpose for which it was established.

BUT WHAT ABOUT CAROLINA?

Aristocratic Or Obsolete

A news story regarding regulations affecting fraternities at State and Carolina brings out other interesting facts. Of the 6,722 students at Chapel Hill only 1,162 are fraternity men. At State the number is 800 out of 5,425. Once upon a time this might have seemed evidence of a restricted aristocratic caste in democratic colleges. Maybe it still does. Apparently, however, the overwhelming majority of students in the two State colleges are getting along very well without benefit of pins.

Are fraternities more exclusive or out-of-date? Undoubtedly some young men get much pleasure out of the associations and facilities provided by their fraternities. Some certainly take from them a sense of social prestige. Evidently, however, in a day when hardly any student can get along without a car, a club is a luxury with which many can dispense.

Once there was a time when only fraternities provided club-like gathering places at our colleges. Now no fraternities can furnish such a loafing and gathering place as the State College Union for instance. In such a building all for free — or for small fees all students must pay — non-fraternity men at State have quarters unequalled by the richest and most exclusive fraternities in the past. All colleges should have such buildings. And in such buildings all students should have all the privilege of hospitality which in the past only fraternities could offer to their members and friends.

Bias Clauses, Hazing Should Be Eliminated

By CURTIS GANS

This observer went to a lot of trouble to build a sound argument against bias clauses in fraternity charters, and then found to his dismay that the headline above the column in the paper read: Bias Clauses Should Be OK'D.

What it should have been was: BIAS CLAUSE SHOULD BE KO'D.

While on the subject of fraternities, there is another problem that presents itself in fraternities.

Every year freshmen come to Carolina and are told in no uncertain terms that there is no hazing permitted on the Carolina campus.

They find for the first few weeks that freshmen are indeed treated as equals on the Carolina campus.

However, some of them have the misfortune of pledging fraternities and find out that this rule does not hold true in the case of pledging of fraternities.

Many times students are forced to get their sleep during class time either in class or out.

Many suffer academically because of last night's scavenger hunt which has taken them to Greensboro or Raleigh at 3 a.m.

Other are forced to suffer thta loss of pride that accompanies pledging in being personal valet without pay for some twenty or thirty people who are fondly called brothers, and who have gone through this same type of hell before. This in itself is contrary to the spirit and letter of the campus rule against hazing.

It is indeed unfortunate that students, for the priviledge of becoming a member of a Greek letter society, have to sacrifice both the time and energy that could be applied to their primary responsibility in college—study—in order to participate in a meaningless prank or to serve as slave labor.

It is equally unfortunate that the fraternities have not realized yet the immaturity of this type of pledging, which perhaps serves as a release for their sadistic urges, but serves no other real function, and can, although it does not always, serve to breed dissension.

It is hoped that fraternity members themselves will be able to realize that they will profit by elimination of hazing in pledging.

It is hoped that the emergency fraternity committee will find some way of cutting all forms of hazing from the UNC campus.

"I'll Have The Law On You"

POLITICAL PERSPECTIVE

It's Student Reform — Or Else

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The emergency committee on social fraternities has the responsibility of realistically considering its problems and of making appropriate reforms.

The University Administration is concerned about the existing social regulations regarding fraternities. The widely publicized Lambda Chi Alpha incident focused this concern on the matters of off-campus parties and rules dealing with visiting in fraternity houses.

Unlike other universities, here the Administration itself has not sought to combat these conditions by declaring a number of arbitrary regulations.

Instead the responsibility of reform has been placed in the hands of the student government.

The Administration is, in the words of Director of Student Activities Sam Magill, "laboring under the assumption that self-government is the best government."

"We are looking to the Student government to solve the problem itself," he said. The Administration has tried to convey its concern to the students and to make fraternity members recognize that whatever they did, for good or bad, affected the whole university, he explained.

Director Magill said he was hope that the committees, reforms will be something that "we, as the Administration, can defend to the people of North Carolina with some conviction."

He asserted that the University was concerned with maintaining and strengthening the good will of the people of North Carolina because it was their university.

Director Magill felt the student leaders "were responding realistically" and was "very encouraged by their whole attitude."

In 1954 the present visiting agreement was established and a great deal of talking was done about the fraternities and their relationship to the rest of the University, but no other action came from the discussions.

The present discussions will probably touch on the standards of conduct and the conduct of a fraternity as a unit.

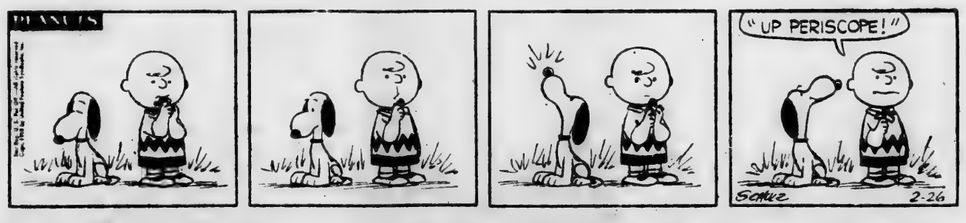
Undoubtedly the Inter-Fraternity Council and its responsibility and relationship to the rest of the university will have to be examined and perhaps revised.

The question of drinking and the problems related to mixed parties will have to be reviewed. It is probable that the method of getting parties approved and the enforcement of these regulations will have to be altered.

If Student Body President Sonny Evans follows his State of the Campus Address (presented shortly before Christmas vacation), discriminatory clauses in fraternity charters and term papers in fraternity files will be discussed.

Director Magill expects the committee to do a "real-rethinking" of the problems related to fraternity life.

It is evident that the committee must take its work seriously and must be willing to compromise when compromise is necessary.



Any feeling of disdain or unconcern is likely to result in disaster. The fraternities must be willing to receive the recommendations which the committee makes.

I believe the present system can be altered so that the fraternities can retain their independence if they are prepared to accept more fully the responsibility which goes along with it.

The public of North Carolina has been aroused; changes can no longer be deferred. If the fraternities are not willing to make the necessary changes, then someone else will have to do so.

I think it would be in the interest of the fraternities to seize the initiative.

THEY LEAD TAME LIFE

Dorm Men Eulogized

By P. W. CARLTON

The dorm man leads a tame life in comparison with those gay dogs of the campus, the Greeks. But still, there is a kind of quiet gentility about their attitude which makes us admire them all the same. The next lines are a memorial to these stalwart souls, who daily storm the battlements of education without the backing of brotherly ties.

Their breed is a tough, resilient one that overcomes hardship and failure with agility and, for the most part, certainty. Let us illustrate some of these hardships by studying a cross section of dormancy, or rather dormitory life. Our hero is Sam Studious, fourth year General College major. He and his faithful roommate, Calvin "Bunko" Courageous, third year freshman, occupy a cubicle on the fourth floor of Joyner Dorm. Cal is a worthy young soul, arduously engaged in working his way through school by operating the floating crap game for the dormitory.

As we join these young stalwarts, we find them blissfully dreaming of home and mother. Dawn is peeping through the window, when the alarm clock explodes into action, falls over on it's side, gyrates across the desk and lands face down against a beverage can from last night's party. For a minute nothing happens. Then a hand emerges from beneath a pile of bedclothes, crawls across the desk, futilely feels for the clock, and, having failed, subsides into a relaxed position. The clock blasts away. Soon, there is a sigh and then an upheaval of covers. Sam's furry physiognamy appears, his eyes flash bloodily as he snares the offending clock and snaps off the alarm. He then attempts to step out of bed, tangles a foot in the covers and hits the floor with a crash.

Cal, meanwhile, has tucked his head under his pillow to shut out the noise. Now he leaps from bed and tramples Sam as he rushes to the closet. He has an eight o'clock class in Integral and Comparative Mechanics of Photosynthetic Trivia. He and Sam mill around for a time, finally getting dressed and fall downstairs to head for Lenoir Hall. At seven forty-seven Sam and Cal appear out of the gloom in traditional track style and clatter into the main dining room.

Outside, a campus policeman has set his stop watch in motion, to check their form. In exactly three minutes Cal and Sam leave the door of Lenoir and charge by the policeman, who gives them the thumbs up and yells encouragement. The roommates separate. Sam to pursue his studies of Anatomical and Phylogenic relationships between the Androecium and Pseudo-carpellate Amoebae. (A highly edifying course) and Cal to his mech. class. Sam roars into class, plows to a stop, eases painfully onto a wooden bench provided for students and listens eagerly to the lecturer, who is mumbling something about tardy students receiving automatic flunks. After losing two pages of notes due to a dropped pencil, Sam proceeds to his next class.

Lunch is always a thrill for Sam. It is at this time that he meets his virtuous, fun-loving girl friend, Mary Smith (Sam feels that her name is a little common), a self-help student who is working her way through college. They speak rapturously to each other, Sam gazing over Mary's shoulder at a good looking D.A. and she ogling a football player. It's true love, obviously. They pass a pleasant hour playing 20 questions, she continually replying "no" to his queries. Parting with the fond assurance of a highly rewarding academic experience in the arboretum that night, the two wend their separate ways, he to the dorm, where he spends a profitable afternoon sleeping, and she to a course in Aggravated Psychology. At seven that evening they dine sumptiously on the stu-special. At eight, they are in the infirmary with acute gastric maladjustment, which spoils their projected experience. Oh well they'd have fallen in that hole Dr. Snarf dug for the new Polypodium accrostichoides anyway.

The writer is a graduate of Weybeloe Normal College with his M.R.S. Degree. (Master of Rural Sanitation.) He has recently come to the University as assistant to the Curator of the Grease Pit at Lenoir Hall.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

'Thanks For Service'

To the Editor:

I am writing on behalf of the Presbyterian Congregation to express our appreciation to the many students who rendered heroic services during and after the fire which destroyed our sanctuary.

There were many who assisted the firemen in fighting the fire, and many others who, when it became possible to enter the rear structure, quickly removed all moveable equipment. Through their efforts the church records, all books and equipment in the church office, and almost all of the furnishings in the educational structure were saved. The next morning several students appeared and worked most of the day, helping us to restore some order from the chaos.

We feel that the University students are a vital part of the life of our Church. We are always concerned for what is happening in their lives and we are proud of the splendid qualities which this emergency revealed in them. Their reaction in this situation has written another fine chapter in the already grand tradition of the Carolina student.

We know that, in time, our Church will be able to provide new and completely adequate facilities for students and for the local congregation. In the meantime, our Sunday Worship Services will be held at 9:45 and 11:00 a.m. in Carroll Hall. The Westminster Fellowship will resume meetings in "The Hut" this Sunday. We invite all Presbyterian and other interested students to join us in those places.

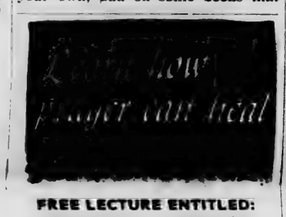
European-Bound Students To Meet This Afternoon

The seasoned meeting of the students going on the UNC European Seminar will be this afternoon from 4:30 to 6 o'clock in the Library Assembly room.

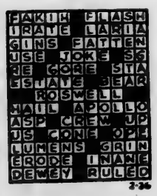


At this time Dr. and Mrs. Ransom Taylor, who have lived and traveled in Europe, will speak to the group on what kind of clothes to pack, some important attitudes they will run up against in Europe, the things involved in traveling on your own, and on some books that should be read before going to Europe.

This discussion will not only be open to all students going on the UNC tour but also to those going on any tour to Europe.

Over the past few weeks, the Educational Committee of the European Seminar lead by Pat Anderson has outlined a pre-trip schedule which consists of the following: one and one half hours of seminar each week Wednesday afternoon from 4:30 to 6 o'clock at which times professors will point out the high points of the places the tour will visit, taking the cities as they come on the itinerary.

Discussion of the cities will include famous buildings, museums, art centers, importance of the city in regard to the country, and historical interest.



Although these sessions have been organized on the basis of the progression of the trip, three will be a few special sessions later in the spring when the group will take entire afternoons and look at Europe with the idea of getting the over-all picture.

Tri Delts Plan Italian Theme

Decorations for the spaghetti supper being sponsored by the Delta Delta Delta social sorority on Thursday, will carry out an Italian theme. The supper, open to the public, will be served from 6-8 p.m. at the Tri-Delt house.

Anyone who desires a ticket may purchase it for one dollar from any member of the Tri-Delt sorority. Extra tickets will be sold at the door.

Proceeds from the tickets will go into the Delta Delta Delta local scholarship fund. The number of scholarships the Tri-Delts give this year will depend upon the sum put into the scholarship fund.

Bee Robertson, who is in charge of arrangements for the supper, reports that the sorority plans to accommodate 400 persons at the supper. Several fraternities, she said, will close their dining rooms and eat at the Tri-Delt house.

Old Hanger Becomes Crepe Paper Fantasy

By CHARLIE SLOAN

A World War I airplane hanger doesn't sound like the best place to have a dance.Especially when it has been converted to a gym.

But the Mardi Gras decoration committee is finding that it offers many opportunities for original decoration, if you use enough crepe paper. Decorations Chairman Jim Vance thinks he has enough crepe paper—36,000 square feet of it.

Through judicious use of the red and black crepe and imaginative lighting the Tin Can will be converted into a giant ballroom for both the concert and dance this Friday.

The committee plans to put black crepe paper across the top of the building and dot it with earth-made stars to simulate sky. Wide red and black checked crepe paper panels will form the walls, and two big signs will present the Mardi Gras King and Queen and the Buddy Morrow Orchestra.

Work Being Prefabricated

Most of the work is being prefabricated and will be put together in the Tin Can Thursday night.

The walls are being built in 14 panels. Each panel is 16 by 18½ feet and takes a little over an hour to put together.

Besides the crepe paper walls, Vance's committee is making two big signs by stuffing paper in chicken wire. The largest one, 13 by 20 feet, will be placed behind the bandstand. The second will hang over the throne of the Mardi Gras King and Queen and is a mere 8 by 12 feet in size.

To Put Up Thursday

Asked if the elaborate decorations will be ready in time for the concert, Vice Chairman Jim Menzel said he is sure the committee will have the materials ready to put up by Thursday night.

An added attraction will be a corner of the floor set aside with a radio tuned to the Duke-North Carolina basketball game so students taking part in the Mardi Gras festivities can keep up with the score.

Tickets

Tickets for the Mardi Gras are available at GM's Information Office, the YMCA Kemp's Stevens-Shepherd, Campus Cleaners and from Gerry Boudreau, Jim Menzel, Jim Vance, Beany Thomas, Ray Briggs, Don Howard, and other members of the Mardi Gras committee.

The tickets cost three dollars and include the concert and dance Friday, special activities in Graham Memorial Saturday afternoon and a Bermuda dance in Cobb Basement Saturday night.

all living costs to a new peak. The increase was the biggest in 18 months.

Officials said moreover they foresaw no relief for housewives from soaring costs over the next few months.

They held out hopes that heavy price cuts being felt in raw material markets—for rubber, metals, hides, wool, petroleum and lumber and so on—may trickle to the consumer level in the form of lower prices by summer or fall, and also that food may decline somewhat.

Moon Rocket May Be Fired Later This Year

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25. (AP)—From Air Force and industry space experts today came predictions that a rocket can be fired to the moon this year and an unmanned vehicle sent around Mars between 1965 and 1970.

The timetable for events in outer space was presented in separate forums—testimony by Lt. Gen. Donald L. Putt, Air Force chief of research and development, appearing before a congressional committee; and a seminar for industry representatives sponsored by the Air Force Assn. (AFA).

Putt told the committee that the exploratory moonshot could be made this year if the orders were issued within the next few weeks. The committee also was told that the United States should be the first nation to establish a space way-station on the moon—before Russia moves in.

While these views were being expressed by the Air Force in the capitol hill session, the men whose job it is to translate Air Force ideas into actual hardware gave their own predictions at the AFA seminar in the Sheraton Park Hotel.

A panel of industry missile manufacturers was polled for their guesses on when missiles, satellites and space ships would be ready.

THE POWER OF POSITIVE WRINKLING

While everybody knows that the soft collar on Van Heusen Century Shirts won't wrinkle, ever, a Van Heusen survey among college students has revealed that precious few know why. Here are some of the responses:

J. L.—sophomore at the Psychodynamic Institute for Arts, Crafts, and Number Painting—"Obviously, the collar won't wrinkle, because it's afraid to wrinkle. It may have been threatened by some surly Van Heusen vice-president. Ergo, it exhibits the Cavandish anti-wrinkle syndrome."

G. F.—junior at Usury School of Advertising—"Collar-wise, there's no demand for wrinkles. No customer benefit. Now, this is strictly off the top of my cranium, but the statement, 'the soft collar that won't wrinkle, ever,' is too negative. Substitute 'never' for 'ever' and you not only have a positive statement—but—as demonstrated by that famous cigarette, this ungrammatical concept will be attention-getting."

L. V.—senior quarterback of Millown College—"I wouldn't be without a Van Heusen. Look here . . . under my pleatless shoulder pads. See? Out of simple decency, the collar refrains from wrinkling. It's this kind of restraint that recently led to our glorious victory over Birdbrain U. Not a man was scathed. Hurrah for the collar—and fight furiously, fellows."

Yes, this is the kind of ignorance we run across. Actually, while other collars are made of 3 pieces of material, the secret of this soft collar with its wrinkle-shunning qualities is one-piece construction. Van Heusen Century shirts come in 5 collar styles. $4 and $5.

Carolina Caravan

Bob Cunningham Back In Lineup

By JAKE WADE

The oldest conference record in the Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games books is 23 feet, eight and three-fourths inches for the broad jump.

It is held by the Rev. Charles Hubbard, pastor of the Chapel Hill Methodist Church, and it was set in 1935.

When the Atlantic Coast Conference was formed and took over the Indoor Games, the old marks of the Southern Conference Indoor Games were retained. Many of them have been supplanted by bright new figures. Parson Hubbard's record has hung on through the years.

Incidentally, it is one of three or four which likely will still be unbroken after this year's Indoor Games, scheduled Saturday in the University of North Carolina's Woollen Gymnasium.

TRACK PATRON—Charlie Hubbard is one of this town's most popular citizens and he is a loyal supporter of athletics at Carolina, his alma mater.

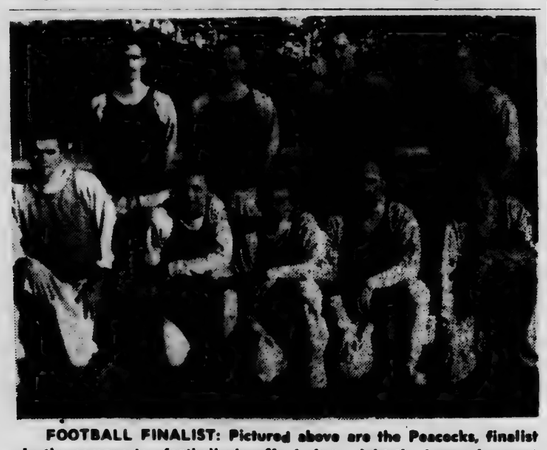
Track, of course, is his specialty, since he, himself, was such an accomplished track star. You will see him Saturday, dressed in the mufti of the carnival's officials, and helping to put on this colorful event as one of the officials.

He attends all the other sports events here as much as possible between pastoral calls and the activities of his church. He is an active member of the Chapel Hill Athletic Club, a live organization of townspeople which backs the University's athletic programs.

So far as he is concerned, it would suit him fine to see his old broad jump record go by the boards. He is that interested in the advancement of track and field in this area.

It is interesting to note that his long-standing record is in a field event, where a measurement tells the story, rather than a running event in which timers might understandably err.

SWIMMING TOO—It's a busy week here . . . UNC also will be host to the annual ACC swimming tournament, this one being a three-day number beginning Thursday night in Bowman Gray memorial pool . . . Maryland is the favorite in the track meet, the Tar Heels in swimming.



Right here it might be well to mention that Pat Earey, in his first year as coach of the Tar Heel swimmers, has carried on with the same success of his predecessors, Dick Jamerson and Ralph Casey, the only other two head coaches North Carolina has had in swimming . . . Pat inherited a fine squad and has obtained the maximum of efficiency from it.

COMES BACK—One of the interesting stories on the Carolina basketball team this year is Bob Cunningham, the hustling senior guard who played such a big part in the Tar Heels' national championship success last season.

Cunningham was one of three returning starters on that team, the others being the redoubtable Pete Brennan and colorful Tommy Kearns. Never a big scorer, his unselfish team play, aggressiveness and savvy had made him as important as the next one on the undefeated 1957 team. He was generally regarded as the most underrated player on that brilliant combination.

So he was named a tri-captain along with Brennan and Kearns and stepped right in a starting role again. When the team began hitting snags now and then, however, Coach Frank McGuire figured a change had to be made, and he benched Bobby to boost the scoring strength. Also, the play of Bobby seemed to lack a little of its old luster.

This must have been a mighty blow to a regular of the champions, but Cunningham took it like a soldier and played just as hard as ever when he was called on as the sixth man. In fact, apparently a little harder. In the past several games he has moved back in as a starter and has turned in sterling work. The club is flexible and he may or may not be a starter against Duke Friday and in the conference tournament, but his admirers have been made happy because now he is regarded definitely as a member of the first team again.

IN MEET HERE TOMORROW—SAT.

ACC's Finest Swimmers Compete

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The finest swimmers in the Atlantic Coast Conference will be here Thursday, Friday and Saturday to compete in the ACC individual championships in Bowman Gray Memorial pool.

The activities begin Thursday afternoon at 5:00 with a scratch meeting in the Monogram Club to determine who will swim the 1500 meter event. Athletes hit the water for the first time Thursday night at eight for the 1500 meters. At 9:30 a scratch meeting will be held dealing with Friday's events.

Prelims Friday

At 1:00 on Friday, the prelims and semis in diving (low board) will be held. At 2:30, preliminaries begin in the following events: 50-yard dash, 200-yard butterfly, 200-yard backstroke, 220 freestyle, 100 breaststroke, and diving. Then come the semis of the 50-yard dash, followed by prelims in the 200 individual medley and the 400 relay.

Friday night at 7:30 finals will be held in: 200 butterfly, 50 dash, 200 backstroke, 220 freestyle, 100 breaststroke, low dive, 200 individual medley, and 400 relay.

Saturday morning at nine will be the prelims and semis in the high dive, followed at 10:30 with the prelims in the following events: 100 butterfly, 100 dash, 200 breast, 100 back, 440 freestyle, high diving, and 400 medley relay. At 4:30 the finals will be held in all of these events.

Individual Meet

The meet is held for individual championships only, as the team championship is decided in the regular season dual meets. Carolina repeated this year as team champion with an 8-0 conference record. The mermen compiled an 11-0 slate for the whole season. Several of the Tar Heels should be in definite competition for individual honors.

Some of the best swimmers from the other schools are as follows: State-Dick Fagden, national breaststroke champ, and Frank Mershell, backstroke. Duke-(runner-up to Carolina for the team championship--Kenneth Whitney and Steve Young, sprinters; and Emmet Pace, Backstroke. Maryland-John Bell, individual medley, Ray Ashenfelt, sprinter, and perhaps the best divers in the conference, Stephen Shields and Robert Kohl.

1957 Returnees

Several of last year's individual champs will be back this year defending their honors. Among these are: 50-yard freestyle, Bill Roth (UNC-; 100 breastroke, 200 breaststroke, and 200 butterfly, Dick Fagden (NCS-; 100 butterfly, Bill Zickgraf (UNC), and 400 meter relay (UNC), the team of Bill Roth, Walt Rose, Tony Schiffman, and Brent Nash.

Brennan Is Carolina's Golden Boy

Peerless Pete Brennan is Carolina's golden boy, as he has been all season, in the Tar Heels' stretch run for the roses.

The team that won the national championship last year closes out its regular season with Duke at Durham Friday night. That's the showdown which will determine number one in the Altantic Coast Conference pre-tournament race. Hot Duke goes into its game with Virginia Tuesday night a half game ahead.

Loves It Here

Brennan, the senior from Brooklyn and team tri-captain, is the fair haired lad in the Tar Heels' challenge. The trim and handsome young man who says with sentiment, "These have been four wonderful years for me at Chapel Hill, I hate to think of leaving in June" hopes to wind up his season's play on the lofty All-America plane he has performed throughout the campaign. No one doubts that he will do it.

Pete collected 29 points in Carolina's classy 66-59 win over Maryland last Saturday ngiht and played almost flawlessly in all phases of the game. Previously he had clinched conference scoring honors for the year. He moves into the Duke spectacle with a 21.4 average for 22 games. He is also the Tar Heels' top rebounder by a wide margin, with 269 saves to his credit.

Needs Help

Peerless Pete, even at his best, will still need plenty of help from his mates in order to avenge that disenchanting 91-75 defeat by Duke here half a dozen games ago. The Blue Devils wrapped up the Tar Heels during their recent torrid winning streak that has put them into the nation's first 10 and established them favorites to dethrone the Tar Heels in the ACC tournament at Raleigh.

Brennan must get good help from the sophomores, Harvey Salz, Dick Kepley and Lee Shaffer. Salz has been playing consistently superior basketball, improving with every game. Kepley and Shaffer have had their good nights, but occasionally bad ones. Kepley came through with one of his finest performances against Maryland, and he will be counted on in the game with Duke.

The Tar Heels' record, with the one game remaining, is 10-3 in the conference 17-5 overall.

IN ACC SCORING

Brennan Retains Lead

GREENSBORO, N. C., Feb. 25 (AP)—Pete Brennan, Carolina's 6-foot-6, 205-pound senior leader, scored 61 points in two games last week to widen his lead over Atlantic Coast Conference individual scorers and leave the principal remaining race between a trio for second place.

ACC Service Bureau figures through games of last Saturday night show Brennan far ahead with an average of 21.3 points per game, with Virginia's Herb Busch a not-too-secure second at 16.9.

Sophomore Dave Budd of Wake Forest, wtho has been gaining for a month, is just .3 of a point behind Busch now and has moved ahead of Carolina's Tommy Kearns to claim the No. 3 position. Budd is averaging 16.6 points, Kearns 15.5 after an illness-hampered week. Lou Pucillo of N. C. State is fifth at 14.9.

Track Classic Back At Hill

By DAVE WIBLE

After a layoff of two years when the State College "Cow Palace" had the honor, the "indoor track classic of the South" has been returned to Chapel Hill, and Woollen Gym the town and buildings the colorful sports event has so long been associated with.

The "Classic," now called the ACC Indoor Games, but in its time by other titles has been an institution in this neck of the woods since 1932 when it was the old Southern Conference Indoor Games.

Up thru the years, it seems the team furnishing the meeting place also furnish the material. Out of the 27 team championships awarded at this event, Carolina squads have captured 17 with Maryland and Duke closest with four titles apiece.

Tell The Story

These figures tell the overall story of Carolina's track power. Since 1954, and the formation of the Atlantic Coast Conference, the track power has been Maryland, holder of three of the four crowns. Only once have the Terps been overpowered and that was in 1955 when the Tar Heels did the trick with only onehalf point.

Looking ahead to Saturday and the 28th "Classic", the experts have picked their choice with little hestiation—Maryland again. They have made a just decision for the Terps will field almost the same team that took the title last year.

Four of the Maryland returnees hold ACC indoor records. Jim Starboad (70-yd high hurdles), Louis Sregi (600-yd dash, and the co-holders of the high jump record, Tom Tait and George Hogan. Three of these were champions last year (Sergi did not run) plus Ed Cooke last years shot put champion nad a sure five bet to beat the record Saturday.

Scurlock Defends

Maryland won't be the only team to watch, not by a long shot. The Tar Heels have been favored to take second spot pushed hard by Duke. World record threat Dave Scurlock will be back to defend his 880 title, and in addition will take a stab at the 600. Duke will feature Dave Sime, holder of seven World's records and the defending broad jump champion, Robert Laverty.

With a list of contestants such as this not counting the dark horses, the return of the "Classics" will be as track fans, coaches and officals have said "The finest yet."

Track Tickets

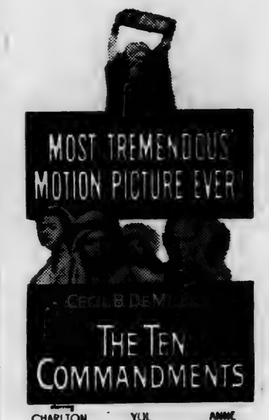
Tickets for the ACC Indoor Track Championships which will be held here Saturday afternoon and night are now on sale at the Woollen Gym ticket window.

Students tickets are $1.00 and general public $2.00.

Students must obtain tickets since the event is a conference rather than a school affair. Only 2,500 seats are available.

Duke Game A Sellout

DURHAM, Feb. 25 (AP) — All tickets have been sold for the Duke-North Carolina basketball game here on Friday night, the Duke University Athletic Office announced today. It suggested that fans without tickets abandon any plans to attend the game.



Frosh Baseball Preps; Manager Is Needed

Freshman baseball coach Pat Earey has announced that practice will be held in the afternoon beginning at 2 o'clock and urges anyone interested to come out. The frosh also need a manager and applicants for this job are requested to see Earey.

Governor Hodges Asks Feuding Boards To Bury Hatchet And Work Together

Fray Shows That Red Tape Exists

The current conflict between the State Board of Higher Education and the UNC Board of Trustees has pointed to the general problem of red tape that must be cut in many policies of the University.

The red tape difficulties were referred to earlier this year by Chancellor William B. Aycock when he told the Faculty Club of limitations on policy flexibility as a result of the many channels of authority for approvals.

The Chancellor spoke of such normal channels as: a Consolidated University office, the Board of Higher Education, the Department of Administration, the State Personnel Department and the Advisory Budget Commission.

These agencies compose what Chancellor Aycock called a "superstructure," which is one bulb of an administrative hourglass for the University.

With himself in the narrow neck of the hourglass, the Chancellor saw the flowing of the sand of administrative autnority from the bulb of internal administration into the bulb of the superstructure.

He said that this flowing "means a limitation on flexibility of the departments, schools and divisions." The overall rigidity "can seriously hobble a University," he said.

No Reference

These observations were made by Chancellor Aycock in January. The Chancellor made no reference to conflicts within the superstructure itself, but rather confined himself to the limitations from the actual presence of the superstructure.

The current controversy between the Board of Higher Education and the Trustees concerns a conflict of power. The Trustees, on the one hand, had recommended one thing; and the Board had recommended another.

The rift came into the foreground at a meeting of the Trustees this week when a report from the Visiting Committee was read and approved by the Trustees.

GOV. LUTHER HODGES
Asks Boards To Settle Differences

'Will Be A Calamity' If They Don't Agree

RALEIGH, Feb. 26 (AP)—Gov. Hodges today called on committees representing the Board of Higher Education and trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina to work out a plan to settle differences between the two boards.

The Governor said if changes in the law are needed to clarify authority, the two committees "must agree on what the changes are to be. He expressed confidence that an agreement would be reached, but declared "it will be a calamity if they don't."

"My opinion is there is more propaganda and misinformation on it than there are real differences," Hodges told reporters at his news conference when asked about the differences which broke out into the open at a meeting of the University trustees in Greensboro Monday.

The governor said the two committees were appointed some time ago presumably as the result of a disagreement between University officials and the Board of Higher Education over providing housing for married students at North Carolina State College.

The University officials wanted to build a 500-unit housing development, but the Higher education [illegible] University trustees Monday adopted a resolution saying the 500 units are needed.

Hodges Hits Harris

Hodges pointed out that at the trustees' meeting there was only one speaker, State Rep. W. C. Harris Jr. of Wake who criticized the Board of Higher Education. Hodges was sharply critical of one statement which Harris made.

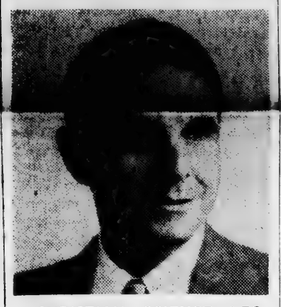
Hodges said Harris, whom he did not identify by name, "gave the impression" that the University "is so tied up with bureaucracy" it could not buy a dishwashing machine and the dishes went unwashed.

"That's completely in error and if he had checked with anyone, if he had done his job as a trustee, he would have known it," Hodges declared.

The governor made it clear he was not taking sides in the controversy since he is chairman of the University Board of Trustees and he appointed the "group of distinguished men" on the Board of Higher Education.

Challenges Newsmen

Hodges said that at the trustees' meeting he made a statement in which he said "never before in the history of the State Budget Bureau" had Consolidated University officials "had as much freedom" in making expenditures as they have today. He challenged newsmen to check this with University officials.



In discussing the disagreement over housing, Hodges said that whether the Board of Higher Education "was right or wrong" it had a responsibility under a law enacted by the 1957 legislature which authorized self-liquidating student housing projects.

Under the law, Hodges said, such projects at the University must be approved by the trustees, the Board of Higher Education and the Advisory Budget Commission.

A Desire To Sing Together Started Circle 9 Songsters On Their Way

By BEN TAYLOR

When a small group of Chi Omegas decided to combine vocal talents, quite a lot more resulted than a lineup of pretty faces.

Nine Carolina co-eds are now grouped together in the singing of well-known songs, rearranged and stylized to suit the group's vocal capabilities. Dubbed the Circle Nine, the group builds its songs on show tunes; each one embodying a moving style of harmony all its own.

Bedecked in bright red sweaters, these same girls—minus the two who have been added since—then known as the Circle Seven, appeared in the Carolina Calvacade of Talent Contest held in Memorial Hall last fall.

Since then, they have performed before civic groups, fraternity parties, and tonight they will make an appearance with the Men's Glee Club in Raleigh before the annual banquet of the Raleigh Chamber of Commerce.

Repertoire

Two songs of their repertoire which they will present in public tonight will be "Stepping Out With My Baby" and "C'est Si Bon."

Many of the girls have sung in conjunction with small men's ensembles at Yale, Princeton, and other northern colleges before transferring to Chapel Hill. Hannah Kirby, the group's leader and spokesman, explained, "We knew that if we were ever going to sing together, we'd better do it now." So, with those words, the Circle Nine was founded.

"We like to use songs people know pretty well. We attempt to give old songs a new twist; using our own harmony versions of the songs," Miss Kirby said.

The girls have now adopted a "uniform" in the form of black dresses, high heels, and their trademark; the golden circle pinned to the neck rim of their dresses.

Musical Sorority

The Chi Omega sorority house is filled with melodius music each day from 1 to 2 p.m. when the group practices diligently. Since their introduction, such consistent practice has emanled the girls to comprise a repertoire of 6 songs; all personally rearranged in harmony to suit their respective vocal style.

Building Committee Continues Interviews

The Building Committee of the Graham Memorial Board of Directors heard suggestions yesterday regarding the facilities of the $2,000,000 student union to be built on this campus soon.

The committee will meet today at 4 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial, and all persons who have any suggestions as to what facilities should be in the new union are invited to attend.

Legislature Should Pass A Newspaper Profit Measure

Tonight a bill will be presented to the student legislature requesting that profits accrued by The Daily Tar Heel should be retained by the publication instead of handed over to the student treasury.

We hope that when a vote is taken on the bill a week from now, it will have gained enough support to assure its passage.

Currently, whenever The Daily Tar Heel needs a special appropriation it must go first to the Publications Board with a request, and thence to the legislature to seek the needed funds. It doesn't occur often for the simple reason that we seldom spend money which is not appropriated in our annual budgets.

However, it is a timely, red-tape-filled process to undertake every time the Tar Heel needs a special appropriation. And it is conceivable that a much - needed item, approved by the Publications Board, could be rejected by the legislature to the detriment of the Daily Tar Heel.

These facts, however, are far overshadowed by the incentive right of the paper to retain for its own purposes any profits which it accrues through the difficult and often thankless work of those who see to its publication.

Under the present arrangement, those who bring income into the Daily Tar Heel through the sale of advertisements and subscriptions become virtual employes of the student treasury department whenever profits appear for the newspaper. For funds which they provide over and above the Daily Tar Heel's operational expenses are turned over to student coffers.

For instance, our expense appropriation this year was $46,000.-40, paid for by student fees, advertisement and subscriptions. If we were to take in $60,000, which isn't likely, the $14,000 realized over and above expenses would not be retained by the Daily Tar Heel.

Obviously, such an arrangement offers little incentive to those who would improve the newspaper off profits which it might accrue.

If the Daily Tar Heel could keep the profits it makes, we would not need to ask the legislature for a new truck—we would buy it with our own resources. Nor would we seek a special appropriation for photographic equipment, for we could buy it ourselves.

In the Publications Board student government has a watchdog over any expenditures of The Daily Tar Heel. That board would remain the watchdog over additional funds if we could retain profits realized through greater effort in advertisement and subscription sales.

Consequently, the legislature should look favorably upon the bill presented tonight with an eye to permitting the Daily Tar Heel to improve itself by funds which rightly belong to it.

The Polls Committee: Keeping Up With Times

Well, there's nothing like keeping up with the times.

Take, for instance, the revealing report of the GMAB Polls Committee conducted to see "how students felt about controversial issues and problems."

Only thing wrong with the revealing study, conducted last fall, is that it was just released for publication Tuesday.

Really, boys. Of what significance are your campus-wide polls—expected to represent a cross-view of student opinion—if you release them three months after the "controversial issues and problems" on which they report?

Well, maybe our attitude is wrong. Let's take a campus-wide poll, determine how many are in favor of releasing poll results soon after their collection, and then present a report of this survey to students this summer.

Perhaps we could include in the same poll data telling how many students attended the Duke-Carolin football game, what percentage of the student body spent Thanksgiving at home, and who thinks Robert Kennedy should speak here in the fall, 1957.

These and many other pertinent studies would be of vital interest to the student body.

Enough for the future. Following is a little data about the past which was included in the polls committee report released here Tuesday.

1. Some 73.9 per cent of the student body wanted Adlai Stevenson to appear on campus for a public address. (That was in October, you remember, of 1957—last year!)

2. 'Peanuts,' the Daily Tar Heel comic strip, won the support of 86.9 per cent of the student body. (For those of you who can't remember, 'Peanuts' was added to the paper in early December, 1957.)

3. Back in 1957, when the poll was taken, 47.2 per cent of the student body were smokers, and more bought Kents than any other brand. (With the new Winston lighter give-away plan, no telling how the vote may have changed.)

4. The consensus back in 1957, by 62.8 per cent, favored a seventh sorority on campus. (The Kappa Kappa Gammas already are firmly established on the campus and have even held their first rush parties!)

The report Tuesday carried with it a request that persons with questions they would like to include in the polls should come by the GMAB office—and the Polls Committee will take care of it for you.

We would make this comment, however; be sure to date your question, 'cause somebody's likely to forget what you're talking about by the time the report is made.

SINCE SPUTNIK

No Hiding Place

When the Russians fired Sputnik I into space they also launched the world on a binge of wordniks.

In no timenik at all, we had a Muttnik or, as some declared, a Dognik. There was considerable speculation that a Mannik would soon be cricling the earth.

It was almost foreordained that the Navy's Vanguard, which exploded four feet off the ground, would be Dudnik.

Then came the Army with its Jupiter-C, sending the "Explorer" into an orbit around the world.

The crazenik continued. One Latin newspaper termed our satellite an "Uncle Samnik." Sarcastically, an East German paper dubbed it "Latenik." (Better latenik than nevernik?)

What we're getting at is that all these phraseniks eventually will make us sicknik.

But we don't intend to fall prey to this linquistic trap. As soon as the weather warms, wer're going to get away from it all. Probably pack a nice lunch and drive out to the lake for a picnik. —Bristol Herald Courier

J.Y.'S JAZZ

The Swinging Shepherd And Buddy Morrow

There's a song called "Swinging Shepherd Blues" which is pretty doggone good and, surprisingly enough, is getting quite a few plays on the radio and selling quite a few copies. Surprising because it has seemed that the American public is in the habit of disregarding good music and buying the junk. The fact that this song is selling so well should be extremely encouraging to all who like jazz and tasty music, because its one step away from jazz and definitely tasty.

The body of the song is a lilting flute solo, backed mainly by bass and drums, which reminds me a little of a Buddy Collette solo on the Chico Hamilton Quintets "The Morning After." The faceless mob of rock and roll loving Americans which is buying this record wouldnt' like to know it, but this stuff is jazz. One more step in the right direction, and in June the hit parade is going to see Max Roach, and Dave Brubeck, and Shelly Manne, and the Duke or the Count, and suddenly the musical face of America will have changed.

I hate to think that "Rock and Roll" might be dying; after all think of all the great contributions it's made to that entity which is American culture. Oh, there's Elvis Presley, and sideburns, and "Raunchy, and all those wonderful phrases, like "all shook up," or "one eyed cat peepin in a sea food store" or "see you later alli gator." Yes indeed, as this great medium slowly fades into the sunset, and the great black chasm which is to be its coffin opens, and we stand sorrowing at the edge, let he who is the spokesman look heavenword, remorsefully brush a sorrowful tear from his misty eye, and declare for the heavens and the world to hear - "We come to bury rock and roll, NOT to praise it!"

Graham Memorial's Mardi Gras Committee has signed the Buddy Morrow orchestra to appear at the Mardi Gras dance and concert this weekend. This is one of the finest dance bands in the country, and a band that Carolina students would love. Morrow's recordings of "Night Train" and "Got You On My Mind" have sold very well, and his "One Mint Julep" is loved by almost every Southerner I know. Yet I have been told that there is a good deal of doubt as to the success of the occasion.

This is due to three factors, all of which are inexcusable. The first is poor scheduling of the dance -two weeks after Germans is an inopportune time. This is minor as compared to the two others - general student lack of enthusiasm for anything that the people in the Student Union try to do for them, and a snotty attitude on the part of the fraternities which says that there is but one dance and that is Germans and that all others are but golden images unworthy of attention.

"Not Yet"

VIEW FROM THE HILL

Social Regulations Should Go

This observer committed an egregious error yesterday, when in this column appeared the clause "However, some of them have the misfortune of pledging fraternities . . ."

What this should have been is that some persons on the campus have the misfortune of being hazed in pledging, which as was argued in yesterday's column is contrary to the idea of social equalityon the UNC campus.

The emergency committee on fraternities will no doubt hear talk, subsequent to the Lambda Chi Alpha affair, that social rules should be strengthened.

There is at least as good an argument that social regulations should be eliminated entirely.

That the university is trying to cultivate a standard of morality in this microcosm is understandable. That the university wants to protect itself from criticism from the outside is natural.

However, the university should not be responsible for the private lives of its students. In doing so it is invading into the privacy of the individual that should be zealously guarded. Further, it is taking an added responsibility over and above that of the civil courts, a responsibility with which the university should not be charged.

Although the university is currently looked at by the press of the state, as being responsible for the lives of the students within it, this concept is a false concept, as no group should be responsible for any other group whose membership has attanied the age of responsbility to the civil laws.

Students who at the end of their high school career have to face the test of civil law, it is rather silly to see that the more intelligent people in the community must be subjected to juvenile laws. College students are not in a social incubator, although they may be in an intellectual one.

The university currently tries to curb violators of social laws, and hence, when violations occur, the university is blamed. As long as it assumes the responsibility it should be blamed. The point being argued here is that the university should not take the responsibility.

These rules do very little good, and invite violation.

Moreover, they infringe on individual rights in simply telling a person when and where to drink or when and where to come in at night. There can be some argument against having drinking or other excesses on university property, but to forbid it at private establishments, such as fraternities is in violation of the rights of private property.

Further, to make a coed come in at 1 a.m. on a weekend night or 11 p.m. on a weekday does nothing good. It is designed to protect the reputation of the Carolina coed, but the Carolina coed, has the ability to do what the university is trying to protect the coed from doing at any time of the day.

Girls at the age of twenty should not be treated as children. If they were not in the university, they would be subject to the laws of the land, not the rules of the smaller group.

At some point in an individual's life, he must accept the responsibility that society places on him. The university should not impede this process.

It has been oft said in this column that one should not legislate morality, because morality is an individual matter.

Social rules represent the university's view of minimum morality. They are not effective enough to prevent the violation, and they are too effective in that they take away the individual's freedom of choice within civil law. They should be eliminated.

Fraternity Man Makes Case For Early Rush

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

I should like to discuss the case against delayed rush from the viewpoint of the fraternities, for I believe through their relationship to rushing they deserve some consideration.

The first question is just how delayed would rush be? The earliest time which would have any advantage over the present system would be right after the first semester.

Except for the beginning of the year this is the time when the academic load is the lightest, and so the rushees and fraternity men could devote their efforts to rush without serious academic hardship.

Any other time during the year there would be hour quizzes which would conflict with the rush program, unless the University would be so considerate as to suspend quizzes for a week.

I assume that rush would be conducted on a basis similar to the way it is now run and would take about a week to complete.

It is possible, if informal rush is conducted throughout the year, that the rushing period could be shortened or even eliminated.

However informal rush would present more problems than it would solve in my opinion. In the first place the larger houses with more money at their disposal would have an unfair advantage over the smaller houses in conducting the rush program.

Secondly, rush is a tiring process and it would be difficult to keep the house interested in rush throughout the long rush period.

A long informal rush period would also be relatively unorganized and and expensive. The fraternity would have to spend at least one half of the year working at rush.

Therefore, it seems to me that a rush period organized on the present lines with a "silence" period and conducted just after the first semester would be the fairest and most practical way to conduct a delayed rushing program.

Assuming that rush would be run under these conditions, I see another problem.

As the fraternity houses are now instituted they have some relatively fixed overheads with regards to the dining room and to the sleeping quarters of the house.

In order to operate on a reasonably stable financial condition the fraternity must have a relatively fixed number of members so the costs of the overhead can be met.

Included within this fixed overhead are all the expenses of owning a house—taxes, insurance, heat, repair, etc.—and cost of employing help to work in the kitchen.

As the membership of a fraternity becomes smaller the porportion of overhead that each member must pay becomes larger or else the fraternity simply loses money.

As the fraternity becomes more expensive because of the drop in membership, some members have to go inactive because of financial strain and so the expense is increased per capita.

In light of these facts let us examine delayed rush. A fraternity now has 50 members and in the spring 15 graduate. Under the present system of early rush this fraternity would get around 20 pledges in the fall and so have around 50 members during the rest of the year.

If delayed rush is instituted and this fraternity can not get any pledges until after the first semester, will not those 35 men have a difficult time supporting a fraternity normally supported by 50 men?

The matter boils down to the simple fact that regardless of how the fraternity plans its pledging there can never be a relatively fixed number of members in a fraternity throughout the year.

The cycle will be continuous—at the beginning of the year the fraternity would not have enough members, then after the first semester the facilities of the fraternity would be overcrowded.

(By facilities I mean the dining room; most fraternities do not expect to have room to sleep all of their members in the house.)

Only the cleverest house managers would be able to keep the cost of membership at the present level while at the same time keeping the house out of debt.

The question of delayed rushing is a multisided problem; I personally believe the present system contains the least of the possible evil.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Are We Doubletalking?

To the editor:

It is indeed regrettable that the argument about Perez Jimenez fitness to rule Venezuelans has drifted toward unwarranted attacks upon my people. As a foreigner who is enjoying the hospitality of this country I cannot answer every and all the questions that have been raised by my opponents. The host's forgetfulness of his duties does not allow the guest to forget his. However, it is necessary to point out, that to all foreign students and specially to those who are citizens of underdeveloped countries, it must be deeply dissapointing to notice that in the middle of the cold war between "Democracy" and "Totalitarianism," the onlycomments in you paper raised by the over throwing of a dictator in the Western hemisphere aer in favor of the dictatorial ruler and against our people's rights to fight for its freedom.

So far I had thought every American would heartly hail the restoration of freedom in any country. I will go back to my country with a different but maybe a more realistic idea about the nature of the struggle we are fighting today. I began to think that you may need as much help as we do to make the dream of a "free world" come true even in your own country. So let me suggest that you send the letters that have been written in favor of the dictator and against my people to the Central Universiy of Venezuela so that the students in my country may read them and let you know what their reaction is. I am sure that the Venezuelan students will welcome your intiative and will be able to contribute to a better understanding between our countries.

Respectfully yours,
Martin Perez Jr.

Phi Passes Arab Refugee Bill; Guests Vote To Defeat Measure

By ED ROWLAND

Members of the Philanthropic Literary Society voted 7-6 Tuesday night to urge Israel to permit repatriation of a "token" number of Arab refugees. The figure was set at 10 per cent.

Members and guests voting together overwhelmingly defeated the measure, 26-12.

This was the second week in a row that the Phi's guests have disapproved a bill the members favored.

Outstanding Speaker

Tawfik Hassan, a student from Egypt visiting the Phi, declared in an emotion-filled speech that: "We (Arab countries) want Israel to stop immigration and try to be a good neighbor. We will accept them if they give up 30 per cent of their illgotten gains and return to the 1947 demarcation line."

Hassan, selected the evening's outstanding speaker, asserted that the problem is misinterpreted in the United States. He said that while Egypt is thought to be communistic here, the Arabs feel their friends are in the West, not in Russia.

"America is the only country which can solve the problem and make Israel behave," he said.

Rep. Don Gray charged the problem of selecting 10 per cent of the refugees and locating them in Israel is almost impossible to overcome.

Guest Critic

Guest critic Dr. Sheperd Jones of the Political Science Department, an expert on the Middle East, said since the problem relates to U. S. foreign policy, an approach on the basis of fundamental ethics may not apply.

He said the U. S. wants peace in the area, so the only way all the refugees could return to their former territory—through military victory—is out.

Dr. Jones added that waiting 10 years for development of either the Jordan Valley or an Arab country like Iraq is quite unfeasible. He said the problem needs immediate solution.

Interesting Debate

The critic praised the members and guests for what he called "a most interesting and informative debate," though he said many of the better arguments on both sides were overlooked and the speeches tended to be overly emotional.

Pres. Pro Tem Warren Coolidge invited all present to return next week for the bill calling for the abolition of fraternities and sororities at UNC. Coolidge said recent developments in the area of these organizations make the bill an important one.

Di Defeats French Bill Unanimously

By WYNDHAM HEWITT

The Dialectic Senate failed to pass a bill Tuesday night that would censure the French government for their policy of colonialism and intervention in North Africa.

The bill, introduced by Rick Wolfer, was voted down unanimously by both the senators and the visitors present.

Rebel action in Algeria, French economic conditions pertaining to the oil found in the Sahara Desert and the basic rights of the French government in connection with their colonies were the reasons given by the senators for voting down this bill.

In new business to come before the senate, they decided to stop using the Student Audit Board of keeping their financial records. The president and the treasurer will keep all records of this nature from now on.

The Di's subject for next week will pertain to the Federal Communication Commission (FCC) and the investigations that are being directed toward that regulatory body.

Bad Check Unit Acts As Liaison

A committee on campus has the job of keeping up with bad checks passed by students and seeing that they are taken care of immediately.

The Bad Ccheck Committee was organized a year ago to maintain good relations between students and Chapel Hill merchants.

When a student passes a bad check he is contacted by the committee and asked to clear it up as soon as possible. If he does not clear up this matter within a week, he is contacted personally. Should he still do nothing, his case becomes subject to Honor Council action.

The Bad Check committee has urged students to keep up with their expenses, thus assuring good student and merchant relations.

More than 700 volumes of fiction with a North Carolina setting are described. Special location symbols are indicated for those where fewer than 10 copies are known in the state.

Fifteen committee members and some 100 readers, who submitted reports, have contributed to the publication, which contains a detailed index and five illustrations.

Duke's Loss Didn't Mean Much

Other than mentally, Duke's loss to Virginia in Charlottsville Tuesday night made little difference as far as the importance of the Carolina-Duke game Friday is concerned.

Should Carolina win now, it will win the title by a full game and of course get first seeding in the ACC tourney. But had Duke beaten Virginia and lost to Carolina the Tar Heels would still have been seeded first, even though they would tie Duke for the title. Since Carolina is the defending conference champ, it automatically gets first seeding.

Thus first place in the conference standing is now simply a matter of of who wins Friday night. As for the rest of the teams, the standings can still be juggled considerably, depending on the rest of the ACC games this weekend.

Friday Is The Big Night

The loss to Virginia broke Duke's win skein at 11 games and cooled the flaming Blue Devils down a bit. For awhile it seemed that nothing could stop the Methodists but now the odds on their winning the tourney have lessened.

Still the Friday night clash should be a real corker. The game is already a sellout and fans and students of the two schools are anxiously awaiting the most important game played in the ACC during the regular season.

Blue Devil guard Bucky Allen wil probably be ready to go against Carolina after missing a couple of games due to illness. This will make the Dukes stronger. The Tar Heels are hoping that Lee Shaffer and Dick Kepley will perform well—a great deal will be riding on the shoulders of these young sophomores.

Plenty Of Action Here This Weekend

From tonight at eight o'clock until late Saturday there'll b eplenty of sports action offered here. Tonight begins the Atlantic Coast Conference Swimming Championships in Bowman Gray Pool. That will last through Saturday night. Saturday, the conference Indoor Track Championships will be up for grabs.

Both of these events promise some exciting action for sports fans. Carolina will be favored to retain its swimming crown and Dale Ranson's runners are given a good chance to dethrone Maryland as indoor champs.

Many individual records in both swimming and track are destined to fall in the next three days. This year, as in the past few years, the ACC boast some of the best talent in the country, and these two championships should provide for some interesting watching.

Salz Likes To Get Those Rebounds

Harvey Salz, outstanding sophomore on the Carolina cage team explains why he's practically always up under the boards after his shot. "I get as big a kick out of grabbing a rebound from some of the taller fellows as I do scoring."

Although he's only 6-1, hustling Harvey probably grabs more rebounds than any smallman around. His speciality is catching an opposing player off guard and slapping the ball away from him. If the number of steals were recorded, Harvey would certainly be right at the top in the conference.

According to Salz," you can never tell when a rebound is gonna get away from a big man and if you're right on him you can grab it and go." Harvey's done plenty of grabbing and going this season and it's one of the main reasons the Tar Heels are now sporting a 17-5 record.

Sime Still Uncertain For Saturday

(AP)—A revision of the record books is expected after the ACC indoor track games here Saturday despite the fact that star performer Dave Sime is on the uncertain list.

Sime, record-holding dash man from Duke, was scratched from the national AAU indoor championships last weekend in New York because of a muscle "twinge."

Today, Duke coach Bob Chambers said his ace pupil has improved, but added, "I won't make a decision on whether he'll start until about Friday."

Leg Still Sore

Chambers said Sime still feels a little soreness, Chambers explained he doesn't want to risk hurting Sime by not giving the injured leg a chance to heal.

The Duke coach said the muscle trouble has no connection was the pulled groin Sime suffered in 1956 when he was forced out of olympic competition.

More Big Names

Even without Sime, the meet will feature two other big names of the track season. Maryland's miler Burr Grim and Carolina's middle distance ace Dave Scurlock are taking dead aim on two 18-year-old ACC marks.

Grim will try to erease the meet mile record of 4:12.5 set in 1940 by Jimmy Davis of Carolina. Scurlock, then, will be able to turn the tables on Maryland if he can eclipse the 1:55.1 880-yard run mark set in 1940 by the Terps' Jim Kehoe Scurlock ran the distance in 1:51.5 in practice a few days ago.

Records Threatened

Grim and Scurlock also are figured to threated records in the two-mile run and the 600-yard dash respectively. The two-mile mark was set at 9:25.5 by Carolina's Jim Beatty, and the 600-yard goal of 1:17.4 is held by Maryland's Lou Sergi who set it in 1956.

Other records which may topple Saturday are the shot put (51 feet, 1½ inches, set by Durham Lawshee of Duke in 1955), and the two-mile relay (8:20.3, held jointly by State in 1955 and Maryland in 1956).

The meet begins at 10:30 a.m. with most of the championship events slated to begin at 7 p. m.

In addition to the conference division there also will be division for non-conference colleges, and freshman teams.

Three-Day ACC Swim Meet To Get Underway Tonight

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The ACC swimming championships open here this afternoon at 5:00 with a coaches meeting in the Monogram Club, followed by the first event, the 1,500 meter race, tonight at 8:00.

Carolina, the team champions with an 8-0 conference record, is favored to walk off with many of the individual titles. The Tar Heel roster includes five all-Americans—Bill Zickgraf, Walt Rose, Bill Roth, Tony Schiffman, and Mac Mahaffey.

Other Carolina feats include an 11-0 overall record this season and an undefeated string of 21 straight over the last two seasons. The meet is to decide individual championships only as team championhips have already been won on the basis of dual meets.

Five Defending Champs

The fact that only five defending champions return to attempt to hold their crowns means the inevitablility of a host of new champs. Returning this year are Bill Roth (UNC), 50 freestyle; Bill Zickgraf (UNC), 100 butterfly. Dick Fagden (NCS), 100 and 200 breaststroke, and the 400-meter relay team of Roth, Walt Rose, Tony Schiffman, and Brent Nash (UNC).

Preliminaries in many events begin tomorrow afternoon at 2:00, with the finals to follow that night at 7:30. The remainder of events will take place Saturday morning and afternoon.

Duke Tough

Chief contenders from other schools include Kenneth Whitney and Stephen Young, sprints, and Emmet Pace, backstroke of Duke, and John Bell and Ray Aschenfeld, sprinters, and Stapler Shields and Robert Kohl, of Maryland.

The Terrapins and the Blue Devils figure to offer the stiffest competition for Tar Heel stars. Duke wound up it's season in second place behind pace-setting Carolina.

Boston College To Play ACC Team in NCAA

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pairings were announced yesterday for two of the regional tournaments pointing to the National Collegiate Athletic Assn. NCAA basketball championship next month.

At New York's Madison Square Garden in the Eastern regional March 11, Manhatten will face the Southern Conference champion, probably West Virginia, in the first of three games.

The second game will send Boston College against the Atlantic Coast Conference champion and the third will pair Connecticut with an at-large team yet to be chosen.

The Atlantic Coast picks its titleholder in the Conference tournament next month. At present, Carolina, the defending champion, and Duke are tied for the league lead. Dartmouth has the inside track for the Eastern at-large spot.

In the regional at Evanston, Ill., also starting March 11, Pittsburgh will play the Mid-American champion and Notre Dame the Ohio Valley Conference representative. Tennessee Tech is leading the Ohio Valley parade.

Meanwhile, two more berths in the NCAA field have been clinched.

Kansas State captured the Big Eight title, and the accompanying tournament bid, by beating Oklahoma Tuesday night 68-51. San Francisco won the West Coast Conference crown by edging St. Mary's of California 49-47.

Finals for the major national collegiate championship will be held March 21-22 at Louisville, Ky.

In the small college division of the NCAA, 18 teams have qualified for tournament berths. Fourteen remain to be selected.

Tickets Going Quickly

RALEIGH, Feb. 25 (AP) — Tournament officials said today tickets for the 1958 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tourney are going faster than ever before, and only 1,500 remain for each of the four sessions.

The three-day affair, March 6, 7, and 8, will be staged at North Carolina State College's Reynolds Coliseum which can hold 12,400 persons.

Tickets have been on sale since Jan. 30.

MANHATTAN, Kan., Feb. 25 (AP) —The No. 1 national basketball ranking is a "great feeling" to both Coach Tex Winter and his Kansas State Wildcats but they won't be completely happy until they clinch the Big Eight Championship.

"I feel better today than I did a week ago when we were first voted the top position," Winter confided after noting his wildcats retained their lofty perch on a slim margin over West Virginia.

Kansas State had an 8-0 Big Eight record and stood 18-1 for the season going into tonight's game with Oklahoma here. A victory would give K-State the undisputed conference title and a berth in the NCAA tournament next month.

Winter noted that Nebrasaka and Iowa State had given his cats a real helping hand in that bid to unseat the Kansas Jayhawks as Big Eight champions. Nebraska pulled the upset of the season in beating Kansas, 43-41, last Saturday. Iowa State upset the Jayhawks, 48-41, last night.

The two losses sagged Kansas' conference record to 6-4, assuring K-State of nothing worse than a tie for the title.

"All we have to do now is win one of our last four games" Winter said. "We would be awfully disappointed if we didn't win it."

After tonight's game Kansas State will play Missouri at Manhattan Saturday, Nebraska at Lincoln next Monday and wind up with Kansas at Manhattan the following Saturday.

Jim Tatum Gets Several New Grid Prospects

Three more North Carolina boys have come into the Carolina football fold on ACC grants-in-aide.

They are end Jim Helton of Mount Holly, who played fullback in high school; halfback Gene Shuford of Lincolnton; and fullback Harold (Bucky) Smith of Morganton.

Helton stands 6-2 and weighs 200 pounds. Shuford weighs 160 and is the son of a former star UNC football player and boxer, Emmett Graydon (Ox) Shuford.

Lee Jackson, an all-star halfback out of Penn Charles prep school, Philadelphia, who is the son of one of Carolina's all-time football greats, has signed an ACC football grant-in-aide to enter Carolina next fall.

The late Don Jackson, Lee's father was a teammate of Coach Jim Tatum on the 1933 and 1934 teams. A star halfback, he was especially celebrated as a passer.

Tatum, announcing Jackson's decision to enter UNC, also listed tackle Ed (Ossie) Osborne, from LaSalle prep, Philadelphia, 205-pound end Jimmy Rhodes of Brevard and center Bud Hammett of Pennsboro, W. Va., high school as having signed grants-in-aide.

Ailing Larese Will Be Back

By RUSTY HAMMOND

A question running through the minds of many Tar Heel fans this season is "Whatever happened to York Larese?" Many believe that he will be back to play in the event the Tar Heels win the conference tournament and proceed to the NCAA Championships.

The old hands around the Hill remember York's great performance on last year's star-studded freshman team which included players like Lee Shaffer, John Crotty, Mike Steppe, and Dick Kepley. The team compiled a 17-4 season record and York was runner-up to Shaffer in scoring with a 16 per game average.

Larese, an amiable, pleasant fellow, is a native of New York who attended St. Ann's High School. He was both All-City and All-America while in high school.

Knee Injury

The root of this promising prospect's' troubles, an injury to the bone and cartilege of both knees, began while he was still in high school three years ago. The injury reoccurred last year.

There is absolutely no chance of York's playing any basketball for the Tar Heels this year, no matter how well they do in their march toward the NCAA tournament. He stopped using crutches only last Thursday and still has to walk carefully. Larese stated, however, that he will definitely be out to play ball for Carolina at the beginning of next season.

Commenting on this year's freshman team, Larese said, "The freshman team this year has plenty of talent. It was a severe blow to lose Doug Moe in the middle of the season."

Slowed Down

Asked whether he thought the one year layoff would hurt his playing, Larese replied, "Of course, being out for a whole year definitely slows one down physically, but with a little more effort this can be overcome. One has to be careful not to put on too much excess weight during such a period of inactivity. I think if I work all summer I will be in good shape for the start of the season next year. It will be up to the coach whether I get a starting position or not, but I will be in there hustling."

There has been much speculation as to what would have happened to the Tar Heels had both Larese and Quigg been able to take the court for Carolina. Many people remember last year on WUNC-TV the special program put on by Coach McGuire when Larese moved around the foul line in an arc, dropping in one-handed push push shots with only one miss out of 14 shots.

Next year Larese will be back.

Honor Council Changes Pass Legislature; Campus Will Vote

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Student Legislature passed the Honor Council Revision bill with the necessary amendments last night by a unanimous voice vote.

By special orders the body passed Leon Holt's (SP) bill instructing the Elections Board to conduct a campus wide referendum on the amendments to the Student Constitution March 11.

These amendments, which were incorporated into the Honor Council bill, will change council jurisdiction so that all Honor Code cases come before a single Honor Council.

The body moved to return Roger Foushee's (SP) bills to revise the Student Council back to the Ways and Means Committee until action has been taken on the Honor Council Revision bill.

The wording of the Student Council bill is directly related to the type of Honor Council being used, and so it was suggested to hold the bill until the Honor Council revision had been settled.

Speaking on the Honor Council bill, Kit Whitehurst, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, said the bill was "moving too fast and expecting too much."

She said that Sonny Hallford, author of the bill, had considered asking the Student Legislature to veto the section concerning the single council for both men and women earlier yesterday afternoon.

Asserting the jury was being pushed into the background, she claimed the students would not know what they were voting for.

She said that she was very worried that they would not be cooperation among those people whose cooperation was vital in setting up the new judicial system.

Hallford said that, though he held certain personal reservations about the bill, he did sincerely believe that it could be put into operation.

Urging caution, he said the bill would take a great deal of work and it would be necessary to "educate; educate all, man and woman."

"I'm ready to fight for it," he said. Before it is over he stated he hoped that Kit Whitehurst and George Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, would join his side.

Gary Greer (SP) introduced a bill which says that, 'The IFC be directed by the President of the Student Body through the power hereby invested in him by the Student Legislature, to set the date of the formal 'rushing' period at some convenient time after the end of the fall semester of each year."

The bill goes into effect immediately after its passage.

After Tog Sanders (UP) and Al Lowenstein (guest) explained the need of the Legislature to concern itself with problems related to the international student community, it passed an appropriation of $250 to the African Medical Scholarship Trust Fund.

The bill originally only called for $125, but Gary Greer amended the bill so that the figure was doubled.

The Legislature passed bills introduced by Pat Adams (SP) to alter the composition of the selections board for the Editor of The Daily Tar Heel and to limit an editorial candidate's campaign expenses to $30.

Al Goldsmith's bill to give the Senior Class $500 to be used in the purchase of the class gift of a trophy case for Woollen Gym was passed.

Roger Foushee (SP) introduced resolutions to ratify US National Students Association's "policy on academic freedom" and declaration of the student's responsibilities and rights.

Ragsdale Lambasts Legislation

George Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, yesterday urged the student body to defeat the proposed joint honor council amendment.

The proposed constitutional change, which would alter the present judicial jurisdiction into a joint council system, must be approved by the student body before it becomes law.

Ragsdale's criticism of the controversial bill came after the legislature approved the proposal in a session Thursday night.

The Honor Council chairman termed it the "frivilous whim of idealistice reformers" . . . ." hasty and ill-conceived piece of legislation."

"The radicals have junked the whole judicial establishment which existed long before any of them were born," he said "In place of this, they have sought to impose a rather ridiculous substitute which does not guarantee the justice which the present system guarantees.

"The plan to mix men and women is unwise . . . . we must have two councils . . . and justice for all," he concluded.

Ragsdale appealed to the student body to take a "more sober view than taken by the proponents of this bill." He mentioned the fact that the only way the amendment can be prevented from becoming law for the student body to vote against it.

He said, "I am thankful that the student body will have the opportunity to send this proposal to the defeat it deserves.

Honor Court Suspends Student In Fraud Case

One boy has been suspended and nine others placed in indefinite probation by the Men's Honor Council in the latest trial of students involved in the false excuse scandal.

Geroge Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, said yesterday that the council has now completed trials of all students who have reported themselves as being involved in the faudulent use of class excuses.

The Council will now investigate students allegedly involved who have not reported themselves, Ragsdale said.

In commenting on the cases recently tried before the council, Ragsdale said all the students had turned themselves in. However, the boy suspended had lied to the council concerning his role as agent and distributor of false excuses.

The false excuse scandal was brought to the foreground during the Christmas holidays when the state newspapers picked up the story. The investigation of this scandal is continuing, Ragsdale said.

'Back To Methuselah' Sold Out: Only Standing Room Tickets Left

Capacity crowds will be in evidence in Memorial Hall tonight and tomorrow at 8:30 P.M., when The Carolina Playmakers sponsor The Theatre Guild-Arnold Moss presentation of Bernard Shaw's "Back to Methuselah."

The play, which stars Tyrone Power, Faye Emerson, and Arthur Treacher, comes to Chapel Hill on tour prior to a Broadway opening on March 24.

"Back to Methuselah" is Shaw's own admitted masterpiece on the subject of longevity. Originally produced in New York in 1922 as a series of three-evening performances, the excessively long play has been cut by Arnold Moss so that it will fit into a normal length evening's entertainment.

The play spans a period of time from The Garden of Eden to the year 31,958 A.D.

Featured in the cast are Valerie Bettis, Roger Evan Boxill and Arnold Moss. The six players will enact a total of 19 roles.

The highly successful eastern tour of this play with its all-star cast, is a pilot experiment for The Theatre Guild. The cast and crew are traveling by bus and truck, a new idea for speed and convenience for a touring company.

Although reserved seats for the production have been sold out since Wednesday, a limited number of standing room tickets will be sold at the Memorial Hall box office beginning at 7:00 p.m. on performance evenings.

Debaters Enter Boston Tourney

Five student debate teams from UNC will participate in three tournaments in Massachusetts, Maryland and North Carolina during the coming weekend.

Representing UNC at the 12th annual National Invitational Debate Tournament at Boston University will be John C. Brooks of Greenville and Thomas V. Long of Thomasville.

Richard P. Douthit, English instructor and debate advisor, will accompany the team to Boston as a judge.

Four students will go to College Park, Md. and Washington, D. C. for the Capitol Hill Debate Tournament, sponsored by the University of Maryland. David Evans of Fayetteville and Clay Simpson of Lexington, Ky. will form the affirmative team, and Carl Barrington and W. A. Willis Jr., both of Fayetteville, the negative.

The third weekend competition will be at Hickory in the South Atlantic Forensic Tournmament, held at Lenoir-Rhyne College. Miss

ACC Regular Season Title At Stake In Carolina-Duke Battle Tonight

Gala Mardi Gras Weekend Arrives

The King and Queen of Mardi Gras Weekend were disclosed today as final plans were being completed for the two-day activity that gets underway this afternoon.

Sharing the spotlight in the annual event are Bob Lassiter, senior from Monroe and a Phi Gamma Delta, and Patsy McCauley, senior Pi Beta Phi from Rocky Mount.

The couple were sponsored as candidates for the honor of being King and Queen of Mardi Gras by Phi Gamma Delta.

The disclosure came following tabulation of a penny vote held in Y court. Collections totaling $32.47 were turned over to the Campus Chest.

The royal pair will be crowned in ceremonies at the Mardi Gras Ball tonight at 10:30. Boudreau will present them with trophies.

Buddy Morrow Concert

The first event in the weekend Mardi Gras festivities will start today at 3 p.m. when Buddy Morrow and his Orchestra perform in concert at Gerrard Hall.

Morrow is best known for his recordings of "One Mint Julep" and "Night Train." His featured singer is Miss Betty Ann Blake.

Tonight from 8 o'clock to midnight the semi-formal Mardi Gras Ball will be held in the specially-decorated Tin Can. Morrow will play for the dance and during his breaks Miss Kack Anthony will provide more entertainment.

One corner of the Tin Can has been set aside for a radio and blackboard so students can tell at an instant the score of the Carolina-Duke game.

Saturday Activities

On Saturday, from 2 to 5 p.m. Carolina gentlemen will be able to show their dates the finer points of pool free of charge in Graham Memorial.

All the activities on the ground floor of Graham Memorial will be open to Mardi Gras ticket holders only. Free juke box music will be provided in the Rendezvous Room and the pool tables and ping pong equipment will be available.

A Bermuda dance will be held from 9 p.m. to midnight in Cobb Basement for students taking part in Mardi Gras festivities.

Mardi Gras Chairman Gerry Boudreau announced yesterday that tickets for the event will be available at the door before each event.

Tickets for both days' activities are three dollars and can be obtained in the Y Building, at GM's Information Desk and from members of the Mardi Gras Committee.

Winner Gets Top Tourney Seeding

By BILL KING

Top seeding for the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament March 3-8 will be at stake tonight in Duke Indoor Stadium when Carolina's defending national cage champions and Duke's veteran Blue Devils close out their regular season. Tipoff time is set for 8 o'clock.

A capacity crowd of 8,800 is assured for the traditional battle between the ancient Big Four and ACC rivals. The two clubs come into the contest bearing identical 10-3 records in conference competition and the winner of this one will clinch the regular season title, thus putting it in the supposedly weaker bracket of the tournament which will decide the ACC's NCAA representative.

Lost To Virginia

Until Tuesday night, the Blue Devils were the hottest team in the South, having won 11 straight. But the lowly Virginia Cavaliers cooled off Hal Bradley's veteran hardwood club, 70-68 in three overtimes. Carolina knocked off Maryland, 66-59 in its last outing Saturday.

This is the rubber game in a three-game series between Carolina and Duke. The Tar Heels clipped the Devils, 76-62 in the semi-finals of the Dixie Classic, but the Dukers came back with a resounding 91-75 victory in Chapel Hill during their winning streak.

The Tar Heels need a win tonight to assure them of at least a breakeven mark with every team in the conference. Their conference losses have been to Duke, Maryland and N.C. State. The Blue Devils have lost to Maryland, South Carolina and Virginia during the regular season.

Allen Uncertain

The big question mark for the Blue Devils tonight is senior guard Bucky Allen, team's second leading scorer with a 12.3 average. Allen has missed Duke's last two encounters due to illness and his status tonight is undetermined.

Should Allen be available, the Devils will put five starters on the floor who are hitting in the double figures. Jim Newcome eads the club with a 13.9 average, followed by Paul Schmidt (12.1), Bob Vernon (12) and Bobby Joe Harris (10.7). If Allen is not ready he'll be replaced by either Jack Boyd or Jerry Robertson.

Brennan Tops

Carolina will be paced by senior forward Pete Brennan, whose 21.3 average and 269 rebounds gives him the league lead in both departments and makes an almost sure bet for All-American honors. Right behind Brennan will be driving Tommy Kearns who has a 15.5 average, good for third place in the ACC. Aside from these two seniors, Frank McGuire will go with either senior Bob Cunningham (5.5) or sophomore Lee Shaffer (12.2) and sophomores Harvey

Chest Drive Ends Today

The Campus Chest total through last night was $850. According to Libby McCord, chairman, today will be the last day of the 1958 drive, only fund raising campaign during the school year.

As the goal has been set at $2,000 Campus Chest officials urge students to donate to the fund, which benefits the World University Service, the Goettingen student exchange and the national scholarship service.

Book-X Removes Tax On Bibles; Offers Refunds To Students

If you have recently purchased a Holy Bible from the University-operated Booketeria, you're in line for an 18-cent refund on your total purchase price of $6.18.

That was revealed here Thursday upon receipt of an Attorney General's ruling that the Bibles, despite the fact that they are text books, are exempt from an 18-cent state sales tax.

All Bibles Exempt

Book Stores Manager H. R. Ritchie announced the ruling after notification from the University Administration that the Attorney General's office in Raleigh had termed all Bibles exempt from the three per cent sales tax.

"The Attorney General's office advised us that Bibles sold at the Book-X are tax exempt," Ritchie said.

Investigation

An investigation into alleged violations of the state sales tax laws was begun two weeks ago today when The Daily Tar Heel questioned the three-per cent levy on Bibles sold through book stores at the University.

At the time, The Daily Tar Heel based a story on exemptions listed in "The Sales and Use Tax Report," an official state document which excludes, among other thing, fertilizer, coffins and Bibles from the sales tax.

With his announcement today, Ritchie said any student who purchased a Bible at the Booketeria and wants the 18-cent refund should bring the Bible to the book store.

Honor System Basis

Refunds will be made on an "honor system basis"—each student is "on his honor" to sign for the refund only when he has purchased a Bible—and the tax paid to the state by the Booketeria will later be recalled, Ritchie said.

However, he noted, if requests for refund surpass the amount paid in tax to the Department of Revenue it will become necessary for the Booketeria to check rolls in religion courses to determine who should receive the kickbacks.

Removes Tax

Thursday, when notice of the exemption was received, Ritchie instructed the book department "to take all taxes off Bibles, as such."

He said his office had had a former ruling "that all text books were taxable, and that is why we taxed Bibles."

"However," he added, "since this ruling, we will not tax any further. I think this points out a fine move on the part of The Daily Tar Heel to examine things on campus and help to keep all things straight."

Time Has Come To Defend Early Rushing Practices

Recent discussion about fraternity life has touched on virtually all areas of the Greek societies and, characteristically, most comment has centered around proposals to "improve" the organizations.

So long as rational thought is given to the so-called problems, and so long as circumstances do exist which need correcting, we count ourselves among the first to offer remedies. But there comes a time when certain fraternity practices merit defense.

Specifically, we refer to proposals in the wind now to delay rushing until the spring semester — that is, wait four and one-half months after the opening of school for fraternities to seek members for their organizations.

Elsewhere on today's editorial page appears comment from the Duke Chronicle discussing problems encountered there when sororities delayed rushing until the second semester. It should be read by those who advocate that practice.

However, defense for early rushing—beginning several weeks after school opens in the fall — is far more sweeping than only those factors which the Chronicle has pointed out. These factors should be enumerated to further defend the practice.

First, those who are quickest to criticize early rush generally number among those who are unfamiliar with it. There certainly is no sin adjoined to non-membership in a fraternity—but those who are Greek members are in a position to know a great deal more about rush than are the so-called dormitory men.

It seems peculiar to us that persons who never have sat in a chapter meeting — persons who have not experienced long hours of discussion, supporting and opposing a particular rushee—should know so much about the intricacies of this particular fraternity program.

Second, admitting that fraternity men are much closer to the problems of rush than are non-Greeks, it becomes ridiculous to revolutionize the rush program at the whims of politicians who for the most part are generally unfamiliar with the practice.

If, in fact, the legislature holds the power to determine when rush will be held, its members should be fully aware of all the economic and social problems attached thereto. Unfortunately, this understanding comes only with membership in a fraternity.

It is with these facts in mind that we say non-fraternity men should not dictate to the Greek societies how or when their rush practices should be conducted.

Third, it would be utter folly to generalize in a statement that fraternities frequently "miss" good rushees due to the earliness of the rush program—a key argument for critics of the practice. For this reason, some say, the rush program should be delayed.

The truth is that many letters and expensive long-distance telephone calls are consistently employed to investigate an unknown rushee who, on his first visits to a house during rush week, impresses the fraternity men who are his hosts. The rushee is given every chance — at the expense of the chapter.

Nor do many potential rushees come to the University totally unknown to fraternity men at UNC. So far-reaching are alumni and friends of the local chapters that annually countless numbers of letters of recommendation are received by the local chapters. Because of this practice it is doubtful that many candidates pass unnoticed from one house to another.

Fourth, it is unfair for high school and prep school graduates who have the means and desire to join a fraternity to prohibit them from membership during a period which is the most formative of their college career. Too, the time from early September to mid-January is a period when fraternities provide a world of social activities for those counted among their numbers.

To eliminate persons from that membership for a period of four and one-half months, to deny a desired social outlet for those with means to afford it, to bypass close relations with younger men during a most important period of their college life—these are totally untair and a detriment to the fraternity system.

The economic aspect of early rush already has been discussed on this page. Suffice it to say that a fraternity is a business—and to operate with efficiency it must have sufficient resources to cover its expenses. This problem becomes acute when dinner places are vacant and beds remain idle at a fraternity house.

So important to the fraternity system is early rush that one column could scarcely but touch on the various factors upholding the practice. And it is a practice which should be viewed in all its aspects before the axe is dropped by the student legislature.

Before that axe is dropped, it behooves our legislators to educate in the matter of fraternity rush practices the hands which will guide its direction.

The Right To Own, Despite The UAW

Apparently the United Auto Workers Union isn't quite so clean as bre'r Reuther would hope for the layman to believe.

Now that the extended strike at the Kohler Co. is being aired by the Senate Rackets Committee, at least two have testified they experienced violence and intimidation at the hands of union members.

One of the men against whom the allegation was made was none other than Jess Ferrazza, UAW international officer.

It's acts like these which bring out our sympathy for the non-striking workers, and demand respect for the man who has kept his plant running despite great effort and expense of the UAW.

It would be well in all areas of American business if the owner could retain at least a little say-so in the operation of his enterprise—often developed after personal sacrifice and diligent work.

That's a surprise. We were unaware that Nixon, despite his many talents, even knew how to play golf.

Thoughts Turn To Politics, Ike & Harry

By WHIT WHITFIELD

Anyone who has opened the Daily Tar Heel in class to find that the crossword puzzle has been omitted, and has been forced to READ the drivel in this column rather than take notes, will know that we never make political comments except in the most non partisan manner. We have no affinity for politics in any fashion. Therefore we leave that choice subject for the more intelligent columnists.

However, we do make mental notes of current events as our political colleagues read and interpret the news pages for us.

For instance, just last week former President Harry S. made another one of his "Give 'em hell" Speeches in which he soundly thrashed the GOP and its standard bearer, Dwight D.

Eisenhower, upon his arrival in Washington, after a ten day vacation in Georgia and a trip to Phoenix, Arizona (To escort Mamie to a "Plush beauty-health resort" as the U.P. termed it.) urged Americans to use "courage and common sense" in fighting the current business slump, and not to listen to "men of little faith and of little spirit."

Harry S. was not caught napping, however. In typical Truman fashion, he replied that "There are men of little faith and little spirit and all of them are in the Republican Party. "Talk about Touches, Truman must be the "Fastest Blade Alive." Hagerty and Eisenhower had so much trouble getting the blade out that they didn't have time to reply. It was not known at press time whether the blade were removed without surgery, or how soundly the President slept.

This whole affair reminded us of a recent network news cast in which a despondent father, out of work for some time, and at his wits end, had this to day about Ike's soothing words on the "slump."

"I hope President Eisenhower is right about this slump being temporary. I've borrowed all the money I can from my friends to feed my kids, but they're still hungry. I don't know what to do now."

"By The Way, Who Appoints Those Fellows?"

EDITORIAL COMMENT

U.S. Has Confidence In What?

Stripped of non-essentials, the Administration's program for coping with the recession consists of three tactical maneuvers: "to build up confidence" by brisk, frequent, optimistic statements carefully orchestrated for effect; to make additional money—an estimated $500,000,000—available for commercial and industrial loans by reducing the reserves required to be held against demand deposits; and in the meantime, to maintain a "wait and see" attitude (until mid-April, at least) in the hope that "the crisis of confidence" will dissipate. But the only confidence that the program has aroused is a general confidence that it will not be enough. The day after the President predicted an upturn by March, the stock market took a dip. No lines have formed to apply for commerical and industrial loan; on the contrary, time deposits are up and industrial loans are down—by $100,000,000 since the first of the year, nearly twice the decline in the comparable period for last year. Nor have such vaguely-voiced expedients as new postoffice construction or increased highway and defense spending reversed the current state of mind.

But this is not to imply that the public is wholly lacking in confidence. Editorial surveys would indicate that the public is confident that the Administration has not done enough, but that it would never "allow" so much as a significant pause in the boom. In a word, the public has confidence that the current recession need not, and should not, be permitted to turn into a major depression. This confidence is a favorable factor in itself; it did not exist in 1929, much less in 1932. But it will only be justified if the politicians, recognizing what the public expects of them, present programs based on today's economic realities. If the Administration fails to sustain this confidence, the public mood in the distressed areas could turn ugly and desperate quicker than you can say Herbert Hoover. —The Nation.

WOLFF PRACTICING

To The Editor:

Mr. Wolff is doing very well in trying to sound like George Jean Nathan and I think it is so fortunate he has a column to practice in. Do I understand that he is so churlish as to demand that the Petites Dramatiques be scuttled just because they don't sound exactly like the Theatre Guild?

I am sure many people greatly appreciated the opportunity of being able to see "The Cocktail Party." I thought they did an excellent job and I hope they continue to bring us all the most difficult plays which professionals, forced to consider that unpleasant subject money, would never dare.

Raleigh has more than an ordinary interest in the conflict that has developed between the State Board of Higher Education and the Board of Trustees of the Greater University.

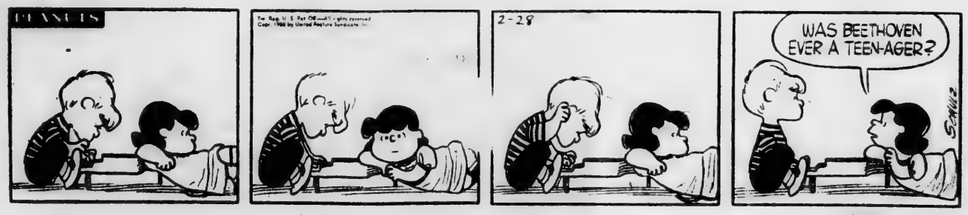
Deeply involved is the question of which group is to be the big shot, which group will have the authorty of lord and master in the problem of housing for married students at State College. There has been a heavy increase of married students in the colleges as compared with past years. These people are out to get an education and they are going to attain their goal, board or no board.

Institutions which are operated by the State should accept the responsibility of housing for these young people who come to the colleges. No longer can the issue be dodged. The time has come when the old clique of "Leave the wives at home" will answer no questions and bring no solutions. The young men are coming to college, and anybody who has had the slightest exposure to the youth of today knows that they are going to bring their wives with them.

At one time trailer camps apparently took care of an emergency problem. This type of living is now completely outmoded and beyond recall. Nobody in their right mind is going to ask even a student to live, study and in most cases do outside work as a helping hand, under such crowded and cramped conditions.

Speaking at Greensboro at a meeting of the University's Board of Trustees, Representative W. C. Harris, member of the Legislature from Wake County, and a trustee, put his finger squarely on the issue when he declared: "We may have reached the point where either we do not need this board of trustees or we do not need the board of higher education. I am afraid we are getting too much bureaucracy."

The Raleigh lawmaker continued that only a few relatively unimportant conflicts have appeared involving Woman's College and Chapel Hill, but he stressed that the matter of State College dormitories is "very important."



Harris is dead right. The question of dormitories at State College is vital, especially to the City of Raleigh. Students who attend State College and bring their families along have not only become a part of the life of the community, but they also contribute heavily to its economy. They take part in the city's cultural life, live and buy things of all kinds from local merchants most of the year, thus giving the cash register a merrier ring.

The highly important question, however, is that of who is to run what. If the Board of Higher Education is to exist then there should be no conflict, no brawling with the institutions which it has been created to succor.

At a time when there is a crying need for educated people, scientists, teachers and a dozen other categories where book learning creates the foundation, it is pure silly for the people in high places to be in disagreement as to the operational functions of the colleges and schools.

With about one in four of every student on the State College campus enjoying marital bliss the responsibility for giving them decent housing rests with the state. The hour is here for the Board of Trustees and the Board of Higher Education to get together and settle this problem, as well as any other that may develop, in peace and harmony. And in doing this the welfare of the students should have A-1 preference.

WHICH SEMESTER RUSH

First Or Second?

(Following is an editorial from the Duke Chronicle, arguing in favor of early rush for sororities. It is of interest here in view of recent sentiment for late fraternity rushing at the University.)

It didn't live up to expectations. Second semester rushing was hailed by some as a means of putting sororities in their proper place. It was to allow freshmen time to make their adjustment to campus life while taking an objective look at sororities.

However, this year's rush accomplished none of these aims and brought forth many unexpected complications. Dirty rushing, which could not be called dirty officially because only the spirit of the rules was broken, became a common first semester practice. As several sorority women commented, "It's bad enough having to rush for three weeks, but when you have to rush five months extra, it's really awful." Such an attitude on the part of sorority members completely defeated any attempt at normal relations.

Objectivity among freshmen was another failure of the new system. Instead of entering rush with an open and informed mind, freshmen had, in many cases, narrowed their choices to a few "top" sororities; the other went unconsidered. Other rushees had formed such close friendships within their dormitories that their choices were limited to those of their friends. Meanwhile, many of the sororities were concentrating on the same relatively small portion of the freshman class. Because of these problems and the fact that second semester rush did not decrease the excess importance attached to sorority membership by freshmen, tension and hurt feelings were more abundant than before.

It will be up to the Administration to decide when next year's rushing will take place. If it takes into careful consideration the whole situation, it can only decide on the return to first semester.

After Sleepless Nights

Mardi Gras Weekend Is Here!

By CHARLIE SLOAN

Mardi Gras Weekend will finally get underway this afternoon after months of planning, frustration and sleepless nights preparing decorations.

This morning, as the deadline approached, members of the decorations committee finished their second, and for some the third, all night session of spreading out yards of crepe paper and hanging it in the Tin Can.

Changes Made

Changes in the events were made right up to the last minute. Wednesday afternoon the location of the concert was changed from the Tin Can to Gerrard Hall. Members of the Circle Nine declined the invitation to sing during Buddy Morrow's breaks at the dance because most of them already had dates for tonight — to the Mardi Gras.

Yesterday afternoon fireproofing on the two big signs was just getting underway, several sections of the ceiling panels still hadn't been prefabbed, and the committee couldn't get into the Tin Can until 6 p. m. to put up the decorations.

But Mardi Gras Chairman Gerry Boudreau and Vice Chairman Jim Moenzel were still optimistic. "We'll have it up in time for the dance.

Working Full Time

While Boudreau and Menzel were running around making sure of the final arrangements, Decorations Chairman Jim Vance and his committee, Bud Gardner, Roy Wood, Guy Ellis, Bruce Pearson, Charlie Sloan, Harold Johnson, John Dalton, Andy Vanore, Frank Smith and Ted Williams were working full time on the crepe paper walls and ceiling the Tin Can will be sporting for the dance.

When everybody else closed their offices and became available for final - arrangement making, Boudreau and Menzel joined the crepe paper crew in Graham Memorial.

Tonight from 8 to midnight the fruit of the group's labors will provide the atmosphere for what should be Carolina's biggest social weekend.

The dance is open to everybody and the dress is dark suits and ties. Three dollars for an estimated $15 worth of entertainment is a good buy anywhere.

GMAB Petites Musicales Set This Wednesday At 8 O'clock

The Petites Musicales of GMAB will present a recital of music for the harpischord and viola on Wednesday, March 5, featuring Paul Doktor and Raphael Puyana. The performance will be in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m.

Doktor, a native of Vienna, Austria, is the son of the late Karl Doktor, co-founder and first violist of the famous Busch Quartet, and with whom the young Doktor studied from the age of five.

He graduated from the State Academy of Mupsic in Vienna and while still in his teens played violin with the Adolf Busch chamber orchestra touring England, Belgium and Switzerland.

Doktor was awarded the unanimous first prize at the International Music competition in Geneva and became the first violist ever so honored.

His interesting and varied programs fully utilize the reportoire of his instrument, and his performance of classical, romantic and contemporary compositions have proven the viola no longer the "step child" of the string instruments.

Doktor has been a resident of the United States since 1947 and records exclusively for Westminister Records as well as performing regular summer and early fall tours of Austria, France, Italy, Switzerland and Scandinavia.

He has been responsible for introducing much American music to European audiences.

Wednesday night's program will include a harpischord and viola duet performance of Pietro Locatelli's Sonata in G Minor and a viola solo of Alfred Pochon's Passacaille.

Petites Musicales is open without charge to the public.

SCIENCE MADE SIMPLE: NO. 2

Though this column is intended solely as a vehicle for well-tempered drollery, the makers of Marlboro have agreed to let me use this space from time to time for a short lesson in science. They are the most decent and obliging of men, the makers of Marlboro, as anyone can tell from sampling their product. Only from bounteous hearts could come such a lot to like—such filter, such flavor, such flip-top box. The filter works; the flavor pleases; the box protects. Who can resist such a winning combination? Surely not I.

Today let us take up the science of medicine, which was invented in 1066 by a Greek named Hippocrates. He soon gathered around him a group of devoted disciples whom he called "doctors." The reason he called them "doctors" was that they spent all their time sitting around the dock and shooting the breeze. In truth, there was little else for them to do because disease was not invented until 1477.

After that, doctors became very busy, but it must be admitted that their knowledge of medicine was lamentably meagre. They knew only one treatment—a change of climate. For example, a French doctor would send all his patients to Switzerland. A Swiss doctor, on the other hand, would send all his patients to France. By 1789 the entire population of France was living in Switzerland, and vice versa. This later became known as the Black Tom Explosion.

Not until 1924 did medicine, as we know it, come into being. In that year in the little Bavarian village of Pago-Pago an elderly physician named Winko Sigafoos discovered the hot water bottle. He was, of course, burned as a witch, but his son Lydia, disguised as a linotype, made his way to America where he invented the Mayo Brothers.

Medicine, as it is taught at your very own college, can be divided roughly into two classifications. There is internal medicine, which is the treatment of interns, and external medicine, which is the treatment of externs.

Diseases also fall into two broad categories—chronic and acute. Chronic disease is, of course, inflammation of the chron, which can be mighty painful, believe you me! Last summer my cousin Haskell was stricken with a chron attack while he was out picking up tinfoil, and it was months before the wretched boy could straighten up. In fact, even after he was cured, Haskell continued to walk around bent over double. This went on for several years before Dr. Caligari, the lovable old country practitioner who treats Haskell, discovered that Haskell had his trousers buttoned to his vest.

Two years ago Haskell had Addison's disease. (Addison, curiously enough, had Haskell's.) Poor Haskell catches everything that comes along. Lovable old Dr. Caligari once said to him, "Son, I guess you are what they call a natural born catcher."

"The joke is on you, Doc," replied Haskell. "I am a third baseman." He thereupon fell into such a fit of giggling that the doctor had to put him under sedation, where he is to this day.

But I digress. We were discussing medicine. I have now told you all I can; the rest is up to you. Go over to your med school and poke around. Bring popcorn and watch an operation. X-ray each other. Contribute to the bone bank . . . And remember, medicine can be fun!

Salz and (10.7) and Dick Kepley (4.7).

Both of these clubs are of the speedy variety. The Blue Devil's specialty is the fast break and the Tar Heels have proven capable of playing it either slow or fast. Both clubs will probably start with a zone but a man to man seems inevitable before the contest is over.

The Carolina and Duke freshman start the night's program with a preliminary contest at 6 o'clock.

UNC Well Represented At Mock UN Assembly

UNC was well represented at a mock United Nations Assembly held last weekend in Greensboro under sponsorship of the Methodist Student Movement in North Carolina.

Carolina joined other Wesley Foundations throughout the state in sending delegations to the three-day meeting. The local group, composed of seven students, split in two parts, representing France and Syria.

Students from 12 North Carolina Wesley Foundations assembled at West Market Street Methodist Church, representing 18 United Nations members.

Students of 11 nationalities participated in the program.

Al Lowenstein, UNC grad student, was keynote speaker Friday night.

Bills passed by the mock assembly, according to Larkin Kirkman, president of the local Wesley Foundation, included:

A resolution that the secretary general establish within the Secretariat a police force to be composed of not more than one fourth of the Security Council.

A resolution requiring Israel to withdraw within its original boundaries as set by the United Nations within one year.

A resolution seeking the end of the Algerian-French conflict through a police force and a mediation commission.

A resolution to settle Arab refugees in permanent homes and repay them for confiscated property.

Debate

Joanne Aldridge, part-time instructor in English, will accompany the teams as judge.

Affirmative team is composed of Alan Sugar of Lumberton and Bill Limeberry of Mebane, while the negative team has John Snyder of Charlotte and Taylor McMillan of Parkton.

All five teams will be debating the national intercollegiate topic: "Revolved, that the requirement of membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment should be illegal."

The Boston team, Brooks and Long, will debate both sides of the questions, presenting three debates as a negative team, three as an affirmative team.

Debate competition will, continue in New York City next week, when two UNC teams will take part in the 11th annual Brooklyn College Invitational Debate Tournament at Brooklyn College on March 7-8. Composing UNC teams then will be Brooks, Long, McMillan and Willis.

Duke Has Home Court Advantage Tonite

If a favorite is to be established tonight in the big game in Durham, it will have to be Duke simply because the Devils are playing on their own home court.

The two clubs are about as evenly matched as you can get them but the Blue Devils have proved down through the years that they are plenty tough to handle in Duke Indoor Stadium. Hal Bradley's club has a phenomenal record on its home court.

Carolina is playing much better basketball now than it was when the Devils came to Woollen Feb. 8 and stomped the Tar Heels 91-75. The McGuiremen were at their best in their last two games. They have beat N.C. State (81-69) and Maryland (66-59) in the last 10 days and many observers feel they are ready to offer strong defense of their ACC title come next Thursday.

Most Carolina fans will probably have to hear the game on the radio since there was only a small allotment of tickets in Chapel Hill. The Duke Chronicle has also urged Duke students to hold onto their passbooks to keep Carolina students out of the student section. Thus the home crowd factor will certainly be going for the Blue Devils tonight.

Fast Break Battle Expected

More than likely tonight's scramble will be a battle of the fast breaks. Frank McGuire will probably wait to see if Bradley is going to have his club on the move and then pattern his defense accordingly.

It is reasonable to assume the Blue Devils won't hold onto the ball very much. The Devils like to shoot and they like to run. The Tar Heels have proved that they are capable of doing either, thus the first move will probably be left to Duke.

Loss Of Moe Was Tremendous Jolt

It is amazing how much the loss of one athlete can hurt a team. The team we're speaking of is Ken Rosemond's freshman basketball team, the athlete is Doug Moe.

Moe because ineligible at the end of last semester due to scholastic difficulties. Until he left the team the Tar Babies had won eight and lost one, but the loss of Moe cut right into the heart of the Tar Babies' scoring punch and since then they have won but two while losing seven.

Rosemond is probably happy that tonight is the last game for his club. With a 10-8 record now, he will not finish with a losing season. But he must wonder just what he could have done at full strength.

Kenny has done a fine job with the freshmen. He had only three scholarship boys with which to work at the start and the loss of Moe presented an almost insuperable problem. Nevertheless, the frosh have been hustling and have lost a number of heartbreakers that could have gone either way. Neither he nor his boys should feel badly about the season. They have given their best. Incidentally, rumor has it that next year's freshman squad will be "loaded."

Sports Jamboree Seems Like Good Thing

The Grail and the Intramural Department are to be congratulated for their efforts to promote better relationship between the dorms and fraternities.

The sports jamboree scheduled for March 4-5 between the dorms and the fraternities is a step in the right direction. More harmony between the two units of campus life is needed and this seems like a good way to get it.

It is our hope that the jamboree is a tremendous success. If it works this year, it may become an annual thing and each year it should get bigger and better. Full cooperation with the Grail and Mural Dept. will go a long way in making this one of the outstanding events on the Carolina campus.

Frosh Tackle Blue Imps At Six Tonight

Blue Imps Hold 3-0 Advantage

By BILL KING

If it's any consolation ,the Carolina Tar Babies can't finish the basketball season with a losing record and tonight they could end the year with an 11-8 record.

Coach Ken Rosemond's club goes against the Duke Blue Imps in a 6 o'clock preliminary before the big varsity tilt with a 10-8 record and the Tar Babies have several good reasons for wanting to win the finale.

First of all, they haven't beaten Duke in three games this season. Secondly, they'd like to end the season on a good note because that was the tune they were playing when the season began. The Tar Babies won eight of their first nine games but the loss of scoring ace Doug Moe sent them into a nosedive which they are still trying to straighten out. The frosh have lost seven of their last nine contests.

Duke Dominates

The Blue Imps have dominated the Tar Babies all year long. They hold victories of 71-68, 80-55 and 69-67 over the Carolina frosh. The Tar Babies have beaten only Atlantic Christian and Pfeiffer since midseason.

Against Big Four competition, the Tar Babies have a winning record only with Wake Forest. They are 2-1 against the Deacletts, 0-3 against Duke and 0-3 against the N. C. State frosh.

Big man for the Carolina yearling tonight will probably be forward Lou Brown who has taken over the scoring burden since Moe left the team. Along with Brown at forward will be Bill Hart. The rest of the lineup will probably have Hugh Donahue at center ,and Bill Dunlap and either Roland Longenecker or Tam Shuford at the guards.

The Tar Babies are up for this one. They pressed the Imps right down to the wire in their last meeting as a last second goal gave Duke the victory.

Carolina-Duke Scores Up 'Til Game Tonite

Here's the way Carolina and Duke have done during the basketball season.

For the entire season Carolina has beaten Clemson (79-55), George Washington (86-59), Furman (91-74), South Carolina (70-58), Minnesota (73-67), St. Louis (63-48), Duke (76-62), N. C. State (39-30), Wake Forest (71-45), William & Mary (79-63), Virginia (82-66), Clemson (90-81), South Carolina (115-88), Wake Forest (70-67), Virginia (73-66), N.C. State (81-69), and Maryland (66-59).

The Tar Heels have lost to West Virginia (75-64), Maryland (74-61), N.C. State (58-57), Duke (91-75), and Notre Dame (89-70).

Duke's victories this season have come over Clemson (79-66), Villanova (60-53), Seaton Hall (69-62), Wake Forest (79-75), New York University (67-60), N. C. State (76-75), West Virginia (72-68), Virginia (88-71), Wake Forest (70-56), South Carolina (61-49), Clemson (73-57), North Carolina (91-73), N. C. State (65-48), Wake Forest (71-59), Navy (77-63), and Maryland (68-59).

Wood Track; Lower Times

One of the most interesting things that will come as a result of the ACC games being held here Saturday will probably be the noticeable difference in the times of the longer running events as compared to last year.

Here, these events are run on a banked wood track whereas at the State "Cowplace," the track was dirt with no bank. On a tenth of a mile track the difference can mean many seconds especially in the mile and 2-mile.

Good examples of this difference were the mile and two-mile events last year. Former Carolina All-American Jim Beatty and Maryland's great Burr Grim ran in both of these events, and each time Beatty came out on top by a few yards. Both were great runs, and judging from Beatty's ability, had the event been on wood, ACC records would have fallen.

Wood it is Saturday, and Grim is back. With competition like Carolina's Everett Whatley and Wayne Bishop, and South Carolina's Billy Latham, the favored Grim will be pushed hard. A "pushed" Grim and a "wood track may be the solution for breaking two records.

UNC Wins 1500-Meter; Big Action Today

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The main part of the action in the ACC swimming championships gets underway here this afternoon and tonight, with the prelims set for 2:30 and the finals at 7:30.

Only one event was held last night, the 1500 meter race, and it was won by Carolina's Tony Schiffman with a time of 20:11.8. Schiffman started fast and led all the way, never being threatened. In Schiffman's heat, the second, the top four swimmers all beat the winner of the first heat.

The complete rundown is as follows: 1. Tony Schiffman, (UNC); 2. Bob Adams, (NCS); 3. Guy Langer, (Duke); 4. Armstrong, (UVa.); 5. Robert Talbert, (WF); 6. Allen Elmore, (Clemson). Talbert and Elmore both competed in the first heat. Schiffman knocked off two full minutes of Talbert's winning time.

The preliminaries (2:30) and finals (7:30) in the following events will be held today in Bowman Gray memorial pool: 200 butterfly, 50 dash, 200 back, 220 freestyle, 100 breaststroke, low diving, and 400 relay.

Dick Fagden of N.C. State will defend two of his championships tonight, the 100 breast and 200 butterfly.

Bill Roth of Carolina will be trying to maintain his championship in the 50-yard dash, and the Carolina champion 400-medley relay team of Roth, Walt Rose, Tony Schiffman and Brent Nash will defend their crown in the final event.

The Tar Heels, with an outstanding record, are favored to keep many of the championships here in Chapel Hill, in addition to adding a few new ones. The squad had an 8-0 conference record, an 11-0 season record, and an unbeaten skein of 21 extending over two seasons. The roster includes five all-Americans: Bill Eckgraf, Mac Mahaffey, Rose, Roth, and Schiffman.

The team most likely to either upset Carolina's aces or win on their own merits are the Duke Blue Devils, runnersup in the conference standings. The Devils feature Kenneth Whitney and Steve Young in the sprints and Emmet Pace in the backstroke.

Maryland has perhaps the two best divers in the conference in Stapler Shields and Robert Kohl, in addition to a fine sprinter in Ray Asenfelt and a good medley man in John Bell.

Duke Takes Regular Season Title With 59-46 Win Over UNC

By BILL KING

DURHAM—Duke's clever and speedy Blue Devils won top seeding in the Atlantic Coast Conference Tourney here last night by handing the Carolina Tar Heels a 59-46 defeat in Duke Indoor Stadium.

The victory enabled the Blue Devils to dethrone the Tar Heels as regular season ACC champs and take a 2-1 advantage in the series between the two clubs. It was the regular season finale for both.

11-3 Record

The Methodist finished the season with an 11-3 conference mark, the Tar Heels were 10-4. Both ended the season with 17-6 overall records.

Last night's fiasco, which erupted in a mild riot at the end, was a repetition of the Carolina-Duke game in Chapel Hill when the Blue Devils took over early in the second half and completely romped over the Chapel Hillians.

Such was the story last night. The Devils left the floor at halftime with a 26-23 edge after a see-saw battle that saw the lead change hands six times. After 3:25 of the second half the Dukes held a 32-27 lead but the Tar Heels came back to close the gap to 34-32 with 15:45 left. The Blue Devils, who went all the way with Bucky Allen, Bobby Vernon, Paul Schmidt, Bobby Joe Harris and Jim Newcome, then began to pull away.

Increase Lead

With 12:30 left, Schmidt hit one up under to give Duke a 39-32 lead. One minute later it was 42-32 and Carolina had seen its last chance. The Devils were able to maintain a comfortable lead the rest of the way.

With Duke leading 49-41 with 4:50 left the Tar Heels finally switched from their zone defense to a man to man and the Dukes went into a freeze. A few moments later Duke found it could penetrate the new defense and did so with remarkable efficency.

Carolina was as cold as Duke was hot in the second stanza and the Blue Devils were able to keep control of the ball most of the way. Statistics at halftime had Duke shooting 42.3 and Carolina 31.4. Final stats showed Duke with a 55.8 percentage and Carolina 29.7. Carolina outrebounded, 35-34.

Brennan Off

The main deficit in the Carolina attack was the inaccuracy of All-American candidate Pete Brennan. Brennan shot 14 times from the floor and hit only two. He hit six of 10 from the line for a total of 10, far below his 21 plus average.

Mainstay in the Carolina offense was sophomore guard Harvey Salz. Hustling Harv hit 16 and kept the 'Heels alive in the first half. Tommy Kearns followed Brennan with eight.

Everyone of the Devils hit in the double figures. Vernon led the way with 16. Allen, Schmidt and Newcome all had 11 and Allen got 10.

The game was remarkably clean with only 31 fouls being committed. Carolina hit 8 of 13 and Duke had 11 of 18.

Fight Climaxes

The outbreak at the closing gun was a conglomeration of students bunched together at halfcourt. A few licks were passed, necessitating police assistance. It was a full 15 minutes before the floor could be cleared. The Carolina team remained on its bench for about that length of time following the game.

Duke now will play the eighth team in the conference in the supposedly weaker bracket while the Tar Heels get "tough bracket" competition, opening first with the seventh place team.

Honor Council Chairmen Launch Attack On Legislation Revising UNC Courts

Kit Whitehurst Hits Proposal

Kit Whitehurst, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, charged yesterday that the proposed combination of honor councils will neither strengthen the Honor System nor provide fairer trials.

In a statement issued yesterday, she said, "It is wildly unrealistic to assume that joining the councils will strengthen the Honor System in any way."

"It is also my firm conviction that instead of providing fairer trials, a combined council will prove seriously detrimental to the fair sentencing of the individuals brought before it," she added.

Miss Whitehurst joined George Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor [illegible] tional amendment. Students will vote on the change in an election March 11.

She observed that the issue of the combination was not being observed in its proper context. She defined the context as "the effect such a change would have on the teaching and carrying out of justice on this campus."

Ragsdale Says 'It Won't Work'

The Chairman of the Men's Honor Council charged Friday that Attorney General Sonny Hallford "urges caution" and has "serious reservations" about his own bill to revamp the judiciary here.

Council Chairman George Ragsdale said Hallford considered "within the past 48 hours asking the student legislature to veto the section concerning the mixed council."

If made constitutional by a campus-wide vote, the new judicial system would provide only one court for Honor Code violations. There now are separate courts for men and women students.

"Are we expected to follow this disconcerted leadership?" Ragsdale asked. "Is there reservation about the proposal by the persons who have publicly supported the measure in the legislature.

"If those who wrote this bill do not wish to give it their unqualified support, then they should have withdrawn it before the student legislature placed faith in their insecure leadership," Ragsdale added.

Statement

His entire statement follows:

"Certain advocates of the bill to provide for a mixed Honor Council are not acting in the manner of leaders who seriously believe in their own program. The Attorney General has called for support for his bill, but publicly "urges caution" and states that he has "serious reservations" about his own proposal.

"He has stated to Kit Whitehurst, Chairman of the Women's Honor Council, that he cosidered within the past 48 hours asking the Student Legislature to veto the section concerning the mixed council. I have heard several rumors that certain members of the Attorney General's staff will resign if the proposal goes through.

Rumors

"These are rumors. The Assistant Attorney General is not wholeheartedly behind the bill. And less than ten days ago, Student Body President Eli Evans made this statement to me: "I hope we haven't created an ogre" . . . referring to the bill. Unfortunately, there were no witnesses present.

"The point is this: are we expected to follow this disconcerted leadership? If the Attorney General has "serious reservations," then he and I share a common fear. If those who wrote this bill do not wish to give it their unqualified support, then they should have withdrawn it before the Student Legislature placed faith in their insecure leadership.

Won't Work

"Ideally, they have a good plan, but it won't work. Maybe they are about to realize that fact. If so, they ought to explain themselves. The student body cannot be expected to follow them as the Legislature has done. I am appalled at the actions of my friends in this matter."

Campus-Wide Vote Set March 11 On Proposed Honor Council Bill

The Honor Council Revision bill, which the Student Legislature had spent a total of eight hours considering at previous meetings, passed with a voice vote Thursday evening.

The Legislature came to a final vote after hearing Kit Whitehurst, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, speak against the bill and Sonny Hallford, Student Body Attorney-General, speak for it.

The campus will vote March 11 on amendments to the Student Constitution which will institute a single council for both men and women, if passed.

The Student Council revision bill was sent back to the ways and means committee because the wording of the bill is closely connected with the outcome of the Honor Council revision.

Discriminatory Clauses

Roger Foushee (SP) introduced resolutions to ratify the U. S. National Students Association's "policy on academic freedom" and declaration of the student's responsibilities and rights.

The "Basic Policy Declaration Student Bill of Responsibilities and Rights" contains a section which Foushee termed, "probably one of the more controversial points."

In part this section says, "the constitution (of any student organization) or purposes shall not include discriminatory clauses as to race or as to religion except where the avowed purpose of the organization is to bring together members of one specific religious purpose."

Foushee said his resolution ratified what the U. S. National Students Association had done at a convention.

Financial Bills

The passage of the two money bills, $250 for the African Medical Scholarship Trust Fund and $500 for the Senior Class trophy case, left the unappropriated surplus with $365.63 to last the rest of the semester.

Any other money which the Legislature spends will have to come from the General Surplus, which has been accumulated through the years and totals around $15,000.

Pat Adams (SP) introduced a bill to enable The Daily Tar Heel to keep any profits it makes rather than returning them to the General Surplus.

Harold O'Tuel (SP), chairman of the publications board, introduced a bill to appropriate $650 to the Carolina Quarterly.

Chest Drive Extended Through Wednesday

The Campus Chest Drive has been extended until Wednesday because it has not yet reached its quota of $2,000. As of Friday it had only reached $850.

"If every student on the campus would just give 29 cents we would be able to make our quota," said Libby McCord, co-chairman of the Campus Chest committee.

So far the majority of the amount has come from such sources as the faculty, the graduate students, one men's dorm, three sororities and two fraternities.

Old East, which houses 100 men, gave $50; a group of three sororities gave $250; one fraternity gave one dollar per member; and another fraternity sold its television set and gave the money collected from the sale to the drive.

The Campus Chest issued the following statment: "This is a united appeal to each student to help students within similar university communities throughout the world.

"It is the only fund drive on the campus, and we began with the presupposition that every student would want to give. Last year $1,500 was raised. We can certainly raise $500 more this year. A contribution which would amount to the cost of a milkshake or half the price of admission to a movie is all the Campus Chest asks of each student."

23 Children Die

PRESTONSBURG, Ky., Feb. 28 (AP)—A loaded school bus hit a wrecker and an auto on a lonely mountain road today and dropped into a rain-swollen river, apparently carrying 23 children and the driver to their deaths.

Sixteen others, some "pushing, shoving and screaming," fled through an emergency door and windows before the bus sank into 30 feet of water.

The National Safety Council called it the worst highway accident involving children in the nation's history.

Russian Proposal

WASHINGTON, Feb 2.8 (AP)—Russia proposed to the United States today procedures for arranging a summit conference on East-West tensions.

The State Department disclosed this tonight but declined to give any details.

However, Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Menshikov had told the Associated Press in an interview two days ago that in the Soviet view preliminary preparations should be concerned mainly with such matters as deciding the time, place and participants and possibly the question of what should be discussed.

AFROTC Dedicates 'Tigers' Den' Lounge

Gen. Frederick C. Shepard officially opened the new Air Force ROTC cadet lounge Tuesday night by making the dedication address before the detachment officers and a large representation of the cadet corps.

The cadet commander, Cadet Colonel Thomas Farrell, first introduced Lt. Col. Franklin Swann, the professor of air science, who pointed out that the lounge was comparable to an officers club on an air base, and that he hoped that the cadets would make full use of it.

He went on to say that of the 25 colleges and universities that he had visited, this lounge was among the best that he had seen, and the cadets should take pride in it.

Colonel Swann then introduced General Shepard. General Shepard's speech was centered around the words duty, discipline, and loyalty.

After the speech, Cadet Colonel Farrell read a letter of commendation to Cadet David C. Ward for winning the contest to select a name for the lounge. General Shepard then presented to Cadet Ward the sign bearing the name, "The Tiger's Den."

Following this presentation, the cadets went to the lounge where General Shepard cut the ribbon spanning the doorway, and Cadet Ward hung the sign. Then all went inside and enjoyed punch and cookies which were prepared and served by members of the Angel Flight.

Phi Leases 10 Portraits To Officials

The Philanthropic Literary Society voted in executive session Tuesday to lease 10 portraits from its art gallery to Dean Alexander Heard and Chancellor William Aycock.

The portraits will be displayed in the new offices of the University officials. Dean Heard, head of the graduate school, has offices in South Building and Chancellor Aycock is in the old Institute of Government Building.

Phi President Jess Stribling said these pictures are taken from the valuable collection owned by the debating society which physical limitations make impossible to display in the hall.

He added, however, that portraits of other famous Phi alumni who have become famous through service to nation, state and university still hang in the hall.

Dean Heard will receive paintings of Robert Bridgers, Joseph Caldwell, James Killebrew, William Saunders and Patrick Henry Winston.

Chancellor Aycock will receive portraits including those of Richard Sa Donnell, Francis Hawkes, John Mason and John Branch.

Playmaker Tryouts Planned This Monday

Tryouts for The Carolina Playmakers' production of Paul Green's "Hymn to the Rasing Sun" will be held Monday in the Playmakers Theatre at 4 and 7:30 p.m.

The play will be directed by Samuel Selden, chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art and director of The Carolina Playmakers. There are nine speaking roles for men in the play.

Dean Urges Students To Have Conferences With Advisers During Relative Slack Period

Dr. Cecil Johnson, dean of the General College, yesterday urged students in the General College to take advantage of the relative slack period to have conferences with their advisers.

Dean Johnson said that during registration period, the adviser is not able to give the student a complete and unhurried interview.

While the student will not be able to register during this time, he can get full advice in regard to his academic plans and programs, Dean Johnson said.

"For the next month the advisers will be in what might be characterised as a 'non-bottleneck' period." he said. "Their advisees are especially invited to use this period for leisurely conferences and for consideration of past records and future plans."

To arange for interviews, Dean Johnson listed the names and telephone numbers of secretaries of General College advisers.

Advisees of S. Y. Tyree, Robert Howard, Claiborne Jones, D. G. Monroe and G. E. Shepard may make appointments by contacting Mrs. Margaret Pery at 9-1866. Appointments with J. R. Caldwell, W. R. Straughn, Robert Fein and Stuart Sechriest may be made with Mrs. Betty Setzer at 9-2511.

Appointments with Henry House and Gen. F. Carlyle Shepard may be made with Mrs. Norma Smith at 9-2516. Advisees of Dean Johnson may make appointments for interviews by contacting Miss Norma Hill at 9-1861.

CAMPUS CHEST

Late last night the Campus Chest Committee reported that it had collected to date $1,000.

There's A Lot To Read In Evans' Little Letter

A little letter sent to all treasurers of fraternities at UNC should go a long way toward convincing the legislature that delayed rushing is a hindrance, rather than a help, to the local Greek societies.

Penned by Student Body President Sonny Evans, its purpose is to find out just what the economic effects would be if UNC fraternities operated four and one-half months—before rushing—on a deflated membership caused by graduation in the spring.

We can just about forecast, in one word, what those effects will be: drastic. Already, some local chapters are on the verge of liquidation primarily because their numbers cannot support the expense linked to a fraternity's operation. To subtract further from those numbers by delayed rush would only increase the financial liabilities.

We point these facts out in an effort to maintain for fraternities a practice which in no way concerns the legislature or should fall under its control in any form whatever. Rushing is not now any business of the legislature, and it never should be.

Yet our student solons—some of them not members of Greek societies at UNC—have taken it upon themselves to consider a bill which would alter the entire practice of early rush now used on campus. If passed, it would delay rush until the spring semester.

We cannot compromise this kind of thinking. It is, first, out of place. Secondly, it is the product of a disaffected interest. And third, the calamitous effect which it would wreak would far outweigh even the rather vague good which it is supposed to produce.

Fraternities here and everywhere are private organizations operating under their own charters, combined locally into a loose federation which directs affairs affecting all of the chapters on the campus. This federation, the IFC, should concern itself with fraternity rushing—and not the student legislature.

Furthermore, the 25 or so chapters here are providing a great and needed service for the University in the provision of sleeping quarters and dining facilities for their hundreds of members. This aspect of the societies has been only too clearly emphasized by former Chancellor Robert B. House.

Legislators, change the rushing program; disrupt the current practice by delaying rush until spring semester; upset the ledgers of fraternity treasurers with your plans—and see what the effects on the economic aspect of the University will be.

Have we in Chapel Hill sufficient facilities for room and board to assume the services which fraternities offer for their members? Can the University provide those services which will terminate when our Greek societies are forced into liquidation? Is there really any doubt in your minds what the effects of delayed rush would be?

Wait, legislators. Wait until the letters are returned to President Evans. Then you will see that even the picture we have drawn may be too bright for the future of fraternities as you would alter it.

Even then you will be concerning yourselves with something which in no way should be your domain.

THE POLLS COMMITTEE REPORT

You're Wrong, Mr. Editor

To the editor:

Heretofore divided on the issue of your acceptability as editor of our reknowned "Daily Tar Heel," we are now in total agreement due to the editorial which appeared in the February 27 issue of said paper.

Having devoted nearly one-half of your editorial space in that issue to an extended revelation of the gross inefficiency of the GMAB Polls Committee, you have, if nothing else, given us the publicity we have formerly been refused.

You asked of what significance was our work if we released the results three months after they had been tabulated. We ask you if you don't recall the visits, by members of the Polls Committee, in your first week as editor. Having propounded our questions, administered the poll, received and tabulated the results, we offered to turn over the results to the "Daily Tar Heel" asking that they be printed as a series. Our request being denied by your assistant news editor, we presented our problem directly to you and you referred us to the news editor. He, in turn, promised to print the results immediately inasmuch as the "Peanuts" issue was coming before the Legislature. On December 17, 1957, you said, and we quote, "It is noteworthy to point out here the role which the GMAB Polls Committee played in securing Peanuts for the "Daily Tar Heel." It was through that committees' survey of the campus that a broad sentiment among students for 'Peanuts' was brought to bear on the minds of student legislators."

If you will look in your files, and we trust you do have some, you will find a copy of the Poll results which we gave to you the last week in November, 1957. You published those results on February 27, 1958, with your own interpretations.

As readers of the "Daily Tar Heel," apart from the Polls Committee, we would like to add that we think it was a great waste of editorial space to dwell so long on a relatively unimportant and unconstructive issue and, most of all, to be so wrong about it all.

Jan Cobbs, Chm. Polls Comm.
John B. Lewis, Jr., Former Chm. Polls Comm.

From the editor:

If the point you make above be true, we would simply make one request: never bring to us in February a report from your committee which we ran three months before.

We are unable to justify publishing now the same data printed in the Tar Heel in the latter months of November, 1957.

Yes, we recall your visit here soon after the election. We likewise recall the embarassment to you when we first refused to add 'Peanuts' to the "Tar Heel" on the basis of the poll you had taken.

Our memory, however, does not serve us so well in the matter of what finally happened to your full report. If, in fact, it came to our news office as we directed in a block and not in a series—it was handled from there.

You say we ran the report in November, 1957. We accept that as true, although it had slipped our memory. What, then, was the purpose of again releasing the same data several months later?

J.Y.'S JAZZ

Notes & Hopes From The 1958 'Jazz Scene'

With nothing particular in mind to write about, and a column due for Saturday, I thought I'd jot down a few thoughts that have been recurring in my mouldy mind for the past few weeks. Like, I'm sick of all the other guys who write notes on the scene saying why doesn't Desmond quit Brubeck when all the time Brubeck is getting better and better, thanks to Desmond.

Iwonder if any motion picture studio has thought about doing "The Duke Ellington Story"? It would make a great picture, if it could be shot while the Duke is still around. Let's face it, the man is fifty-nine and time may be running a little short, to use a poor euphemism. . . Why can't J. J. Johnson form a swinging group that people want to hear? Kai Winding is pulling in the green stuff, but J seems to be just poking along, despite the fact that he is really the better trombonist of the two and should be able to rack.

Gerry Mulligan ought to get some kind of award for being the most broad-minded person on the musical scene. Did you know the man paid his own way into the Great Neck festival last summer so he could come on the stand and blow some Dixieland groups. He just loves to play, and we need more like him . . . Gerry's ex-sideman Bob Brookmeyer, the valve trombonist, has been doing quite well for himself lately, to the delight of all jazz enthusiasts. His records are moving nicely and all seem to be digging his smooth, swinging, manner of blowing.

I hope Garner gets off this orchestral kick that was rather badly shown in "Other Voices" and goes back to the sounds. His latest, "Soliloquy," may prove the answer to this prayer . . . Norman Granz and his Verve label are doing great things these days. The new Charlie Parker three disk set and the king-size Newport pack are going well and making friends with many. Granz, for all his personal quirks, is doing a lot for jazz, and we should never forget it.

I wonder how many students here realize that Bud Shank, the important tenor saxophonist of the Pacific Jazz school, is not a West Coaster at all but a native of Dayton, Ohio, and was a student at the University of North Carolina from 1944 through 1946. UNC muscians take heart - if Shank can do it, maybe you can too . . . The Jimmy Giuffre Three is one of the most exciting groups in jazz to day. The soft, yet swining sounds they make send all who hear. Listen to things like "The Train and the River" for more than ample proof. It's men like Guiffre - men with a searching, heartfelt desire to advance jazz - who are making jazz the popular thing it is today.

Fraternities Are Here To Stay

By CURTIS GANS

On Tuesday night, the Phi will debate a bill concerning the abolition of fraternities on the UNC campus. This bill was spurred by recent articles in several of the state papers censuring the conduct of fraternity members.

To abolish fraternities because at various times fraternity members step over the traces is definitely unwise.

It is true that not all people can participate in fraternity life, but then again not all people want to. Moreover, not all of those who want to participate in fraternity life can, but the fraternity is by its very nature a private organization - a better than average club - and private organizations have a right to be exclusive. Any denial of such a right its to deny private enterprise.

Moreover, people tend to make more of errors than they do of thing that are going right. So when they hear of a wild party going on at 3 a.m., they get up in arms. They forget, however, that most fraternity activity is at a reasonable hour, and that fraternities supply a great social need on this campus whose male to female ration is some 7-1.

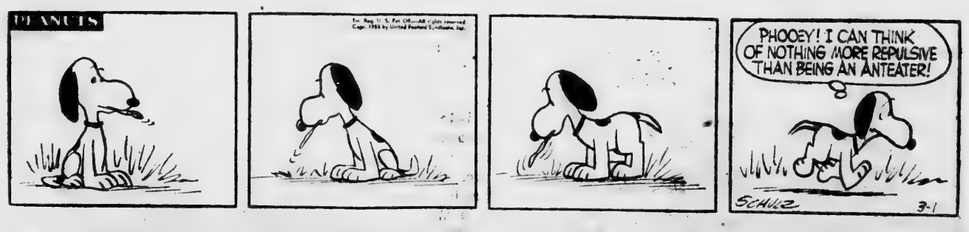
People tend to publicize the time that a fraternity man gets arrested for public drunkeness with two of his comrades, and tend to forget that fraternities provide for the most part a chance for long and lasting friendships in a wholesome atmosphere.

There has been considerable argument to the effect that fraternities work a financial hardship on students who want to be members. This argument is specious from two points of view. First, the fraternities, as private organizations have a right to charge more and the exclusive in any way they so desire—including excluding all but the upper class.

But the most obvious fallacy is that in many fraternities on the UNC campus it costs less to live or as little to live as it does in a dormitory, strange as this fact may seem to fraternity opposition.

There has been further opposition that fraternities place the emphasis on the social rather than on the academic, which it is contended is the student's primary job. This is partly true; however, many fraternities take enough cognizance of the members resposibility as a student to aid him in his academic endeavours. The competition between houses on scholastic grounds, only furthers the academic side of the university.

While on this subject, it should be added that fraternity files of back quizzes and examinations should stay where they are. Firstly, because students must know the material on the back quizzes in order to pass a quiz. Secondly, because it might take faculty members do something about not repeating the same quiz over and over again. The same goes for term papers, for it is up to the student whether he wants to get the benefit of the effort a term paper requires. He, if he uses the work of another, is the eventual loser.



The larger the campus, and UNC is a fairly large university, the more the need for some group to belong to and for more diversified activity planning. Fraternities are currently serving that need.

Interfraternity competition is another good famcet ,because it is a small step in the planning for a life in what is an intensely competitive world.

Finally, to abolish fraternities is opposed to what is a basic precept for democracy—the right of assembly, for any purpose save the physical destruction of the democracy.

As far as occasional hell raising goes, it is a good thing that such things happen now and then. It shows there may be a little life in the university community after all.

ON 'COCKTAIL PARTY'

Wolff's Criticism Hit

This letter is in response to Anthony Wolff's criticism of Feb. 25, of the Petites Dramatiques production of "Cocktail Party," an article which I feel demands some sort of answer.

Mr. Wolff begins his article with the words, "A renegade herd." The Petites Dramatiques are a GMAB sponsored group and as such are hardly deserving of this label. This charge is not supported or qualified in any way by the article. Such an invective phrase calls for some kind of explanation on the part of its author or a retraction.

The next paragraph begins by claiming that the degree of guilt of the Petites Dramatiques is "all too evident." I have discussed the play with a number of people and this "all too evident" guilt does not seem "all too" to any of them.

He then proceeds to set up a seemingly logical argument in which he claims that either the play is a play and was done poorly or the play is not a play, but really a poem. He definitely weights the argument toward the latter and claims that if this is true, then it was a more serious "crime."

He verifies the first claim in paragraph six where he states, "The play can, however, be done effectively . . ." But in paragraph three he says, "As a play Mr. Eliot's poem . . ." Then in paragraph thirteen he says, "The only outstanding thing about this production was the script . . ." The word "script" applies to drama, not to poetry. There seems to be a slight confusion here, somewhere.

In paragraph three he states that, "Like 'The Wasteland,' it (the play) is not an organic whole . . ." In answer to this, may I quote from The Reader's Companion to World Literature, page 145, "'The Wasteland,' which marked a veritable revolution in modern English poetry, . . .—particularly in the way in which the mind latches on to seemingly unrelated observations, an object, a sensation, a series of experiences, and pulls them together into a whole."

This statement appears in paragraph seven, "Technically and intellectually, the Petites Dramatiques were not up to the job." This is an extremely outspoken remark. As to the first charge, the members of this group have (by combining their work into one figure) over 150 credits to their names. As to the second charge, on what grounds and by what right does Mr. Wolff question the intellectual prowess of any or all of the members of this group, however poorly he feels their performances were? Common decency demands a retraction of this second charge.

"The Petites Dramatiques has been on this campus for a year now, and it has never kept the promise which it made with its first production, 'Caligula.'" Are not Tennessee Williams, Jean Giraudoux, T. S. Eliot and an Anouilh Adaptation of Sophocles (the next offering) on a plane with Camus as playwrights?

The goals of the Petites Dramatiques are fairly clear: to provide the students and public with interesting and provocative plays and to provide more opportunities for actors and actresses on this campus to display their talents. I can find no faults with these goals. Perhaps Mr. Wolff's exquisite tastes and high standards of excellence should not be subjected to the attempts the dramatic element on this campus makes to perfect their art. Their art requires practise. The art of acting requires years of hard work. The Carolina campus is one of the practise grounds. Broadway is the place where the achieved perfectioned is supposed to be displayed. Seek faultlessness there, not here. Denunciations for not being perfect is for the New York critic, not for the student critic. He should try to help the performers, as they should try to help the novice critic perfect his art.

"There is little virtue in attempting something which one cannot hope to achieve . . ." appears in the next to the last paragraph. Turning to Mr. Eliot's thoughts on this in Selected Prose, page 84 "It (the goal in poetic drama) is an unattainable ideal: and that is why it interests me, for it provides an incentive towards further experiment and exploration, beyond any goal which there is prospect of attaining." Man has and, I trust, will continue to attempt the "impossible." This spirit in Man is the sole motivator for the progress of Mankind. People will continue to scream from the sidelines of life, "It is impossible." They will continue their derisive laughter at the failures. We must guard ourselves against this great fear of failure, for it is precisely this fear that accounts for the contagion of pallid mediocrity which infects our universities today. Human beings must, unfortunately, struggle and stumble along the road of progress towards excellence. If there are those, and there always are, who stand feet planted, jackass fashion, and refuse to move forward, then they must be left behind.

A noble failure has certain merits over success on the mediocre level. (I am calling the play in question a failure). From a noble failure something is learned, but what is learned from doing that which you are positive you can do perfectly? Vanity and fear are the forces which steer us into this vein. But vanity and fear do not prompt the artist. The craftsman, perhaps; but not the artist.

When Icarus fell into the ocean, the people roared. But the waves of that splash have spread over the sea of human minds and washed up sputniks on the shores of today.

Maryland Favored In ACC Indoor Track Meet Today; Tar Heel Mermen Sweep Five Medals In ACC Swim Meet

N.C. State Wins Two; Day-Nite Finals Set

The ACC Champion Carolina swimmers swept five of a possible eight individual championships tonight to increase their total to six and give the Tar Heels the greatest number of medals of any competing team.

Fagden Takes Two

Carolina only lost three events, and two of them were to N. C. State's All-American, Dick Fagden. Fagden won the 200 butterfly and the 100 breaststroke. A new conference ruling in the method used in the breaststroke gives Fagden an automatic record for winning the event.

The same ruling gives Bill Zickgraf of Carolina a record in the 200 individual medley.

The only other Carolina loss came when Frank Merchel of State squeaked by the Tar Heels' Brent Nash to win the 200 backstroke.

Schiffman Cops Pair

Tony Schiffman of Carolina picked up his second gold medal of the meet last night by winning the 220 freestyle. Thursday night Schiffman copped the 1500-meters.

The Tar Heels placed no worse than second in any event. The first event, the 200 fly, was won by Fagden after a great bid by Carolina's Mac Mahaffey fell short. Bill Roth successfully defended his 50-freestyle title, and won it going away. Frank Merchel nosed out Brent Nash in the 200 backstroke in the night's closest race.

Toy Schiffman and Jeff Zwicker placed 1-2 in the 220 freestyle. Fagden came through like a champion again in the 100 breaststroke, beating Carolina's Kit Mercer who made a god race of it. Ned Meekins of the Tar Heels won the low diving competition by over 40 points.

Although he qualified only third, Bill Zickgraf swept through the 200 individual medley easily. The Carolina 400 medley team won the final event by five lengths over runner-up Duke.

State, Carolina Tops

State College and Carolina have dominated the meet thus far. Carolina has six firsts against State's three.

The preliminaries (10:30 a.m.) and the finals (4:30 p.m.) in the following events will be held today: 100-yard butterfly, 100-yard dash, 200-yard backstroke, 100-yard breaststroke, 100-yard backstroke, 400-yard freestyle, high diving, and 400-medley relay.

THE SUMMARY

200-yard butterfly-Fagden (NCS), Mahaffey (UNC), Ackerman (Clem) Time: 2:17.5

50-yard freestyle-Roth (UNC), Young (DUKE), Dickinson (Duke) Time: 23.5

Blue Imps Beat UNC Freshmen

DURHAM — The Carolina Tar Babies, unable to put the stops on a final Duke scoring spree, were defeated 47-37, by the Blue Imps here tonight.

It was the Tar Babies' fourth loss to the Imps and it brought their season to a close with a 10-9 record, a winning season that was the poorest that a Carolina freshman squad has had for two years.

After a poor first half which ended 17-11, to Duke's advantage, the Tar Babies came back hard and fast to tie up the game, 29-29 at the 10:30 mark. Tar Babies' center Hugh Donahue then hit a hook shot that looked like the Tar Babies would go all the way.

The Imps, who had the advantage up to that point, quickly gathered forces and led by forward Howard Hurt went ahead 35-31. From then on out, it was the Dukes ball game.

The first half was similar to the Tar Babies last game with the State freshmen. Both teams played possession ball while waiting for an opening in their opponent's defense. Duke jumped to a quick 8-3 lead and held on to it the entire half, the Tar Babies never threatening.

At the start of the second half the Blue Imps began a man-to-man defense in hopes of speeding up the game. The Baby Heels complied and soon had the lead at 31-29. The Tar Baby drive was spearheaded by Lou Brown and Donahue. Donahue tied Duke's Jay Deal for high scoring honors at 18 points apiece.

THE SCORING

CAROLINA — Donahue, 18; Longenecker, 2; Dunlap, 2; Brown, 13; Deaton, 0; Total, 37.

DUKE—Hurt, 10; Kistler, 3; Kast, 5; Deal, 18; Frye, 11; Albright, 0; Wallace, 0; Lohrhoff, 0; Total 47.

TAR HEEL DOUBTFULS—Everett Whatley (left) and Wayne Bishop are on the uncertain list in the ACC Indoor Track games today. Whatley, a Miler, has measles and Bishop, a Two-Miler, re-injured his knee Wednesday.

Bishop, Whatley Join Sime On Question List

By DAVE WIBLE

The entry list for today's Indoor Games has been marred by question marks beside the names of Dave Sime, Everett Whatley and Wayne Bishop. There is some doubt as to whether these three will be able to compete tonight.

Sime, Duke's amazing holder of seven World's records, has a pulled leg muscle and won't know until this afternoon whether or not he will defend his 60-yd dash title. However, it is definite that he will not compete in the low hurdles or broad jump as was originally planned.

The Carolina team captain Whatley came down with measles this week and may not be able to compete in his event, the mile. The final blow to the Tar Heels came Wednesday when distance star Wayne Bishop again had his troublesome knee slip out of joint. He was on crutches yesterday. He was a favorite in the 2-mile.

Yesterday Carolina coach Dale Ranson said, "In a situation like this, we just have to wait. In another 24 hours the condition of these boys might be completely different. It will be up to them as to whether or not they will run."

Musicians Will Play In Concert March 5

Rafael Puyana, harpischordist, and Paul Doktor, violist, will be presented in a joint concert in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m. Wednesday, March 5.

Puyana is a 26-year old Colombian who decided to learn to play the harpsichord before ever having seen one while taking piano lessons at the gae of 6. Graduating from the New England Conservatory of Music in 1951, he was introduced to Mme. Wanda Landowska, who name is synonmous with the harpischord, and was accepted by her as a student.

Today, Puyana is the only harpischordist who is permitted to describe himself publicly as a "Landowska pupil."

After six years of intensive study, Puyana made his debut in New York's Town Hall in April 1957. At this time, he displayed his brilliant harpischord technique as well as his insight into the devotion for the music written for the instrument.

Plenty Of Tickets To ACC Track Meet Left

The Athletic business office has announced that there are still tickets left for the ACC Indoor games being held here this afternoon and tonight.

Tickets are $1 for students and $2 for the general public. The tickets will be good for all sessions. Student passbooks are not accepted since the Games are a conference rather than a school affair.

Records Should Fall In 5th Annual Meet

By DAVE WIBLE

Track teams from all over the South have converged on Chapel Hill to compete in the Fifth Annual ACC Indoor Games being held here today and tonight in Woollen Gym.

In addition to the eight ACC teams and their freshman squads, nine non-conference teams will be on hand to bring the total to 25 difference teams.

In the conference division Maryland is heavily favored to repeat as champion with Carolina and Duke expected to battle it out for second place. If Maryland does win it will be her third straight title and fourth in the five year history of the games. Carolina broke the Terps monoply back in 1955, the last time the Games were held here .

Non-Conference

The non-conference teams come from far and wide. These are Alabama, Davidson, Geogia, Georgia Tech, Richmond, V.M.I., The Citadel, Furman and Florida State.

Florida State won the team competition in this division last year in Raleigh. Maryland will also be defending the freshman division crown.

Everyone seems to agree that this year's meet will be the best ever, with many new records in sight. Duke's Dave Sime, Carolina's Dave Scurlock, and Maryland's Ed Cooke and Burr Grim head the list of National track figures who will be competiting.

The schedule calls for action to get underway at 10:30 this morning with shot put competition in the Tin Can and broad jumping in Woollen gym. The high jump in all three divisions is the feature of the afternoon beginning at 11:30 followed by trials in the 880, 40, and high and low hurdles. The championship night program opens with the pole vault at 7 in Woollen Gym.

Yogi, Again

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., Feb. 28 (AP)—Yogi Berra has some added equipment for his catching these days—a pair of white cotton golves.

The New York catcher has a skin ailment which dermatologists sadi today is caused by an allergy. They think it may be caused by the leather in the glove or the cement used in the construction.

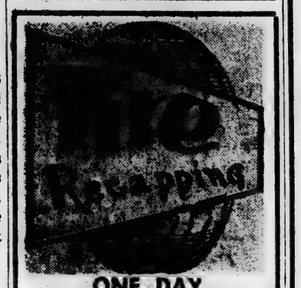
UNC Vs. Notre Dame

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Feb. 25 (AP)—Notre Dame and Carolina will play the second of a two-game basketball series in Charlotte's Memorial Coliseum next Feb. 14.

The Irish and the Tar Heels met for the first time in basketball 10 days ago at the Chicago Stadium. The Irish, ranked 8th in this week's Associated Press poll, won that one 89-70.

Compulsory Meeting Set For Golf Candidates

There will be a compulsory meeting of all candidates for the varsity golf team Monday, March 3, at 4 p.m. The meeting will be held regardless of weather conditions, at the Finley Golf Course Clubhouse.



Starting Saturday, March 1, candidates for both the varsity and freshman teams are requested to turn in all 18-hole scores to the pro shop.

The University Club will meet Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock in the Grail Room. The 1958-59 budget will be discussed.

BILL MURRAY
Duke Football Coach

After Duke Game:

Murray Terms McGuire's Action 'Revolting'

DURHAM, March 1 (AP) —Coach Frank McGuire, who says his campaign for better sportsmanship by basketball fans has backfired, refused to take his North Carolina team off the Duke gymnasium floor last night during a melee until he was assured of police protection. Duke football coach Bill Murray called McGuire's action revolting.

McGuire held his team at its bench for 10 minutes after the game while Duke partisans among the capacity crowd of 8,800 stormed to the floor and carried off coach Harold Bradley and his players in jubilation.

Some fans snipped off the nets in token of Duke's 59-46 victory which gave the Blue Devils the regular season crown in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Fight On Floor

During this festivity, Durham police rushed to the court and broke up a fight, later described as between two Duke students punching each other for rights to a victory net. One student was floored, and a doctor was paged over the public address system.

The youth arose, apparently uninjured, and the public address announcer urged: "Everybody go home."

During the closing minutes of the game beween the arch rivals, fans repeatedly pushed onto the court. Officials then asked for assistance in maintaining control of the game.

Bradley Comments

Bradley, who didn't learn of McGuire's action until his Duke squad was about ready to leave its dressing room, was asked whether he thought the game was particularly rough. He said athletic contests between the old rivals are "affairs of high emotion."

He added that the game "had contact, but you expect that sort of thing." Duke hasn't been defeated on its home court this season.

Murray, who saw the game, was critical of McGuire. He said:

'Most Revolting'

"In all my coaching experience, I have never seen a more obvious exhibition. It is the most revolting act by a coach I've ever witnessed.

"The very idea of McGuire demanding police protection to be escorted to his dressing room is absurd. He has created a monster in his publicity-seeking statements supposedly made to stop such things as this. I once admired him, now I blame him. I've never yet seen the time when police protection was needed for a visiting team to walk to the dressing room at Duke. They could have gone off without trouble."

McGuire Retorts

McGuire retorted:

"I wish Murray had come to me with those remarks. I'd tell him he has enough to worry about in Jim Tatum North Carolina football coach; to keep him occupied. I'd tell him he'll never beat Carolina in football as long as Tatum's around."

McGuire has been critical of fans at Atlantic Coast Conference games. His criticism has centered on the booing of players during pre-game introductions and in foul shooting.

He said after last night's incident, "We're going to have a major calamity if something isn't done."

The game was a typical Duke-North Carolina contest—hard fought and hard played.

Wetzel Faces Second Trial

SANFORD, March 1 (AP)-For the second time, Frank Edward Wetzel will place his life in the scales of a North Carolina court here this week.

The cool and reserved New York State native will be called to trial in Lee County Superior Court for the murder of Highway Patrolman J. T. Brown.

Selection of a jury from a special 100-man venire is expected to begin soon after court convenes at 10 a.m. Monday. Judge George Fountain of Tarboro will be on the bench.

Solicitor W. Jack Hooks of Kenly, who will prosecute the case, has said he will press for "The maximum penalty"—death in the state's gas chamber.

Brown, 33 and father of four children, was fatally wounded near here the night of Nov. 5 when he stopped a speeding car. About an hour earlier and 60 miles away, Patrolman W. L. Reece of Hamlet was shot down near Ellerbe after halting a black car which flashed past a speed watch.

Wetzel, 36, was convicted for Reece's murder in Richmond County Superior court at Rockingham early in January. He received a life sentence when the jury recommended mercy, thus sparing him the death penalty.

John Thomas Page Jr., Rockingham Lawyer and Former FBI agent, will again appear as defense county for Wetzel. Page was appointed to defend Wetzel at the Rockingham trial and, at Wetzel's request, was given the assignment for the trial here.

BAND LEADER RALPH MARTERIE
To Present Charity Concert Here.

Ralph Marterie & Orchestra To Present Concert March 10 With Panhel, IFC Sponsoring

Ralph Marterie and his orchestra will be presented in a concert Monday, March 10, by the Panhellenic and Interfraternity Councils.

Proceeds from this concert will go to support the Negro Recreation Center of Chapel Hill. Each year the two Greek councils sponsor a money-raising project for the benefit of some local charity.

The Marterie concert will be held in Memorial Hall, beginning at 8 p.m. on March 10. Tickets may be secured for $1.25 in Y-Court, Ledbetter-Pickard store or Town and Campus store.

College Favorite

Picked by Down Beat magazine as the top band and orchestra in the country last season, Ralph Marterie has also been voted a top favorite in colleges in a recent poll conducted in colleges through the country.

Marterie started his career as a bandleader during his tour in the Navy during World War II. Playing to thousands of servicemen throughout the nation started him on his way. When he was discharged, Marterie's first band became a reality.

His newest single release has been "College Man," but Marterie has also moved to the top of the ladder in well known long-playing albums, such as One Night Stand, Trumpeter's Lullaby, Strictly Instrumental, Dancing on the Downbeat and Marterie Moods.

In a relatively short period of time, Marterie has scaled the top hurdles in the field of popular bands in the nation. Several of his Mercury recordings have exceeded the one million mark.

Student Leaders' Viewpoints

Delayed Rush: Scorned, Praised & Condemned

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Gary Greer's (SP) bill to delay the fraternity rushing program until the second semester introduced last Thursday has evoked much comment from student leaders in the past few days.

Student Body President Sonny Evans, who will veto or sign the bill, said, "The case for deferred rushing is a strong one, and I am hopeful that fraternity men and independents will be able to discuss it objectively and do the thing which is best for the campus."

He explained that under the present system rushees generally knew little about the fraternity they pledge or about the members of the pledge class.

"In addition," he continued," individuals who do not make the fraternities receive the scare of not being wanted long before they are able to adjust to college life and get their feet on the ground."

He claimed that the pledgeship period "is much too long for a healthy situation with both pledges and actives becoming tired and disgruntled."

"However, the problem of finances and the effects of reducing the incomes in both big and little fraternities is something which must be considered as well as the problem of dirty rushing and how it will be combatted," he warned.

"Gary Greer has done a courageous thing," he asserted, "and I hope that all of us will look into the problem with as much objectivity as we can."

Good In Principle

"In principle, deferred rushing is good, but there are many things to be considered before such a step is taken."

Greer, a member of the Student Legislature ways and means committee, said this of the introduced the bill, "with the full realization that there are many advantages and disavantages which are inherent in either of the two systems of rushing but also with the full realization that many other schools" have made the necessary financial adjustments.

Student Party Plans To Continue Selections

The Student Party will return to Roland Parker Lounges in Graham Memorial to continue its nominating for the spring elections Monday night at 7:30

Party Chairman Pat Adams said the consideration of whether to endorse a candidate in the race for Editor of The Daily Tar Heel would be the first matter of business.

The SP will choose its Student Legislature standard-bearers from Dorm Men's IV and V, from the Dorm Women's district and from Town Men's III and IV.

There are also nominations to be made for a seat in Dorm Men's I and one in Town Women's district.

Adams said that party members who had not paid their $1 dues for the spring semester will have to pay in order to vote.

"We are looking forward to some good fights this time and we hope all interested persons will come to the meeting," he said.

"Everyone will be allowed to speak," he commented.

So far the SP has nominated eight Student Legislators, who were from Dorm Men's I, II, III and from Town Women's district.

University Party Will Nominate Candidates

The nominating convention of the University Party will meet to select candidates in the spring election for the Student Legislature Monday night at 7:15 in Gerrard Hall.

Tomorrow at 4 p.m. at Gerrard Hall University Party members will have their last opportunity to verify their membership in the party in order to be eligible to vote at the convention.

Syd Shuford, UP Chairman, said that the executive committee of party planned to recommend that the nominations for student government executive positions be delayed six days until March 10.

Shuford said he was looking "for a large turnout." He continued, "With the nominative system such as we have, I know each of the groups will be able to exercise their prerogative as members of a democratic society."

Monday the UP will begin with the Town Men's districts, then the Town Women's district, next the Dorm Men's districts and finally the Dorm Women's district.

Shuford said any legislature seat not filled Monday would be filled Tuesday when the UP will consider endorsing National Student Association Co-ordinator.

The party will probably nominate Senior Class oficers and Student Government executive officers March 10.

UNC Glee Club Gives Concert Here Tuesday

The UNC Glee Club under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter, will give a concert at 8 p.m. Tuesday, March 4, in Hill Music Hall. The program will be presented by the UNC Department of Music on the Tuesday Evening Series and is open to the public at no charge.

Guest soloist will be Donna Patton Kelly, soprano. Last summer she was awarded the first scholarship by the Institute of Opera. Mrs. Kelly, student of Walter Golde, has been soloist for numerous University concerts including Mozart's "Requiem" and "The Magic Flute."

Sacred Works

The program will open with three sacred a capella works sung by the Glee Club. The opening number, "To Thee We Sing," was arranged from the Russian Liturgy by Peter Tkach. Two Rensiasance compositions, Jacob Arcadelt's "Ave Maria" and "O Come, Ye Servants of the Lord" by Christopher Tye, will follow.

Mrs. Kelly, accompanied by Walter Golde, pianist, will sing a group of three arias from operas by Puccini and Charpentier.

Three serious compositions comprise the next group to be sung by the Glee Club with piano accompaniment by Robert Fulk Jr. Lorrain Watters' "The Man Without a Country" is a setting of the text from Sir Walter Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel." Randall Thompson's "The Last Words of David," one of the finer pieces of 20th century choral music, will follow. "Turn Back, O Man" by Gustav Holst, arranged by Lefebvre, will conclude the group.

Folk Songs & Spirituals

After intermission three folks songs and a Negro spiritual will be offered by the Glee Club: "Shenandoah," an American chantey; "Down Among the Dead Men," an arrangement of an English drinking song; "The Foggy, Foggy Dew," an American folk song featuring Donald Nance, bass-baritone, as soloist; and "Ain'a That Good News," a Negro spiritual.

Romberg numbers on the program include "Drinking Song," "The Desert Song," "One Alone," "Stouthearted Men," "Auf Wiedersehn," "Wanting You," "Gaudeamus Igitur," and "One Kiss."

Coed Strike At Oxford?

OXFORD, England, March 1 (AP)-Some coeds with an ancient greek idea have ruled out love-making until their boy friends join a Ban-The-H-Bomb Campaign.

Most of the Oxford male undergraduates, noting a lack of unity in the famale ranks, don't seem too worried.

Janet Dawson, a pretty 19-year-old London girl, said the embargo on love-making started a week ago at a party.

She said the idea came from Aristophanes' comedy, Lysistrata, written in 411 B.c. In the play, the women bolt their doors and forbid love-making until their husbands stop warmaking.

An unworried male student said confidently: "There will still be plenty of women who never even heard of the H-bomb."

s A dissenter among Axford's coed dealt the modern lysistratas this crusher:

"Some of the girls who support the strike probably are not the type to receive many invitations anyway."

GM SLATE

The following activities are scheduled for today at Graham Memorial:

Presbyterians, 9:45 a.m., Williams-Wolfe Lounge; Friends, 11 a.m., Williams-Wolfe Lounge; Presbyterian Church, 3:30-4:30 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Presbyterians, 9:45, Rendezvous Room.

Coed Room Plan Changed This Year

Room reservations for summer school and next fall for coeds is being conducted in a slightly different way from past methods.

Now through March 12, coeds will sign up for their rooms in their own dormitories instead of at the dean of women's office.

First, the student must make a ten dollar deposit in the basement of South Building and get a receipt. The room reservations are then made with the dormitory hostess or desk girl between the hours of 8 p.m. and closing time.

To cancel a reservation, the student must go to or write the dean of women's office. Room deposits for the summer school sessions are refundable until one week in advance of the day of registration for the term.

Room deposits for the fall term are not refundable after Aug. 15.

Contest Offered Here For Carolina Coeds

Scholarship awards totalling $1050 are being offered coed winners of the "Silver Opinion" contest, sponsored by Reed and Barton Silver Co.

In this contest, the entrant is asked to name her favorite china, crystal and sterling silver patterns and give reasons for her selections.

The deadline for the contest is March 31.

Contest blanks may be secured from Mary Morgan, student representative here.

Alpha Gams Slate Projects

Alpha Gamma Delta sorority has just got underway its alteristics projects for this year for the benefit of the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults.

The first of these projects was a bake sale held last week. Subsequent bake sales and other projects, such as rummage sales, will be conducted throughout the spring semester.

The chairman of all the projects is Beverly Culbreth.

Each year Alpha Gam sponsors a series of projects, the proceeds from which go to a designated charity. Last year, the Alpha Gams entertained children from the Homes Day Nursey at an Easter egg hunt.

ADVICE

Ed offers brotherly advice to fellow editor at sister institution of Consolidated University on pg. 2.

The Discriminatory Clauses Should Not Be Removed

Again our student legislature is about to trespass on private grounds, this time in a "Basic Policy Declaration" of the United States National Students Association.

Introduced for action in the legislature Thursday night, it would, if passed, mandate the striking from fraternity charters at UNC clauses which restrict from membership certain persons on basis of race or creed.

We doubt, seriously, that the student legislature—composed in the majority of fraternity and sorority members—will endorse the declaration in its entirety, primarily because of the "discriminatory" clause provision.

In effect, the declaration asserts that no student organization at the University will be allowed to have in its constitution discriminatory clauses as to race or religion—including, of course, fraternity charters which restrict membership to persons of a certain race or creed.

There is in the declaration, however, an "except" clause which does not include in the non-discrimination proposal religious organizations "where the avowed purpose of the organization is to bring together members of one specific religious purpose."

These, then can discriminate as concerns their membership. An example would be the exclusion from the Baptist Student Union those who do not profess the Baptist faith.

In that light, we are unable to distinguish between a religious organization and a social one, for the simple reason that social organizations, too, follow a certain creed in accepting or denying membership. In the case of fraternities that criteria happens to be racial status.

We feel there is nothing wrong with this practice. And we are overwhelmingly confident that regardless of bias clauses or the absence of them there will never be a "mixture of the races" within fraternities existing on the UNC campus.

If, in fact, a fraternity here wished to accept a person whom its charter now restricts from membership, it would take only the unanimous consent of active members to admit the individual. Indeed, that holds true now in the acceptance of any person to any fraternity on the campus.

With the existence of these mechanics, it becomes not only unnecessary but as well an encroachment on the activities of a private organization to demand the removal from its charter clauses which restrict membership to persons of a particular race or creed.

We hold that it is not the domain of student government to mandate to a private organization —a fraternity or a sorority—what shall or shall not be included in its charter. This is a matter which is the sole concern of the organization in question.

For that reason alone the legislature should reject the "Basic Policy Declaration"—in its entirety, if necessary—to retain the distinction which rightly belongs to the Greek societies on campus.

Better Nothing Than Wrong

Over at Woman's College Cordelia Galphin, editor of the weekly campus newspaper "The Carolinian," is currently under fire by a host of screaming students for what she describes as "an incomplete coverage of news and a lack of controversial issues."

To be faced with such allegations is bad enough, but it becomes even a more harassing problem when all the complaints are the product of a student body composed, for all purposes, exclusively of a female aggregation.

We wouldn't trade places with you, Cordelia, but we would suggest several factors to point out to your apparently disappointed student readers.

First, those who are complaining the loudest should realize the nature of your publication. You perform a major task with staff members who for the most part are not only inexperienced, but who, in addition, are not paid for the job they render.

Perhaps those dissatisfied with The Carolinian's news coverage—if it is as poor as they contend—would take their precious time to contribute to its eficiency through joining your staff and seeing to it that news of importance gets into the paper.

Second, your readers should come to understand that it is by no means the job of a newspaper editor—on a college campus or elsewhere—to "invent" a controversy simply for the sake of controversy. If you do that, then you are failing in your job.

It is not that there's anything wrong with controversy. Indeed, it is good. Lack of it sometimes is a sign of a poor editor. But when there is nothing of a controversial nature on which to comment, the editor should not be chastised—and it is when there is nothing controversial that the editor's job becomes the most difficult.

Cordelia, there exists the unfortunate tradition within our college societies that the good campus newspaper is the radical newspaper—opposed to a conservative organ which stands up to be counted when circumstances demand it. If you're not aggravating some of the people all the time, then you're failing in your task.

This almost universal conception is wrong. It is wrong because it assumes radicalism is good journalism; it is wrong because our campus newspapers become organs of 20-year-old thought instead of an outlet for mature reasoning and criticism within limit.

Editorial opinion is worthless without reportorial presentations to serve as its basis. Unless "facts" are in evidence to support allegations, unless your reporters disclose fallacies and uncover bad practice—then the editor stands helpless in the performance of his office.

Cordelia, listen to your criticism. But never succumb to it if it requires a radical newspaper whose editoral columns are ill-conceived and disaffect an innocent party all for the sake of producing a controversy.

And Woman's College students, if the only time you take an interest in your newspaper is when the editor seems to be failing in her job, then you are even more guilty of apathy toward expression than all "The Carolinian" staff combined.

It is, after all, not a publication of those whose names appear on its masthead. It is your paper, and it will succeed in proportion to the contributions which you make to it.

THE NEW REPUBLIC

Fox Guards The Chicken

Just a year ago (Feb. 21, 1957) we wrote an emotional piece about what Eisenhower was doing to America's fourth branch of government, the regulatory commissions. "Carefully, steadily and methodically," we said, "they are being stacked against the consumer interest and for business." The evidence is cumulative and we can't repeat it here. A congressional arch-foe of public housing was made administrator of public housing, two Congressmen who fought Reciprocal Trade agreements were put respectively on the tariff commission and the foreign trade agency, gas utility lawyer Kuykendall became chairman of the Federal Power Commission, and so on. The FTC and the TVA were packed. "The steady process of purging liberals and the consumer-minded has never stopped," we wrote and added, it is "here—here that the foxes are being let in to guard the chickens."

Well, the man running this grand campaign almost certainly is Sherman Adams. It is doubtful if Eisenhower even understands it. Certainly the public doesn't. When you replace one liberal by an ex-lobbyist on a regulatory commission it doesn't make news. But the Washington atmosphere has changed.

Here is how it works. Perhaps you remember how in the Administration's unsuccessful $100 million Dixon-Yates give-away a New York investment banker named Wenzell was discovered to be working both for the Administration and for the power lobby. The House was just about to vote $6.3 millions for the initial Dixion-Yates powerline. But the Security & Exchange Commission was scheduled to hold hearings June 13, 1955 which would disclose Wenzell's dual role. The Kefauver committee later discovered what happened. Chairman Sinclair Armstrong suddenly postponed the hearing and the House approved the money, June 16.

Under threat of contempt citation and after two prior refusals to testify Chairman Armstrong reluctantly revealed on oath that Sherman Adams secretly called him up June 11, 1955, and asked him to postpone the hearing. This was a direct and hidden intervention by one contestant before a quasi-judicial Federal agency, and the postponement was given without the other contestants being informed. Armstrong later explained to Kefauver the government had a "very, very great interest" in Dixon-Yates!

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Advice For Mr. Wolff, The Voters

Dear Mr. Wolff:

I am just recovering from an attack of nausea induced by your boorish criticism of the T. S. Eliot play, "The Cocktail Party"—even more boorish and unfair than your criticism of Christian Moe's "Stranger in the Land" was. And, in passing, may I say I find this to be the general opinion.

You say that most of the meaning of "The Cocktail Party" even when done by "highly gifted and trained people remains available only to the close, gifted and erudite reader."

I do not claim to be close, gifted and erudite. But I lay claim to a medium off perspicacity, a quality you seem to lack I was a "close" student of drama both as a member of The Shakespeare Society at Wellesley College and in courses there (and later) including a course in Greek drama. During my residence in Cleveland from 1912 to 1924 I was a member of The Cleveland Playhouse and was in many plays. I have coached plays in settlement houses and it is perhaps needless to say that an octogenarian with a lifetime interest in drama on stage and off has witnessed hundreds of tragedies both professional and amateur.

I lay no claim to the judgment of a Brooks Atkinson and I have no wish to be in age supremacist. But I just can't resist giving you a little advice, Tony. Cut your eyeteeth, get wisdom, and, above all, get empathy yourself before accusing the cast of the recent production of "The Cocktail Party" of an absence of this invaluable quality. That cast certainly got Eliot's message across the footlights to me and I believe to the majority of the audience. In fact, I think that performance ranks at the top of the amateur performances I have seen.

And, Tony, just another word. Wait until you have cut those eyeteeth and deflated your ego before you sound off like Jove on Olympus.

Mary Barnett Gilson

To the Editor:

Why is it that those leaders of the campus who are closest to the Honor System here at Carolina, that is, the chairmen of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils, are opposed to the amendment to the Constitution providing for one court of men and women? These people and their Councils have strong reasons, reason not based on personal gain nor on the female or male side of the question. Their opposition to the revision is backed by experience—experience with handling many cases of violations to the Honor System. Should not the opinion of those best acquainted with this Honor System of ours with their experience in hearing and judging cases be considered with added weight?

I am not telling you to vote against the measure, no one can do that; the decision is yours, but before you make that decision be sure, beyond a shadow of doubt, that you know all the facts and reasons both for and against these amendments. To do this ask the Honor Council chairmen and their councils why they are voting no, ask them how their experience in the Men's and Women's Councils has brought them to this decision. Also ask the proponents of the revisions why they are supporting it—what are their reasons, are they sound?

Investigate both sides carefully, then think and decide for yourself and VOTE.

IN THE DORM

Memories Of 'The Good Life'—And Friendship

By P. W. CARLTON

When one thinks of college, the association that is most deeply embedded in the consciousness is that of dormitory life, for the dorm is a symbol of home away from home, the hub of all activity and the base of all operations. There are many varied opinions concerning the pains and pleasures of this way of life. Many of us have only the fondest of memories.

Who can contest the fact that friends made in the dormitory are the orneriest, raunchiest bunch of reprobates ever to be collected under one roof? They call you names, serenade you with filthy songs, assault your sensibilities with the foulest profanity, steal the DTH from before your door in the mornings and cheat you at odd-manning for pepsi-colas. This in addition to making insulting remarks about your girl friend's photograph. Oh yes, they wait until you're talking to your sweetheart on the phone and then crowd into the phone booth with you, draped in bath towels and insisting that it's a shower stall. (The more polite ones just hang in the door, drinking in your every word and making appropriate remarks at strategic times.)

Picture yourself arriving at the dorm after a profitable day in lab studying Unintegrated gamosepalous protodermas and valviculate Rhopalia. (About which you have learned absolutely nothing.) You painfully ascend the four flights of stairs to your little haven under the eaves. As you approach the fourth floor landing, the hum of voices becomes a roar and you are able to hear the hyena-like laughs of the jokesters down the hall. You step into the hall just in time to receive a skidding coke bottle across the ankle bone, then hop across to your room, where your faithful roomie, "Rowdy" Ron Fridderstrat is playing an asinine recording of some Frenchman babbling such fascinating information as: "It will neige aujourdhui, la luna ist bleu, etc. "Roomie grins at you continues studying, evidently deeply absorbed. On closer examination you discover that he is faithfully digesting the latest issue of "PLAYBOY" while also digesting the last of the cookies you bought yesterday. Swallowing your wrath, you smile weakly at him and decline his offer to hand wrestle for beers. Stripping off your sweaty clothes you stagger to the little room at the end of the hall, known as "Flora Flush's" room. Since no one answers your knock (Flora's never Home) you enter the "head", as it is sometimes called, and climb wearily into a shower. The warm water suddenly turns scalding (peeling off a layer of your epidermis) as an unseen buddy in one of the cubicles flushes. "Watch the shower", he grunts, after your screams die away. You can't shave, since some bulb snatcher has cleaned out the lamps again, so you return to the room, just as the "boiler man's special" starts up next door. They call that room the "Joyner Health Club", and with some validity. The inmates there are health addicts. One juggles two old fly wheels on an iron bar and the other one groans through innumerable exercises. All this is not conducive to good sleeping.

Fridderstrat has changed from French to modern jazz, so you crawl into bed and bury your head under the pillow, which is useless, since Roomie has placed one of the six speakers for his Hi-fi directly under your bed (it's an 18" job, the kind that makes your bed jump in time to the bass). Accustoming yourself to the rhythm of Gene Krupa and his soothing lullabies, you are drifting off to the arms of Morpheus when the buzzer over your door rings. Roomie opens it and shrieks to the fellow who rang it. The phone call is for you, and an urgent one at that. What is it? Death in the family? The draft board? You leap from bed, run down the hall past the suddenly solicitous crowd that has collected around the booth. They're really good fellows, worrying about you like this. You slam open the door, place the receiver firmly against your ear and whisper a breathless hello. The buzz of the dial tone reaches your bewildered perception, and something warm is trickling down your ear. You give a startled shout, but your voice is drowned by the roar of mirth in the hall. The dawn of bitter suspicion breaks in your mind. SHAVING CREAM!

BEFORE WRITING COLUMN

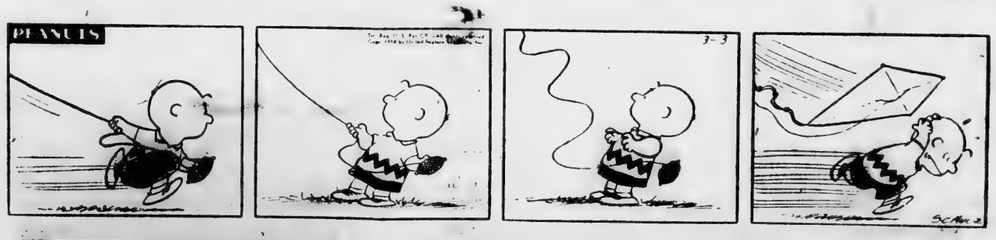
Think First, Coed Says

Mr. Gurtis Gans:

After reading your column in the February 26 Daily Tar Heel I have a feeling of utter disgust! I have read some of your previous articles and have always thought you had very good insight to the problems you have presented. However, this article shows one nothing!

Did you write about something of which you were really informed? Or did you write using your emotions as your source? You must remember that fraternities are voluntary groups. No one forces a boy to join such an organization — it's all a matter of free will.

As to this so-called hazing — you're one of the few persons at Carolina whom I've ever heard complain about it. Have you ever heard fraternity boys complain? No harm is done from which the free-thinking individuals can't extricate themselves if they see fit. In pledging a fraternity, these boys know what they're getting into and probably look forward to it. All tasks are assigned and carried out in a good-natured way. In later years, these assignments are looked back to as some of the best times in young men's lives. Besides, anytime one of the "doomed" feel that they have taken all they can, they can always depledge the "despicable group."



I do agree with you, however, that serious hazing, if there is any of that sort at Carolina, should be abolished.

Being that I am a girl you might say, "What right have you to criticize?" However, what concerns the University concerns every student, male or female, Greek or independent.

I say to you, Mr. Gans, investigate, interview, but mainly think before you write!

Hallford Praises Work Of Symposium Secretaries

By DAVIS YOUNG

When one enters the office of the Carolina Symposium these days, he is either greeted by the sight of Mary Jane Fisher, general secretary busily typing at her desk, or by the friendly business-like manner of Herman Godwin, executive secretary of the group.

The contribution that has been made by these two efficient people cannot and will not be overlooked when the final success of the 1958 Symposium is evaluated.

The two of them have worked in the background for this year's program, but have been most important in the planning and execution of all of the various Symposium tasks.

Sonny Hallford, chairman of the 1958 Symposium had separate praise for both of them when queried as to their contributions. He said, "without the aid and assistance of Mary Jane as our secretary, I would hesitate to predict just where the Symposium would be.

"There aren't words available to praise Mary Jane enough for her services. The devotion and loyalty displayed by her has been one of my greatest compensations in working on the Symposium.

He went on to praise Godwin by saying, "Herman has done an outstanding job in assisting me with the various duties involved in planning and executing the Symposium. If our program is successful, it will be largely due to the efforts of these two people."

Active On Campus

Both Miss Fisher and Godwin have demonstrated outstanding participation in other activities here on campus too. Mary Jane is a member of the Alpha Delta Pi sorority, secretary of the Orientation Committee and a member of the YWCA Cabinet.

Godwin is currently a member of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, chairman of the Orientation Committee, a Morehead Scholar, on the Attorney General's Staff and in the Order of the Grail. He is a past member of Phi Eta Sigma, freshmen scholastic honorary and was vice president of last year's sophomore class.

Delayed Rushing

The Legislator declared "that delayed rushing will prove quite advantageous both to the fraternities and rushees."

He went on to say "the advantages inherent in providing both a longer period of adjustment for the freshmen and a more comprehensive viewpoint on the part of both fraternities and potential rushees. . . . would prove advantageous to all."

He explained that the rushee would have more time to decide whether to join a fraternity and, if so, which one.

Regressive Effect

The Ways and Means Committee will consider Greer's bill before it is returned to the Student Legislature. Jack Lawing (UP), chairman of that committee, stated yesterday.

"What deeply distresses me is that the proponents of the bill do not realize the regressive effect such action would have on the majority of the fraternities.

"It is an idealistic measure which would help some freshmen and virtually destroy several fraternities. A far-reaching bill of this nature should come from those more closely connected with the problems. I intend to fight it."

Pat Adams, SP floorleader, explained that he was seeking further knowledge on the fraternity rush system and did not at the present time feel qualified to take a stand.

Al Goldsmith, UP floorleader declared, "There are many arguments both for and against delayed rushing.

IFC Consent

"However, if the Legislature is to act on the issue of delayed rush, this action should come only atfer an exhaustive study of the consequences of this change has been made, and then it should come only with the consent of the Inter-Fraternity Council."

He went on to say the "IFC is the proper place" to make such changes as it is "the representative body of all fraternities."

"Although the Legislature has the power to pass this bill and enact delayed rushing," he warned," it would be most unwise to make such a sweeping change without the IFC's cooperation."

Claiming that next Thursday was not "the proper time to pass on such a proposal," the floorleader said he believed the "bill will be overwhelmingly defeated."

"It was most unfortunate that Gary Greer chose to surprise the Legislature and fraternities the way he did," Goldsmith concluded.

Bob Carter (SP) took the viewpoint that the problem of rush should be determined by the fraternities through the IFC subject to the approval of the Student Legislature was made up of half fraternity and half non-fraternity students, he said he did not feel that the dorm men had the experience to determine when rush should be.

Don't Like Outsiders

"People do not like outsiders telling them what to do," he ended.

Cravern Brewer, UP member of the ways and means committee, said that the pasage of the bill would hurt the fraternities. He asserted that the problem of controling "dirty rushing" would be greatly enlarged.

Jim Pittman, SP member of the same committee, declared that he did not like the ideal of deferred rush and that he was against it.

He told a reporter that he had talked with students at Duke, which uses the delayed rushing system, and that they were dissatisfied with their system.

He did not like the idea of a pledge having to wait a whole year rather than the present six months before he can become a brother.

Charlie Gray, a UP member of the same committee, said that the issue should have been first presented to the fraternities and that an effort should have been made to win the support of the fraternities before introducing the bill.

A Campus-to-Career Case History

Paul A. Twigg, Bachelor of Architectural Engineering, University of Detroit, '53, in front of the 6-story building whose construction he supervised.

Paul Twigg's Baby

Paul A. Twigg had been with Michigan Bell Telephone Company for about a year when he was assigned to a project that was a "dream" for a young architectural engineer. He was to supervise construction of a 6-story, 175,000-square-foot addition to the telephone building in Grand Rapids.

"For the next two years," Paul says, "I lived with the job as assistant to the Project Engineer. I interpreted the architect's plans and specifications for the contractor, inspected construction, made on-the-spot revisions where necessary, and worked out the many problems which arise on a project of this size.

"I kept the Engineering office in Detroit informed through daily logs and weekly progress reports. My boss provided reassuring supervision and advice on major problems by means of periodic visits to the job."

The building was completed last August. Understandably, Paul thinks of it as his "two-million-dollar baby."

"An assignment like this really gives you a feeling of accomplishment," Paul says. "It provides invaluable experience in your field. In fact, I've already been able to complete the first section of my Professional Registration Examinations as an Architectural Engineer."

To engineers in many fields, the Bell Telephone Companies offer big and interesting assignments—assignments that challenge your ability, capitalize on your training and provide real advancement opportunities.

Many young men are finding interesting and rewarding careers in the Bell Telephone Companies. Find out about the career opportunities for you. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus. And read the Bell Telephone booklet which is on file in your Placement Office.

Maryland Retains ACC Indoor Track Title

By DAVE WIBLE

The Maryland Terps, fielding power in every event, won their third straight ACC Indoor track championship here last night in a meet that saw four new conference records posted and two more equaled.

Terp distance man Burr Grim played the leading part by setting a new 2-mile record and tying the mile mark. Adding to the Terp record smashing club was the 2-mile relay team of Fleming, Rams, West and Harvey. Another Terp, Tom Tait tied his own high jump record.

South Carolina's Dave Coates got the meet off to a great start yesterday morning by heaving the shot past the conference mark. His throw of 52' ¾" topped the 51' 1½" record set by Lowshe of Duke in 1955.

Carolina's Dave Scurlock running in three events posted a new conference mark in the 600. Maryland's Robert Lowndes had set a new record in the afternoon trials to 1:15.7 but Scurlock came back in the finals and clocked 1:12.7. He also won the 880 and anchored Carolina's relay team which came home third.

The most exciting moments of the always colorful meet came during the two-mile run. Grim broke the record but not without plenty of trouble from Carolina's Wayne Bishop who was a doubtful starter.

Bishop and Grim stepped out from the pack at the start. Running as one the lead changed 12 times in the 20 lap race and was not decided until Grim passed Bishop in the back stretch of the final lap. He poured on his famous kick and won by 15 yards.

Two of the listed doubtful starters did not compete. Dave Sime of Duke, last year's 60-dash champion, did not want to risk injuring a sore leg and Carolina's Everett Whatley, Grim's mile threat, was not fully recovered from a case of the measles.

South Carolina's Don Goodroe joined Grim and Scurlock on the double winner list. He won both the high and low hurdles defeating defending champion Jim Starboard of Maryland.

Mermen Get Five More Medals; A Total Of 11

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Carolina's swimming team, unbeaten during the regular season and champions of the Atlantic Coast Conference, displayed the strength of its individual members again yesterday afternoon in Bowman Gray Pool as the Tar Heel swimmers took first places in five of the seven events.

The Tar Heel winners were Mac Mahaffy in the 100 yard butterfly, Walt Rose in the 100 yard freestyle, Tony Schiffman in the 440 yard freestyle, and Ned Meekins in the high diving event. The other Carolina first was taken by the 400 yard medley relay team composed of Brent Nash, Mahaffy, Bill Zickgraf, and Rose.

Fadgen Sets Record

North Carolina State mermen won the 200 yard breaststroke and the 100 yard backstroke. The Wolfpack's Dick Fadgen took his third win of the meet in the breaststroke event when he set a new conference and pool record of 2:28.9. State's other victory came in the 100 yard backstroke where Frank Merchel edged out Carolina's Brent Nash for the win.

Prior to the high diving event Charles McHugh, Chairman of the ACC Swimming Committee, presented the ACC team championship trophy to Carolina co-captains Bill Roth and Walt Rose.

Schiffman Paces Tar Heels

Combined with the results of the finals held Friday night, Carolina swept first places in eleven of the sixteen events. Tony Schiffman led the Tar Heel parade with three firsts followed closely by Ned Meekins and Walt Rose with two apiece.

All of the relay events were captured by Carolina teams.

In all of the events run yesterday except the 100 yard butterfly the winning time was better than any qualifying time. Again with the exception of the 100 yard butterfly, all the events were won by the swimmer who had the best qualifying time.

Seniors Graduate

Next year Carolina Coach Pat Earey will have a great rebuilding job to do to replace five seniors who will graduate. The loss of Mac Mahaffy, Billy Zickgraf, Walt Rose, Bill Roth, and Ned Meekins will put a big dent into the present lineup.

Bowman Gray Pool will again host the ACC championships next year on February 25, 26, and 27.

THE SUMMARY

100-yard butterfly: Mahaffy (UNC), Ackerman (Cl), Bell (Md), Hough (D), Turner (UNC). Time: 1:00.7.

100-yard freestyle: Rose (UNC), Zickgraf (UNC), Young (D), Roth (UNC), Ascherfeld (Md). Time: 0:52.1.

ACC TRACK NOTES

Loss Of Four Big Men Hurt Crowd At Meet

By BILL KING

Briefs from ACC Track Meet . . .

WUNC-TV, unbeknown to many fans, carried full coverage of the big meet from 8:15 p.m. until the end . . . . It was hard to give either the swimming or track meet undivided attention . . Both had some outstanding competitors and many fans consulted their programs for times then rushed back and forth from the pool to the gym until the swim meet ended about 5:30.

Officials of the meet are to be congratulated. Everything ran very smoothly and, more important, on time . . . There's a good chance that the meet will be held here again next year.

Ev Whatley and Wayne Bishop were not sure whether they would run until right up to the time they were scheduled to take the boards . . . . When the starters lined up for the takeoff Bishop was there but Whatley was not . . . . It wasn't announced until late yesterday that South Carolina's ace miler and two miler Bill Latham wouldn't run in the two mile event . . . . . Had Bishop not started Maryland's Burr Grim would have been a cinch to win the race . . . . Dave Sime's decision not to run cut the anticipated crowd considerably but there was still a good turnout.

With events in the ACC freshman and varsity division plus the non-conference division there were a total of 50 events run . . . Carolina coach Dale Ranson was a tireless worker thoughout as he always is when there's any type track on tap . . . . . The boards used in Woollen are the same ones used in the Tin Can . . . . The track is one-tenth of a mile long. However, ten laps constitutes a mile in Woollen, while it takes ten and a half in the "Can." They had to cut corners there somewhere.

The officials for the evening session were dressed in tuxedos, lending that air of "class" to the meet . . . . . Many of the officials were administrative and athletic leaders here . . . One of the spectators on hand was former Carolina mile and two-miler, Bobby Barden . . . Bobby graduated here in 1956 . . . . . Assistant football coach George Barclay showed up with a fractured finger . . . Fractured it during practice Friday.

Grail Mural Meet Set

Final preparations are being made for the First Annual Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree which will be held in Woollen Gym Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

The Jamboree designed to bring dormitory and fraternity men closer together, is a joint project of the Intramural Department, and the Order of the Grail honorary society. Each social fraternity on campus has been matched up by lot with a dormitory to form a joint jamboree team. A total of 26 teams in three divisions will be competiting.

On the first day, four-team round robin doubles tournaments will be conducted in handball, table tennis, badminton, and half court basketball. In addition, the first half of the archery and foul shooting competition will be completed.

The Pairings

The pairings are: SAE—Grimes, ATO—Stacy (2), Kappa Sig—Ruffin, Beta-Connor, Chi Phi-BVP, KA—Lewis, Phi Kappa Sigma—Old West, DU———Everett, Theta Chi—Joyner (2), SPE—Grimes (2), Delta Sig—Aycock, ZBT—Manly, Lambda Chi—Joyner.

Zeta Psi—Cobb (2), Sigma Nu—Stacy, Sigma Chi—Winston, Phi Delt—Old East, PiKA—Alexander, Chi Psi—Manley, St Anthony's—Winston (2), Phi Lamb—Cobb, DKE—Mangum, TEP—Steele, Kap Psi—Graham, and A K Psi—Whitehead.

Many of the fraternities have had their partner teams over for supper to make final preparations. Trophies will be awarded after the meet.

Hallford Answers Charges By Ragsdale; Public Debate Slated Wednesday Night

Courts Amendment Is Topic For Forum

By ED ROWLAND

Sonny Evans and George Ragsdale will speak on the proposed amendment to the student constitution combining the men's and women's honor councils at an open forum Wednesday night in Carroll Hall.

Evans is expected to urge the passage of the amendment and Ragsdale is to oppose it. The meeting, sponsored by the Forum Committee of GMAB, will open at 8 p.m.

Sonny Hallford, attorney general, and Kit Whitehurst, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, will be on the stage to answer specific questions from the floor. Benny Thomas will be the forum moderator.

The honor councils are presently set up to handle cases according to sex, trying only violations of the Honor Code, which puts a student on his honor not to lie, cheat or stel. The student body will vote on the amendment in a special election Tuesday, March 11.

The bill itself has evoked bitter controversy, both in the Student Legislature and among student body officials. Judiciary members have issued statements opposing the change, while executive officials have favored it.

Thomas, chairman of GMAB, said yesterday, "We realize this time is in direct conflict with fraternity and sorority meetings on Wednesday night; however, this is the only feasible time between now and election day to hold the forum."

Thomas went on to encourage groups who have conflicts that night to bear the significance of the changes in mind and make every effort to attend. He said, "Every interested student should be there to ask questions or make any short pertinent comments."

Under the proposed system, the Honor Council will try both men and women, but a Women's Honor Council will be retained to try violations of the Campus Code by women.

Code violations by men will still be tried by the Student Council. The amendment will not effect this portion of the court structure.

SONNY HALLFORD

Statement Asserts Real Issue Avoided

Sonny Hallford charged yesterday that George Ragsdale "concentrated his remarks on casting dispersions on an individual's integrity." Hallford referred to Ragsdale's statement last week which accused Hallford of not being consistently in favor of the Honor Council amendment.

Hallford, Student attorney general, said he felt Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, did not focus his remarks on the real issue involved. He added that his reservations about the bill did not pertain to the fundamental principle of a combined council, but to mechanics of it.

Hallford said some of the reservations he has about the amendment could be corrected in the special session of the Legislature tonight.

Hallford's statement in full:

"In regards to the statements made by the Chairman of the Men's Honor Council, George Ragsdale, I have only the following comment to make. I am stunned by the statements George Ragsdale has made concerning this entire matter. I feel that the Chairman did not focus his remarks on the real issue involved, but rather he concentrated his remarks on casting dispersions on an individual's integrity.

Real Issue

"I feel that the real issue involved is whether we should have one Council to try honor violations for both men and women. I am of the opinion that men and women can determine whether a man or woman is guilty or not guilty of an honor violation, and that it does not require separate courts to do this.

"My reservations do not pertain to the fundamental principle involved, that is, the belief that there should be one council, but to other more mechanical measures in the bill. These are measures which the campus is not being asked to vote upon, but are measures which were left to the discretion of the Legislature, and which may be altered by that body when a need presents itself.

"We have been concerned for a long time with the matter of an honor violation resulting out of a social rule violation, and we have advocated all along that when such a case arises that it should remain in the Council or original jurisdiction.

"In this particular instance, an Honor Violation that arises from a social rule violation in the Women's Honor Council would remain in the Women's Council. Thus a woman would be tried by women in a case where extremely personal and sensitive subjects will probably arise. We advocate this not to beg the qestion, but to make provisions for what we feel is a necessary arrangment.

To Introduce Bill

"This measure will be introduced in a special session of Legislature Tuesday night to be incorporated into the bill. We do this because we are concerned with feelings, attiudes, and sentiments of the women on this campus.

"I call upon the support of all

Special Legislative Session Considers Council Revisions

A change in jurisdiction of the proposed joint honor council will be proposed at a special session of Student Legislature called for tonight at 7 o'clock in Roland Parker I and II by Don Furtado, speaker of Legislature.

Furtado said yesterday he had called this special session after hearing a request from proponents of the joint honor council bill, which passed Legislature last Tuesday.

The proponents of the bill, he said, want to clarify the jurisdiction of the judiciary such that any case involving an honor council offense, which is brought to light in a campus code offense, should remain in the original court. The reason given for this desired clarification, Furtado said, is that personal situations are most likely to arise in cases of this nature.

Concerned

In a statement contained elsewhere in The Daily Tar Heel, Sonny Hallford, representing proponents of the bill, said they were advocating the change because "we are concerned with the feelings, attitudies and sentiments of the women on this campus."

The bill, passed last week, contains amendments which will be presented to the student body for a vote on March 11. The wording of the amendments does not specifically state what would happen to cases as described above.

Amendments

In order to change these amendments to include the proposed clarifications, Legislature must approve reconsideration of the bill which contains the amendments.

One person who voted for the bill may move for reconsideration. This motion must be seconded and passed by a majority for reconsideration to be brought about.

Furtado said that regular attendance regulations will apply to tonight's special session. He urged all members to be on time since he said would not be an expectionally long meeting of Legislature.

Phi To Debate Abolition Of Greek Houses

The Phi's debate tonight on abolition of fraternities and sororities is aimed at bringing out advantages and disadvantages of the system, President Jess Stribling said yesterday.

Stribling said in a statement that if disadvantages of the system are found to outweight the advantages, logically they should be abolished. He said in the wave of adverse publicity about the Greek-letter societies lately the debate will afford proponents an opportnuity to publically defend their system.

The Phi will meet at 8 p. m. on the fourth floor of New East. Guests will be welcomed at the debate, Stribling added.

Stribling Commented, The bill will afford an excellent opportunity to openly debate the question."

Personal invitations to attend the meeting have been extended to Herbert O'Keefe, editor of the Raleigh Times, and Jonathan Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, in addition to Tar Heels staffers.

Class Rings

Juniors and seniors will have another day to place their order for class rings.

A representative will take orders for rings in the Y Court Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., the Order of the Grail announced yesterday.

SP Completes Ticket For Legislature Race

The Student Party completed its slate of candidates for the Student Legislature and discussed its stand on current campus issues last night. Student Body President Sonny Evans addressed the group on the party's responsibility.

In addressing the newly nominated candadates, Evans said that they each must make up their minds on current campus issues on the basis of what they know to be right.

The question of endorsement of a candidate for editor of The Daily Tar Heel was brought up. Since no one has formally announced his candidacy, the party decided to wait until the candidates can make their intentions known.

The Student party also chose a new treasurer to handle its finances during the campaign, he is Erwin Fuller.

The candidates nominated last night were: Dorm men's IV; Ronald Rowe, Otto Funderbuck, Leon Holt, Jack Raper Dorm Men's V; Ken Harris, Bill Porter.

Dorm Women's; Connie Bernstein, Betty K. Johnson, Betty Zeh. Town Women's; Nancy Davis.

Town Men's III; Jim Pittman, Bill Lamm Harold Dunnaodn Town Men's IV; Gerald Bass.

There legislature seats not filled currently or those nominations which are refused or invalidated will be taken up as the first order of business next week.

In addition to those nominations, a discussion of the Student Party platform will be held, and certain important campus issues will be acted upon as to endorsement or not:

Next Monday's meeting will be the nominating session for the major campus offices of Student Body President, Vice President, Secretary and Treasurer. Head cheerleader and National Student's Association Coordinator candidates will be endorsed and Senior Class officer candidates will be chosen.

Student Party Chairman Pat Admas urges all party members to participate in nominations next week, and to bring the best qualified candidates available at Carolina before the party:

Public Lecture Set By Ice Age Expert

Katie Stewart Is Coed Head Of Orientation

Katie Stewart, junior coed from Norfolk, Va:, has been named chairman of women's orientation, Herman Godwin, Orientation chairman, announced yesterday.

Miss Stewart was selected from four candidates by a bi-partisan selections committee. The original field of nine applicants had been screened by the Women's Residence Council.

The post is the first of its kind. Previously women's orientation had been separate from the men's, but this year the programs wil be merged under the direction of Godwin.

Godwin said, "We congratulate Katie upon her appointment. Her capabilities and sincerity make her outstanding: I feel confident she will do an excellent job:"

Miss Stewart, a member of Tri-Delt Sorority, is majoring in political science: She transfered to Carolina from Georgetown Visitation College in Washington, D. C.

Here she is active in the UP and the AFROTC Angel Flight, is a member of the Women's Residence Council: Her previous experience in orientation stems from similar work at Georgetown: She was president of the student body there.

UP Convention Picks 19 Student Legislators

With 15 delegating totalling 132 students the University Farty initiated its "nominating convention" when it selected 19 student Legislators during a one and half hour meeting last night.

The convention had to vote by delegations twice; the other nominations were made by acclamation.

A political duel developed when Charlotte Pope and Sylvia Crumpler were nominated for the same six months seat in the Dorm Women's district.

After the delegations had been polled, the tally showed Crumpler to be the party's standard-bearer for this Student Legislature seat.

George Ragsdale, then warned the delegations not to hold back their best candidates to run for Senior Class offices. He explained that Student Legislature seats were much more important than the class offices.

He asked the delegations to put their best candidates "in a place where they can do something."

The second vote was taken to determine which one of three candidates would have to run for a six months seat rather than a year seat in Town Women's District.

Doug Kellan and Mary Hartzog were chosen to run on the UP ticket for one year seats in that district. Margaret Boaz will run for the six month seat in the same district.

In Dorm Men's I Charlie Gray was nominated for a year seat, and one year seat was left open. Christopher Jones in Dorm Men's II got endorsement for a one year seat, and one year and one six months seat was left open.

At this time the party made no nominations for two one year seats in Dorm Men's III. In Dorm Men's IV Sam B. Smith was nominated for one of four one year seats.

Angus Duff and Bill King were selected for one year seats in Dorm Men's V. From the Women's Dorm District Holly Deifell, Joyce Strickland and Carol Tieslau were nominated for one year seats.

Where Is The Monster—Durham Or Chapel Hill?

If Coach Frank McGuire has "created a monster" in pressing for good conduct at basketball games, like Duke's Bill Murray says he has, it is most unfortunate that it has taken on a partisan form.

The truth is that had Carolina played elsewhere in the ACC besides at Duke Friday night, this "monster" to which Mr. Murray refers probably never would have shown its ugly head.

So it seems, Mr. Murray, that your monster is little more than a creaming band of Duke students who get your nod when they fight amongst themselves, push onto the court when a game is in session and behave so badly that assistance is demanded to maintain control of the game.

This is what you call a "monster" created by a coach known across the country for his good sportsmanship and the good sportsmanship of those who compose his teams.

Indeed, it is a monster; but we would describe it as the very kind of monster which Coach McGuire and other ACC offficials seek to eliminate by their cries for better behavior and pleas for improved sportsmanship in the gymnasiums of the ACC.

There is yet another kind of monster roaming our campuses. Generally, they talk when they should be listening; they blind themselves to problems and criticize those who would remedy them; they forth from the mouth charges which are ill-conceived and discreditable.

Sometimes people do create monster characteristics of others. It is this latter type, Mr. Murray, which you should examine quite closely.

You may find that the monster whom you have described is in Durham, and not in Chapel Hill.

LET'S TAKE A RIDE

Your Tickets, Please

(Ed: Note—This little bit of prose was taken from the Texas Christian University Skiff.)

Ever ride on a roller coaster?

Just like a college semester, isn't it?

Your buy your ticket at registration, and swoosh, you're off.

The first six weeks compare to the clanking haul to the top for the big drop.

Just when you seem to have it made, comes the first test, and from the top to the bottom you go plunging in a hurry.

Agonizing, wasn't it?

But, that over, up you go agin in a head-spinning flurry, something like that first date.

Breathraking, wasn't it?

But neither the high points nor the low places seem to last long. It's either up or down. Having reached the top again, you can see that four term themes are ahead.

Hold your hat: down you go.

Terrifying, wasn't it?

And beyond the next ascent is an unexpected curve—the unannounced test.

Pwew! That one's a hooker, barely made it.

Sickening, wasn't it?

There's only one way to go, and that's down.

Better close your eyes at the top of the next one: the only thing in sight is a rush of themes and finals.

Now you're sure that only a fool would even get on this thing. From here to the end of the run it's up and down, touch and go.

And there's another curve!

A Monday morning test.

Despairing, wasn't it?

Just a few more minor dips, and..

Ah! Someone is putting on the brakes. All over.

Big laugh, wasn't it?

Let's buy another ticket.

Compassion For Our Robin Hood

We don't agree with Federal Judge Don Gilliam that Johnston County's Robinhood, Percy Flowers, should be treated with leniency although he may have "been good to many people."

Judge Gilliam Friday reduced an 18-months Atlanta penitentiary sentence to a year and a day, gave Flowers a suspended term for liquor conspiracy and dismissed a pending $18,000 federal income tax case against him.

He did it, said the newspapers, remarking that he might have been "too severe" on Flowers earlier, and recognizing that while Flowers "appears to have had no respect for the law, he has many good qualities."

He also has an aging prison record and a reputation throughout Eastern North Carolina for getting done—one way or another—just about anything he wants.

But maybe we should have compassion for middle—aged men who pistol-whip federal revenue agents, who are in contmept of court for threatening federal witnesses, and who throw themselves upon the mercy of the coutr on numerous other charges.

Let's Don't Take What Isn't Ours

If the student legislature mandates the removal of "bias clauses" from fraternity charters, we wonder how long it will be before someone taps the Greek societies on the back and says:

"O. K., boys, you no longer have have discriminatory clauses in your charters. Now you must put your revised charters in practice."

The stick then would be raised, and unless fraternities conformed to the non-discrimination clauses of their charters—unless, in fact, they practiced non-discrimination—it could be rough sledding for the Greek societies.

We make this observation not because we are personally discriminatory; we will fight with others to give to certain groups the rights which are theirs.

But we also count ourselves among those who believe in the right to form private societies and operate them as we see fit—without interference from outside, public groups who are fighting moral battles on other grounds.

It's one thing to march toward victory in an area where evils exist. But it's another when, marching toward that victory, the soldiers begin looting private property and taking what is not theirs.

This Is Era Of Television —Not Atoms

By WHIT WHITFIELD

That peculiar race of people who fancy themselves prophets of things to come, otherwise known as modern historians, have already designated this era as the Era of the Atom. They hardly leave posterity choice in the matter.

Any fool knows that history should be written by historians who know only what they have read by other historians who only knew what they read by other historians and infinitum.

With this assumption in mind we would like to add to the conjecturing by calling this the era of television. Why? Because television is melding the minds of men as nothing in history save the New Testament has.

How can television wield so much power? Easy.

Take the Really Big She-ow for instance. In the battle to cloud men's minds they have presented:

An atomic attack on stage.

Skin diving, in a small inlet built in the theatre lobby.

The Spanish American War with Teddy and the original cast.

The Spanish Armada.

The Indian half of the French and Indian War.

The Ku Klux Klan unmasked.

Martian Gondoliers, complete with gondolas and canals.

The First edition of the paper back "Encyclopedia Britannica."

The Arkansas National Guard.

A New York school war.

A Texas cattle drive, and miny, miny more.

Other producers have presented like programs whenever possible in their efforts by the American soul. And with this type entertainment how can they fail? Atomic Era? Not hardly.

We noticed in one of the Sunday supplements an interesting article entitled " Married Victor Borge," followed by "By His Wife." We thought this showed great presence of mind and was very appropriate. The question which comes to mind is who would write "I Married Victor Borge" BUT his wife?

A friend warned her against buying. Said Mrs. Getty: 'What you're trying to tell me is that Paul is a crook.' Then she added proudly: 'But he's awfully smart, isn't he?' "

VIEW FROM THE HILL

Fraternities, Honor Bill Rehashed

By CURTIS GANS

What the campus will vote on next Tuesday will be simply whether there will be a joint judicial court for honor code violations.

It is a funny thing that those who have never served on a joint court are the one's most against it. Those who have seen it work and who have been part of a joint court system are all behind the bill.

There are many people behind the bill, including the attorney general of the student body who has conquered his "reservations" about the permanent juror clause in the bill in order to see a joint court and a jury trial system set up on the campus.

The issue at the present time is whether the campus will have one standard of justice or a dual standard of justice based on the false hypothesis that honor is something that can be distinguished by sex. Honor is an individual matter, and a conception of honor differs from individual to individual, not by sex.

The time has passed since a separate standard of justice, one for men and one for women, was in vogue. What is being looked for now is the greatest measure of justice for all, regardless of sex.

This can best be obtained if there is only one unified interpretation of what is meant by lying, cheating, and stealing.

The issue is a clear one, and the student body should not be misled into thinking that the jury trial system, the permanent jurors, and social violations are part of the issue involved. They are not, since these other things are part of the legislature's domain, and something for the student body to think about when they vote in regular spring elections.

There is a motion to be introduced in the legislature tonight, which will serve to clarify what happens when a social case becomes an honor case, such as a girl who has come in an hour late and lies about her whereabouts. The proposed clarification will state that this and similar cases will be handled by the court of original jurisdiction or the women's campus code court.

This leaves the road clear to have an honor court which will be dealing solely with honor violations, and provide less excuse for those who say that they "will be unwilling to talk".

This system is currently in operation in many colleges. It is working successfully in almost all of them. This is not necessarily the case at UNC, where there is strong sentiment to change to a joint court.

Many members of the present honor court are opposed to the change, but such notable former honor council members as Sonny Evans, who have served under the present separate system are staunch supporters of the measure.

The single court way is the way for a true conception of justice. The efforts of many people for a long time are at stake next Tuesday.

In order to clarify things for many students who have asked questions as to whether this observer was backtracking in his Saturday's column, this observer is still for delayed rushing and elimination of university control of social regulations, and against bias clauses and excessive hazing. This observer is staunchly against the abolishment of fraternities on the campus as a violation of the right of any group to organize. There are evils to any system; the fraternity system is no exception. However, the job is to rid the system of the evils and perfect it rather than destroy the system.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

He'll Vote For Revision

To The Editor:

It seems to me that there are a few sentimentalists around who want to cling tenaciously to an antiquated judiciary system. These same few are the ones who make the loudest noises about it and then speak with a tear in their eyes of the "good old days" when there was more than one Honor Council, through which a policy of justice and fair play for all definately was not evident.

I would like to pose a question to those few sentimentalists and especially those of the female population, "Is justice for women different from justice for men?" There is no reason why it should be, but yet it has seemed to be quite different in the past.

With the goal in mind of fair play for all, this proposed composite Honor Council, which, incidentally, is more than fairly representative, will be a large step toward a more mature outlook on the subject of judiciary systems. I will, therefore, cast my vote for the proposed revision.

CHUCK MARSH

The Polls Controversy

To The Editor:

I was a bit appalled to read in Saturday's Daily Tar Heel the letter from the present and past polls committee chairmen crying over their so-called "injustice."

In the letter the chairmen point out that they visited the editor in November requesting that the poll results be printed. In turn, I would like to point out that Doug Eisele did not take office until December, that he was not working on The Daily Tar Heel the latter part of November.

Secondly, I distinctly remember spending an entire afternoon the very last week in November trying to locate former Chairman Lewis to obtain the poll results. When one of The Daily Tar Heel staff members at last located him, he refused to release the information for publication (for political reasons obviously because one question asked in the poll involved the recall election).

Later after the present editor came into office Chairman Lewis finally came in with the results, requesting that they be run in a series of articles, which the assistant news editor refused because she felt the results should be released in one complete story. (And with which I am in agreement.)

Dissatified with this Chairman Lewis took his results and went home. Still later, the polls committee sent their results back again, written by someone who had such poor handwriting that the news editor took one look at the chicken scratch and promptly asked GMAB to decipher and return. That was the last any member of The Daily Tar Heel staff recalls seeing the poll results, by then so out of date they should have found their way to the trash can.

But now the chairmen have the audacity to complain over an editorial which should have been written weeks ago. The chairmen, in their letter, conclude by pointing out that the issue was "relatively unimportant and unconstructive." Certainly anything, that ancient is unimportant and unconstructive.

Frankly, I can think of better ways to spend my money than to have it spent on a poll which asks out of date questions and which takes months to tabulate 300 answers.

Murray Shocks Reader

To The Editor:

This observer was shocked to pick up his Sunday edition of The Daily Tar Heel and read that Bill Murray, Duke University's head football coach, had lashed out at Carolina's Frank McGuire terming his (McGuire's) action following Friday night's game "revolting."

There is often tension between both players and fans at a Carolina-Duke athletic contest, but Friday night tempers were running unusually high. Coach McGuire was absolutely correct in keeping his team on the bench and asking for police protection.

As it turns out, the much publicized fight after the game was among Duke students who wanted possession of the net, but it could easily have developed into a serious incident pitting Chapel Hillians against our Durham neighbors. This would be particularly true had McGuire attempted to leave the floor with his players.

Other eye witnesses to the high spirits exhibited by Duke partisans sitting in their student section should concur with this report. Time and again supporters of the opposition came on the floor in protest of a referee's decision or to harrass Carolina players.

There is not a Carolina fan who would have denied Duke students the right to cheer their team to the victory which they deserved, but we cannot condone bad sportsmanship regardless of the tensions surrounding the game.

And now, papers all along the Eastern Seaboard are carrying reports of Murray's remarks. Not only was his postgame statement in poor taste and uncalled for, but it has also gone a long way towards increasing the possibility of future incidents.

Coach McGuire should continue his efforts to improve sportsmanship in the ACC. Friday night's game should spur him on towards his goal. As for Murray, he should worry about his football team.

French Artists' Prints On Exhibit In Gallery

An exhibition of 50 original prints in black and white and color opened Sunday at Person Hall Art Gallery here. The exhibit will continue through Mareh 25.

Called "Contemporary French Artists," the show contains works as varied in method and results as are the artists themselves, who represent several nationalities of descent and origin though shiring common residence and artistic aims.

Among the better know names of the exhibit are Buffett, Campigli, Hayter, Lurcat, Severini and Zadkine. Younger artists included are Brianchon, Dubuffet, Singier, Friedlander, Zao-Wou-Ki, Music, Marino, Prassinow and Schneider.

While many of the exhibitiors are painters or otherwise well-known in the arts, their graphic works are in some cases less known. The prints hold qualities comparable to heavier works with subtleties and impacts as interesting as paintings.

There are literal and figurative works in the group, but many of the pieces can be clased as abstrct-expressionism, which, as a movement, holds universal qualities not always present in works by artists of varying background and interests.

Lent by art dealer Ferdinand Roten of Baltimore, the exhibit continues through Tuesday, March 25. Person Hall's gallery hours are from 8:30 to 5:30 daily; evenings, Monday through Thursday, from 7:30 to 9:00; Saturdays, from 8:30 to 12:30 and from 2:30 until 5:00. Sunday hours are from 2:30 to 5:00 o'clock.

Concert Band Takes To Road

The University Concert Band under the direction of Herbert W. Fred, an instructor in the UNC Music Department, will present a series of seven concerts during its annual spring tour March 4-7.

Evening concerts will be given in Lumberton, Kinston and Greenville. The UNC Concert Band will also present morning and afternoon programs in Laurinburg, Pineland College at Salemburg, Smithfield and Wilson. The tour is sponsored by the University Music Department in cooperation with the student government.

The program, which will include many original band works as well as several specially prepared transcriptions, will range from the Baroque music of Bach and Frescobaldi to the works of contemporary American composers.

Officers of the UNC band are Eddie Bass of Farmville, president; Jerry Sullivan of Wilmington, vice-president; and William Kellam of Greensboro, secretary-treasurer.

Society Honors J. M. Morehead

John Motley Morehead was given a "Citation of Honor Friday by the North Carolina Society of New York at its 60th annual meeting on the St. Regis Hotel Roof.

General Kenneth C. Royall, President of the N. C. Society, delivered the citation.

President William C. Friday of the Consolidated University presented a certificate of appreciation on behalf of Morehead's Alma Mater.

Royall, former Secretary of the Army and native of Goldsboro, listed Morehead's business and scientific achievements and his benefactions to many causes, particularly those in his native state, including the Morehead Scholarships, the Morehead Building, Planetarium, Art Gallery and Sun Dial at the here.

Henderson Hits 'Methuselah' Showing

Bernard Shaw's official biographer had strong words of criticism for a pre-Broadway rendition of the playwright's "Back To Methuselah" here this weekend.

Archibald Henderson, who viewed the Saturday night presentation of the Shaw play, declared today "The play itself, leaving out Shaw, was amusing enough to hold interest, but it was not deep. It was light and superficial.

"I found it difficult to recognize as a work of Shaw, except for occasional witticisms and bits of philosophic insight. As a whole it was damnably bowdlerized—distorted and cheapened," declared Prof. Henderson. He added that "I think Shaw would have been much upset by it."

In this connection Prof. Henderson recalled that a New York play director once cabled Shaw that it would be impossible to produce his play because it was so long it couldn't meet the spectators' train schedules. "Change the train schedules then," Shaw cabled back.

"Back To Methuselah," is the "deepest" play that Shaw wrote, in the opinion of Prof. Henderson. The Arnold Moss production given here this weekend "throws aside a large part of Shaw's deeper philosophy, while lighter parts were thrown in to get a laugh. And this is not a light play," he said.

Campus Chest Far Short Of Goal; Only Two Days Remain In Campaign

The Campus Chest Drive is $7800 short of its goal with only two days remaining in the campaign.

So far there has been $1,300 contributed during the drive, Co-chairman Libby McCord said yesterday. The goal has been set at $2,000 this year

The official conclusion for the drive is Wednesday. However, any persons or groups who have not turned in their contributions by that date are asked to do so soon after.

"The amount of contributions to date is far from what it should have been," Miss McCord said.

She said the largest men's dorm on campus has given less than a third of the amount given by a dorm one-eighth of it size. "This is an example of one of the areas which has fallen down greatly."

She urged those who have not made a contribution and those who desire to donate more, to do so "in this last lap of the drive" to reach the $2,000 goal. Contributions may be given to solicitiors or to attendants of the special Campus Chest Drive booth in the YWCA Building.

The Campus Chest Drive has set a $700 goal for today and Wednesday in hopes to fulfill the $2,000 mark for the campaign. The goal set for each individual is 10 cents.

President of Student Body Sonny Evans yesterday made this statement about the Campus Chest Drive:

The Campus Chest campaign ends on Wednesday. It is my earnest hope that we will be able to pass our goal of $2,000: In times such as these, where students all over the world are in need of aid, it seems a shame that we American students in our arrogant unconcern and smugness do not feel our responsibilities as part of the world student community.

Duke Plays Pass The Buck

Chalk up one for Duke. The Durham school has pulled off one of the cleverest little games of "pass the buck" that we've ever seen. We're speaking of the aftermath of the Carolina-Duke game Friday night.

A visitor to the state who had no interest in Carolina or Duke could have picked up most any state paper over the weekend and quickly drawn the conclusion that Frank McGuire and his Carolina Tar Heels caused the melee following the game and that McGuire provoked the unsportsmanlike conduct by Duke students during the game.

Well, there are two sides to this issue and it's about time somebody realized it. In the first place there was a group of Duke students who spent the entire game making gestulations, some of them obscene, at McGuire. That's really a cute way to treat a visiting coach, but how much mention did that get?

Football coach Bill Murray said that McGuire held his team on the bench for police escort following the game and called it "the most revolting act by a coach I've ever witnessed."

Mr. Murray, we'd like to ask you as a coach in your own rights, just why McGuire shouldn't have wanted police escort after your precious student body had insulted him and his team, not only with its fingers and hands actions but also with its little surge onto the court toward the end that forced an official to warn you rstudents about their conduct.

McGuire says he didn't ask for an escort but if he had, why not? Koodness knows your students gave every indication during the game that they wouldn't be adverse to starting something with Carolina after the game.

Duke, we congratulate you. You succeeded in making Carolina look like the culprit; hope it makes you happy. Mr. Murray, in all respect to your position versus ours, we suggest that if you must get in the picture during the basketball season, get your own house in order first.

Those students who spene the night taunting McGuire aren't doing your school any good. It's questionable whether they know a foul shot from a fly to deep centerfield anyway, so why not leave them in their dorms or fraternities to play with their fingers during a basketball game?

Tourney Should Be Best Ever

The old adage that a team has to play them "one at a time" was never more valid than it is for the teams in the ACC as tourney time approaches. There's not one sure winner in the entire field which will begin the tourney to select the NCAA representative Thursday.

The standings don't really mean much and that has been proven time and again this season. In short, any team in the group is very capable for upsetting the odds and knocking off a higher-seeded team. They've been doing it all season in this tough conference and tourney time is the ripest time of all for such an occurrence.

Carolina got the number three spot in the pairings and State got number two as the result of a draw because the two clubs finished in a tie for second place. The Tar Heels will play Clemson in the first round and that's could be a heavy assignment.

Although the Tigers finished with only a 4-10 mark in the conference, they put up many a stiff battle, one of them being against the Tar Heels in Clemson Jan. 18. Carolina barely squeezed that one out, 90-81. The Tar Heels beat the Tigers 79-55 here in the season opener.

This promises to be one of the best tournaments ever. The team that gets through this one unscathed should be able to represent the conference well anywhere. The winner has an excellent shot at the regionals in Charlotte because its opponent in the district will be only moderately strong Boston College in New York next Tuesday.

Grail-Mural Jamboree To Begin At 7 Tonight

"The Order of the Grail, in an effort to build up a situation of cooperation between independents and fraternity men, is sponsoring this week a Grail-Mural Jamboree with beautiful trophies to be given to seniors. It is the Grail's hope that this will become an annual event to which everyone looks forward and may become the source of the development of a new spirit on the campus with all of us living together as Carolina students instead of divided. The fraternity and dormitory cooperation has been wonderful, and I am certain it will be a grand success."

Student body president Sonny Evans speaking, summing up the primary aims of the first Annual Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree which will get underway tonight in Woollen Gym. The affair which will be conducted in two sessions, the first tonight from 7:00 to 9:00 and the second tomorow night at the same time, will find a total of 26 teams in competition.

Each team is composed of fraternity and dormitory men paired by lot. They will be competing for a large championship plaque which will be kept in the Woollen Gym trophy case. The name of the winning teams will be engraved on this as a permanent record. A smaller replica of the plaque will be given to the dorm and fraternity composing the team. In addition, individual trophies will be presented to the champions in each sport.

The jamboree has been designed with athletic ability in mind instead of carnival games such as the Co-Rec. Sports carvinal. Relays, badminton, table tennis, handball, half-court basketball Archery and foul shooting are the sports that will be played.

Tonight will be primarily the individual sports and half-court basketball. Tomorow night the play will be centered around three team relays plus the championship relay. The players are asked to report to the bleachers on the Main Floor of Woollen Gym promptly at 6:30 and sit in the section reserved for each team.

Burr Grim Is Toast Of Meet

Burr Grim of Maryland, living up to his pre meet reviews, took the spotlight at the Fifth Annual ACC Indoor Games last Saturday by setting a new record in the 2-mile run and by tieing or breaking the mile mark.

The reason for the doubt in the mile is caused by two sets of records, the official one not yet decided. It seems that in the official meet program, Davis of Carolina was listed as having the mile record at 4:12.5 which was set in 1940. This was Grim's time. On the other hand, The official ACC Basketball Yearbook had Carolina's Jim Betty holding the record at 4:16.3 set in 1955.

No matter which time is offical, Grim wil go on the recor books. This was Grim's last appearance in the Indoor Games but he still will be around to compete on the cinders.

All in all, the terps had five individual champions plus the winning mile and two mile relay teams. The meet was theirs from the beginning and from the looks of their freshman team, they will be just as powerful defending the crown next year. The Baby Terps scored 51 points. The second place team, Virginia had 18.

One of the most outstanding features of the meet was the way most of the events were run on time. In a large indoor meet this is unusual since many unforseen dificulties can arise.

Carolina track coach Dale Ranson said, "A show like this can not be practiced like those on broadway, I think that the cooperation of the officials and the fullfillment of their jobs made the meet a success."

Coach Ranson was especially proud of the performance of the varsity squad which placed second in the meet. "I thought they did a bang up job," he said. "With Bishop doubtful, and Whatley out, they could have fallen apart."

Carolina had a total of nine point makers plus their mile and two-mile relay team. Dave Scurlock was the big gun, winning the 600 in record time, and the 880. He also anchored the third place mile relay team.

Ranson sent special praise to miler Cowles Liipfert who after a bitter battle with Maryland's Bob Claggett, took second place going into the home stretch. Then, as Claggett tired to pass, he tripped Liipfert who fell to the floor. Liipfert quickly got up and finished fourth and later was given third when Claggett was disqualified.

28-Game Schedule

Rabb Has Big Building Job For '58 Baseball

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The sounds of cracking bats and the impact of leather on horsehide once again are coming from Emerson Stadium as the warm weather kicks off Carolina baseball practice in preparation for a 28-game schedule.

Coach Walter Rabb has his work cut out for him since pratically the whole team was lost through graduation last year. Among those who left by way of the sheepskin are: Chuck Hartman, 3b; Lee Hill, lb; and Don Lewis 2b from the infield in addition to the entire starting outfield of Dick Hutson, Joe Shook and Ivalee Hill.

Considerable losses were also suffered in the pitching department also. Joe Morgan, Don Sain, Tom Maultsby, and all-American Jim Raugh are gone. Raugh, a farmhand of the Detroit Tigers who played last summer for Durham of the Carolina League, ins now in Florida participating in spring practice.

Several Return

On the brighter side, returning are Captain Roger Hunnicutt atshortstop, Carson Oldham at 2b, and pitchers Charles Aycock, Ben Hardy, Dave Floyd, and Dave Stimpson.

The squad promises to be predominately sophomore, with the following sophs all given a shot at starting positions. Catcher-Bruce Crump, Al Baldwin, and Lindsay Frost; 3b-Harold Workman and Jerry Nestor; ss- Clyde Campbell; 1b- Vaughn Bryan, and in the outfield- Joe Temple, Gerald Griffin, Tommy aintsing, John Burgwyn, Alton Ponds, and Bob Boyette.

Footballers Don Coker and Danny Droze are also out for a starting outfield role.

Good Potential

Rabb, commenting on the team's chances, remarked "On the basis of what I saw from the freshman last year and this spring, the team has good potential. We will have as much, if not more speed than last year, and we will be strong defensively. We'll just have to wait and see what these sophomores can do against varsity competition."

The team launches a 28-game schedule on March 20th when they journey to the Sunshine State to play Rollins College of Florida.

Freshman Cagers Had Rough Time In '57-58

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The Carolina Tar Babies wound up their 57'-58' basketball season last Saturday night at Duke Indoor Stadium when they lost their fourth game of the year to Duke's Blue Imps.

The Tar Babies finished the season with a disappointing 10-9 record after a fast start was cooled off in late January. The loss of frosh sensation Doug Moe appeare to have been the crowning blow to the team.

The Tar Babies opened the season by Whipping High Point, then lost to Duke. Then they embarked upon a seven game winning streak.

The frosh rolled over Wilmington, EMI, Wake Forest, Elon, Davidson, Pfeiffer, and Wake Forest again before the State Wolflets put an end to the streak.

Sad Story

From there it was a sad story indeed, as the freshmen managed only two victories of their last ten games. Perhaps the most significant single factor in the record was the Tar Babies inability to function properly against competition from the Big Four Schools. The Tar Babies had a paltry 2-9 record against Big Four teams in comparison with an 8-0 slate against outside teams.

The brighter side of the story is the probability of Moe's return, coupled with outstanding performances throughout the season from Lou Brown and Hugh Donahue. The record this year compares unfavorably with a 17-4 slate which was compiled by last year's Tar Babies, who featured such stars as York Larese, Lee Shaffer, Mike Steppe, Dick Kepley, and John Crotty.

It must also be realized that the brand of ball played by the Big Four teams was far above average thi season and the Tar Babies had rough luck in several onc and two-point reversals.

Zeta Psi Wins Title

The Zeta Psi fraternity won the all-campus tag football championships yesterday by defeating the Peacocks, 7-0.

Murray Williams scored the only touchdown of the game. The Peacocks, winners of the graduate division, battled hard but could not overcome the superior Zete forces.

The finals had previously been scheduled and rescheduled but a long period of bad weather prohibited the contest from being played until yesterday afternoon.

Crack Swim Team Won 11 Medals

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Having swept the Atlantic Coast Conference team championship and the post season individual championships, the Carolina swimming team is now preping for the Eastern Intercollegiate Championships which will be held at Annapolis, Md. on March 14 and 15.

Last weekend the Tar Heels dominated the swimming and diving championships held in Bowman Gray Pool. Out of a possible sixteen first places Carolina mermen took eleven blue ribbons. Junior Tony Schiffman from Greensboro was high man for the Heels as he took a total of three first places.

Schiffman's victories in the 1500 meters Friday night, the 200 yard freestyle Friday night, and the 440 yard freestyle Saturday afternoon tied him with N. C. State All-American Dick Fadgen for the top number of firsts in the meet.

Ned Gets Two

Diver Ned Meekins followed Schiffman with two wins to his credit. Mac Mahaffy, Walt Rose, Bill Roth, and Bill Zickgraf all posted single wins. The other two Tar Heel victories came in relays where both the 400 yard medley team and the 400 pard freestyle team came home in front.

Coach Pat Earey plans to take eleven swimmers to Navy for the Easterns. Divers Meekins and Peter Reynolds will make the trip with Mahaffy, Rose, Roth, Zickgraf, Schiffman, Kit Mercer, Kelly Maness, Brent Nash, and Jeff Zwicker.

After the Eastern the Carolina team will travel to Ann Arbor, Michigan to participate in the AAU team championships.

The freshman meet with Greensboro High School scheduled for today has been cancelled. With this cancellation the frosh end their season with an undefeated record.

Special Session Moves To Table Amendment To Honor Council Bill

Point Of Legality Confutes Legislature

The Student Legislature voted last night to table an amendment to the Honor Council revision bill which stated, "alleged honor violations which shall arise from a case being tried in the Women's Council shall remain in this council"!

The bill, which was introduced by Al Goldsmith (UP) and Pat Adams (SP), was to give clarification on cases where women violated the Honor Code during a social case trial.

Goldsmith made the motion to table the bill indefinitely. This action meant that the amendment could be taken off the table any time after this meeting.

Goldsmith's motion came after Jerry Oppenheimer (UP) questioned the legality of the amendment to the bill. Oppenheimer argued that the amendment was actually a matter of procedure to be determined by the procedure committee.

"I don't think there are more than three people who understand the question," he commented.

Leo Wardrup (UP) charged that the amendment was 'strategically placed for a political purpose." He claimed that the amendment would sway the women voters.

Adams said that it was not right to charge expediency and that some Legislators were using every means possible against the amendment.

Student Body President Sonny Evans told the Legislators to charge the move as politically expedient if they liked, but that the real reason behind the amendment was for clarification.

He said that if the bill was tabled then the campus would remain confused.

Goldsmith said that questions had arisen which he did not foresee when writing the amendment. He explained that the meeting had reached "a legal impasse."

Before the discussion arouse over the tabling of the amendment, the merits and faults of the bill were discussed.

If it becomes necessary to alter the amendments to the Student Constitution, now before the students for a campus wide vote on Tuesday, then the day of voting for the amendments can be changed until March 13, Bob Carter said.

"I think we are attempting to define every conceivable point and in attempting to do so we are losing sight of the general intent of the bill and becoming bogged down in legal questions," Don Furtado, Student Legislature Speaker, said.

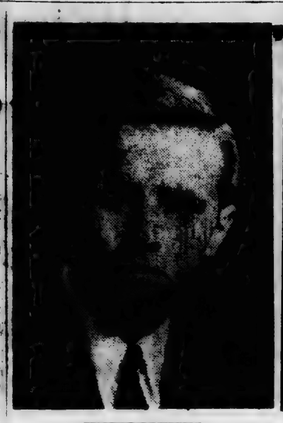
Honor Court Open Forum Set Tonight

An open forum discussion on the proposed honor system court changes will be held tonight at 8 o'clock in Carroll Hall auditorium.

The forum is being sponsored by the Forum Committee of Graham Memorial Activities Board, headed by Bill Jones.

Sonny Evans, student body president, will present the views of the proponents of the proposed changes. George Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, will speak against the changes.

Sonny Hallford, student body attorney-general; Kit Whitehurst, chairman of the Women's Honor Council; and Dot Pressly, student body secretary, will be present on the stage to comment briefly on the proposed joint honor council and to answer any questions from persons attending the open discussion.



Urges Attendance

Benny Thomas, president of Graham Memorial Activities Board, yesterday urged students to attend the discussion.

He said, "There are many conflicts on this night, but I certainly hope the various organizations and individuals with conflicts will recognize the extreme and vital importance of the decision which is being placed before the student body, and that this is the only time that such a forum could be held."

Question Period

The discussion will begin with the two opposing viewpoints from Evans and Ragsdale. After comments from the three other students mentioned, the floor will be opened for questions and comment from the audience.

IFC Names Tucker Yates President; Court Listed

Tucker Yates, an Alpha Tau Omega from Asheboro, was elected president of the Interfraternity Council Monday night.

Yates, a junior majoring in English, congratulated former president Bill Redding, Phi Gamma Delta from Asheboro, on the job he did with the IFC. He further declared his intention to seek a closer relationship among the member fraternities.

"The IFC is strongly aware of the responsibilities it must assume, and with the close cooperation of every member fraternity I feel sure that we will have a most successful and beneficial year."

In yielding the presidency to Yates, Redding commented, "I think the IFC has had an excellent year, and I wish to congratulate the members on their valuable contributions. We have made a definite step forward, and I am confident that Tucker Yates and the rest of the new executive committee will carry on and lead the IFC in a very successful year."

Other new officers elected Monday night were Vice President Walter Pitts; Kappa Alpha; Secretary Ben Keys, Sigma Alpha Epsilon; and Treasurer John Exum, Sigma Nu.

The Interfraternity Court will consist of Bob Bender, Beta Theta Pi; Jerry Blumenthal, Zeta Beta Tau; Tom Rand, Delta Kappa Epsilon and Grey Poole, Phi Delta Theta.

The Court intends to elect a new chairman at its next meeting.

Honor Council Suspends Two Coed Students

Two coeds have been suspended for violations of the Honor Code, according to the tri-monthly report of the Women's Honor Council released this week by Kit Whitehurst, chairman wof the council.

During the past three months, the council tried 14 cases involving violations of social rules, seven cases involving Honor Code violations and one case involving a violation of the Campus Code.

The cases tried for social rule violations involved careless mistakes on sign-out slips, such as statement of date of return; lateness over one hour, and accumulation of six house council offenses.

The cases tried for violation of the Honor Code were:

One dismissal because of lack of evidence on a charge of lying before Women's Honor Council during a trial for a social rules violation;

One indefinite probation given to a coed charged with lying to her dormitory house president after having helped a girl enter the dorm illegally;

One six weeks social probation and official reprimand handed down on a charge of lying to the dormitory house president after having entered the dorm illegally;

One dismissal because of lack of evidence on charges of violations of the Honor Code and Campus Code;

Suspension of a coed charged with plagiarizing on an English paper;

Suspension of a coed charged with lying in falsifying her sign-out slip, stating a destination where she did not go (this girl was on indefinite probation at the time of her trial); and

A sentence of 10 days campus and a council reprimand handed down to a coed charged with falsifying her sign-out slip such that while she allegedly stayed in Durham, returned to Chapel Hill and neglected to change her destination. No violation of the honor code was found in this case, but rather a violation of the social rules in that the coed did not obtain special permission to stay in a private home in Chapel Hill and did not observe closing hours during her visit.

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP) — A group of Democratic and Republican senators introduced today a constitutional amendment that would supplant the disability arrangement between President Eisenhower and Vice President Nixon.

Playmakers To Present 'View From The Bridge'

Arthur Miller's controversial tragedy, "A View From The Bridge," is to be presented by the Carolina Playmakers in The Playmakers Theatre, March 12-16 at 8:30 p.m.

The play, unlicensed for public performance by London's Lord Chamberlain, nevertheless enjoyed a successful run in the English capitol through the efforts of the New Watergate Theatre Club. In spite of its alleged sensationalism, the London critics were highly pleased with this presentation of a new slice of Americana.

Note Of Astonishment

In the words of playwright Miller, the story of Brooklyn longshoremen "is not designed primarily to draw tears or laughter from an audience but to strike a particular note of astonishment at the way in which a man will endanger and lose his very life."

The Playmaker presentation will feature Ken Callendar as Eddie, Page Williams as Beatrice, Margaret Starnes as Catherine, John Sneaden as Alfieri, Albert C. Gordon as Marco and Harvey Knox as Rudolpho.

Cast

Also in the cast are George Manasse, Jim Potter, Bill Pfefferkorn, Bill White, Dan Linney, Ed Madden, Ann Brooke, Ross Baumstone, Carl Hinrichs.

Tickets for this production are now on sale in The Playmakers Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall, and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Room Deadline For Coeds Near

March 12 is the final date when coeds can make reservations for rooms for the followng summer sessions and fall semester.

The coed must go to the basement of South Building and pay a ten dollar deposit for each term. She then receives a receipt which she will take to the dormitory hostess or desk girl between 8 p. m. and closing time. She then completes her registration in her dormitory.

Room deposits for the fall term cannot be refunded after Aug. 15, but deposits for the summer terms are refundable until one week in advance of registration day of that term.

To cancel a reservation the student should go to the Dean of Women or submit a written request to the dean's office.

Morehead To Present Scholarships Today

The $3,000,000 Morehead Foundation will award an additional number of scholarships to high school students today with John Motley Morehead personally making the awards on WUNC-TV, the University's educational television station, at 5:30 p.m.

There will be a repeat telecast tonight at 9 o'clock.

The Morehead Scholarships, styled after the Rhodes Scholarships but adapted to the undergraduate level, are among the most generous scholarships awarded in American higher education today —$5,000 per student for four years at UNC in Chapel Hill.

Fifty-four outstanding high school and preparatory school seniors were in Chapel Hill Monday being interviewed by a screening committee of which Morehead is chairman.

At total of 144 scholars have been chosen since the Morehead Foundation began selecting scholars in 1951.

The scholarships are given without regard to financial need. However, some of the boys who are chosen actually are young men who would not otherwise be able to attend college without extra financial assistance. Scholars are chosen on a basis of scholarship, leadership, courage, truthfulness and qualities of manhood.

John Motley Morehead of Rye, N. Y., is a native North Carolinian who started Union Carbide and Carbon Company, gave the University the Morehead Building and Planetarium, Morehead Sun Dial and one half of the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower.

Scholarship Deadline

Today at noon is the deadline for application of a 1958-59 Goettingen Scholarship.

Application blanks for this scholarship to study in Germany are available at the Student Government Office, the YMCA Information Office and the office of the Director of Student Activities in South Building.

IFC Endorses Measure Against Delayed Rushing

By CHARLIE SLOAN

A statement "brought out in an effort to get everyone to stop and reconsider the effects which a delayed rush system would have upon everyone concerned" was released yesterday by the Interfraternity Council.

Signed by the IFC Rush Committee and endorsed by the council, the statement contained several reasons against delayed rush.

"First and most important," said the report, is the economic factor involved in the problem. "The house bills of each fraternity man would have to be raised in order for the house to break even under such a system. This would cause many men to drop out of fraternities."

According to the release, a more complete statement with supporting facts concerning this problem will be issued later.

Dirty Rushing

Dirty rushing "would be unstoppable" if the strict silence period were abolished, and active rushing would continue for an entire semester. The statement asked if this "would not greatly increase the frustration of the freshmen."

The statement pointed out that nearly every freshman entering the University has some knowledge of fraternities and fraternity life. Last year a majority of the fraternity interest cards turned in carried the names of fraternities. "Very few cards were left blank."

The possibilities of a three or four day rush period at the beginning of the second semester is being considered by the Rush Committee, the statement said. This period would enable fraternities to have "another look" at men interested in fraternities and would give the rushees another chance to visit the fraternities.

Under a delayed rush, the amount of time consumed by both fraternity men and rushees and the strain in each trying to impress the other would be detrimental to both sides.

A second part of the statement was concerned with problems resulting after rushing has concluded.

Pledge Training

Much of the effect of pledge training, designed to train the pledges to work as a unit to make the fraternity more effective during the pledges' senior year, would be wasted if summer vacation interrupted the training period.

Since some fraternities require more than one semester of pledge training, delayed rush would force the pledge period to extend into the fall of the following year, and break up the program.

"We feel that fraternities help a freshman to 'settle down." The most strict emphasis is placed upon a pledge's making good grades."

The statement pointed out that most fraternities have some sort of enforced study program and that the brothers help as tutors in courses giving pledges difficulty.

Big Brother System

Big brother system, a program of pledge counseling used in the fraternities, also helps the freshman in adjusting to University and fraternity life.

The statement also asked if "with the present crowded living conditions would the dormitories be able to hold for a whole semester all the freshmen plus the fraternity men who would move into the dorms to contact these rushees?"

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Jean McCauley, Margaret Whitehurst, Jo Ann Mills, Mayme Porter, Marcia Wells, Hope Sparger and Robbie Cecile Martin and Edwin Cathell, Pilley Crist, Glenn Pickard, Richard Bitanna, Thomas Hunaicutt, Joseph Atkins, William Marsh, Lee Weinstein, Myron Southerly, Joel Caldwell, James Early and Charles Ross.

Students Urged To Attend Open Forum On Judiciary

Students still not sure about the proposed judicial system revisions will have a chance for explanation tonight when an open forum will be held at 8 o'clock in Carroll Hall.

We urge all those who are undecided about the proposals to attend the meeting sponsored by the Forum Committee of GMAB.

Currently, the honor councils (Men's and Women's) are set up to handle cases according to sex when violations of the Honor Code are alleged by the courts. This puts a student on his honor not to lie, cheat or steal.

The proposal, however, would place all Honor Code violations under jurisdiction of a single court, which would try both men and women students. The Men's Honor Council and the Women's Honor Council then would be abolished, as they are now composed.

There still would exist separate courts for trial of men and women students on charges of social violations. Campus Code violations, therefore, would be tried by the Women's Honor Council and the same violations by men would be tried by the Student Council.

However, another branch of the judiciary would be established to hear cases of constitutionality and elections laws violations—now the domain of the Student Council.

We already have expressed our favor for the revised judiciary, feeling that it would provide fairer judgments in the long run for men and women alike. But every student should be personally convinced about the plan before he comes to a decision about it.

In order for the revised judiciary to be placed into practice, a campus-wide election to amend the constitution will be necessary. This election has been set for Tuesday, March 11. If it fails the mechanics for changing the judiciary will fail along with it, and we shall continue under the current structure.

The nature of the judicial system controversy demands thorough consideration and understanding by every student at UNC. It is, we feel, probably the most important piece of legislation to be proposed in a long time at the University.

For that reason we again urge as many students as possible to attend the open forum tonight.

THE CHAPEL HILL WEEKLY

John Motley Morehead

John Motley Morehead is in Chapel Hill, again on his annual errand of generous philanthropy to his alma mater, to his native state, and to the cause of education.

Fifty-three hopeful young men remain in an academic competition that has been going on for the past several months. By Wednesday night of this week, about 30 of these young men—high school and preparatory school seniors—will know that they are Morehead Scholars, recipients of one of the most generous grants given in this modern day to encourage good scholarship and leadership.

Each of the younger men chosen will get $1,250 a year with which to attend the University here. The award is renewable annually. So each Morehead Scholar is, in fact, getting a grant of $5,000 for four years of undergraduate life in Chapel Hill.

The Morehead Scholarship award is one of the most sought-after achievements of any bright young man of North Carolina high schools. In amount of money given to talented young men and in opportunity coming to those who receive the grants, the Morehead Scholarships are not exceeded by any other scholarships of the kind awarded in American education today.

Actually, so the story goes, Mr. Morehead wanted to give the boys even more in helping with their college education. Twelve hundred and fifty dollars per boy may not be enough, he initially said. But the cost of education at Chapel Hill, being only about a thousand dollars a year, the extra amount of $250 for the many additional amenities more than makes the Morehead grants ample and noteworthy. So Mr. Morehead was prevailed upon to limit his generosity to expenses plus a little more.

The policy of awarding the scholarships on conditions of merit rather than need enables the University to enter into competition with other colleges and universities seeking talent and to stay ahead of many others in attracting young men who may become prominent leaders of the future.

As Chancellor Aycock said to the Morehead Scholars last year, he hopes that many of them may decide to become teachers—perhaps to remain in higher education and to strengthen the ranks of the faculty in the years to come.

The Morehead Scholarships, together with the new University program of special concentrated attention on the talented students, is a double program to add distinction to the University's standing in institutions over the land.

Some of the Morehead Scholars have themselves been members of the "Superior Freshman" group—itself a testimony to the good judgment of the selection committee which chose the Morehead Scholars.

In New York City last Friday night, General Kenneth Royall read a citation of honor to John Motley Morehead which told of his scientific, educational, diplomatic and philanthropic devotion to excellence.

In his benefactions to his state and to his University, Mr. Morehead has given buildings, scientific structures, and equipment of rare distinction, objects of beauty and worth, and funds to make possible development of young men to advance to the top of their abilities.

Through the addition of several dozen more young men to the Morehead squadron, the ideals and aspirations of the University of North Carolina are advanced.—The Chapel Hill Weekly.

J.Y.'s JAZZ

Ellington And Ella Have Ball In Big New Set

Verve records recently released a set which will probably long be considered one of the all time great jazz releases. It's called "Ella Fitzgerald Sings the Duke Ellington Song Book" and the great stars that are Ella Fitzgerald and Edward Kennedy Ellington shine throughout. The four-record set contains thirty seven of the Duke's greatest songs as well as a new four part suite called "Portrait of Ella Fitzerald." The backing on four sides is supplied by the Ellington band and on the other four by miscellaneous groups, mainly one which contains a ryhthm section and tenor saxophonist Ben Webster and violinist Stuff Smith.

The entire set smacks of the greatly overused word "empathy." The empathy is between a masterful singer and the greatest jazz arranger and composer of all time, and it is an empathy that can only result in the best of muscial experience. It is an empathy produced by the greatness of the talents of all concerned and by the greatness of the material used. There are a lot great songs on this record - how many of us do not know and love the soulfulness of "Mood Indigo" or the spirit of "Perdido" or the sadness of "I Got It Bad and That Ain't Good"?

The big band shines on every number it accompanies Ella, but special mention must be made of the roaring wordless "Rockin' In Rhythm" and the wailing — for that is the best adjective I can find - "Perdido." But it is, surprisingly, the small group that really shines, and it is the work of Stuff Smith that makes it shine. It is hard for most jazz fans to appreciate the talent of this man, for he plays an instrument which is unaccustomed to jazz usage, and at times its sound is harsh and unpleasant. Yet Smith, through his sheer invention, makes the fiddle again and again a soulful, happy, musical instrument, and we can only wonder how the record would sound without it. And above all, the man swings - a lot of the so-called "inspired" modernists could take a lesson or two from this old timer in the essence of jazz, which is swinging.

There are a lot of wonderful things on this record, all of which you should hear if only because you are going to love them. If I had to pick any favorite, I'd have to select the too-rarely-heard "Azure Blue," which Ella sings with a feeling designed to bring tears to the hardest-hearted listener. And I'd want the listener to hear the wonderful, disillusioned "Lush Life," for one of the best examples of lyric and tune writing he'll ever know.

One final note — the Duke has a co-writer and arranger named Billy Strayhorn who is the most under-rated talent in jazz. He wrote or had a hand in writing nine of the songs on this record, and has contributed immensely to the Ellington band and to the history of jazz.

"What Is It We're Trving To Save?"

Student Writes Of Experiences At Polish Univ.

To the Editor:

Preoccupied with issues such as first or second semester rushing, elaborate dances, honor councils, and tax on Bibles, the Carolina student would be a singular individual if his perspective were not somewhat distorted. Though the above issues are important parts of our lives here in Chapel Hill we would be wise to remember that we are a very select sample, in a very select country. Another graduate student in my department was offered and accepted, a Polish government scholarship to study at the University of Krakow. We recently received a letter from him and thought we might pass on parts of it to our schoolmates in the hope that they will find it as interesting and thought provoking as we did. The following is an exerpt from the letter.

"I got to Warsaw Tuesday. It's really beat up. Like all the cities here it's dark and dirty. At night there are no signs or lights or anything. Hardly any cars—it takes ten years to buy one, if you don't happen to eat or wear clothes. Even if you have the money you need a permit and if you have enough money to apply for a permit they figure you must be crooked. Even though I'm quite wealthy here (my stipened is twice the salary of a M.D.) I eat with the students. Terrible food, just had Sunday dinner—sauerkraut, potatoes, bread, and a thin soup. I sleep on a straw mattress, have a room with no heat and only cold water; it is one of the better rooms. Things are in bad shape here. A pair of shoes costs almost a months salary.

"It's punchy—you go to a dance (formal, sort of) and the men are all spruced up in dark blue or black and have holes in their sleeves, wrinkled collars etc. Some of the girls are known as "kocieki" (little cats) and make their own sack dresses and stuff.

"The students here are very poor. They all get a stipend from the government, 360 zloty ($3.00) a month. Food per month in the chow hall costs about $2.00 so they have a buck to fool around with. They wear rags (almost literally), pajama tops for shirts, bath robes for overcoats. Really bad shape. It's amazing how they still manage to laugh and even joke about it.

"Anybody in the U.S. who complains about anything should come here for a week. Terrible chow, crumby houses, no luxuries, not even paved sidewalks. Sometimes you sink in up to your ankles on the main drag. One cat just passed my window—he's wearing the top and bottom of a pair of pajamas as a suit. Real cool."

Snooze

A lot of tall tales (and some strange decisions) have emerged from the sprawling maze of the Pentagon in Washington, where the service brass sit on their military secrets and ponder the country's fate.

Up to now, to tell you the truth, we've been a little awed by it all.

No longer.

For we hear on good authority that one of the Pentagon tenants, Edward A. Bacon, deputy assistant secretary of the Army for Civil-military Affairs, has privately published a book of verse.

And one of the choice items is a little poem called "Somniac" that read:

Every time I go to sleep
I marvel that I go to sleep,
Things are such that I should weep.
But, instead, I go to sleep.

It sort of figures.—The Charlotte Observer.

NEW COLUMN BEGINS

Grad Students, Unite

This will serve to introduce a new contender into the Tar Heel journalistic ranks—a column written by, for, and to graduate students. Undergraduates are also invited to read it—our decision not to use big words will be irrefrangible (oops, sorry!!).

Anyway, graduate students have been getting the short end of the stick on this campus for years and it is about time that they stood up on their hind legs and brayed, —er, shouted for their rights. Look at it this way—graduate students make up one-sixth of the student body, and contribute one-seventh of the funds that keeps the student body and legislature going. And do they have one-seventh of the power in the student legislature? What do you think?

What happens on this campus is that a lot of hard working graduate students, many with families, have to subsidize the amusements of undergraduates. This state of affairs is so beneficial for the majority on campus—that is, the undergraduates—that it is doubtful if any change will ever occur.

So as not to overstate the case, let's admit that some grad students do participate in the miscellaneous frivolity that student fees pay for. You know, things like breakfast parties.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

Let's Behave At Games

To The Editor:

Two generations ago, according to Dorothy Thompson, one of the distinguishing marks of an educated man was that he could be counted on to behave as a gentleman. If the recent behavior of the basketball fans at the four college gymnasiums is any criteria of the product that is being turned out by the colleges and universities of today they might as well close shop and go out of business. The very word sports connotates sportsmanship, courtesy, self-control, whether you are winning or losing.

However, the colleges can't make silk out of a sow's ear. If the students come to college with no manners and no background there isn't much the colleges can do about it. Manners have to be inbred from earliest childhood in the home by precept and example. Manners can't be put on and taken off at will as a garment, they must be woven in the very stuff of people's lives.

However, not many people like to feel that their bad manners are a reflection on their home training. If the coaches and other responsible leaders can make students understand that name calling and loss of temper are not the earmarks of a gentleman, and that, for cultured people, the unpardonable sin is discourtesy to one's guest, basketball games might again become a sport that self-respecting people feel that they could attend with the expectation of enjoying them. As it is, I can't imagine anything worse than having to sit through these two hour juvenile, near riotous exhibitions of bad manners.

The evenly matched teams put the players under enough strain as it is. For heaven's sake let's appreciate the fine job our basketball players are doing and not add to the tension by making it tougher for them.

IT'S SHORT OF GOAL

Give To Campus Chest

To The Editor:

This year the Campus Chest Committee saw a real need to revamp its program. We felt that the students at Carolina would respond with more enthusiasm to a student-to-student motivated Campus Chest Drive. In making this decision we put a great deal of faith in the Carolina student body. What has happened to this response? Have the Carolina students let us down, and in doing so let other students throughout the world down?

We are members of a world university community and as students from the wealthiest country in the world, we are obligated to help those students who cannot help themselves. It seems to me not to be a question of whether to give but rather how much? Please do understand that Campus Chest is not a "handout." We actually are by our giving helping students to help themselves. For example, students in the Middle East receive building materials from World University Service and then build their own dormitories. Shouldn't this sort of attitude make us realize that to many peoples, education is an institution worth fighting for and in turn, shouldn't we as students feel a little remorseful that we have so little appreciation for our untold educational opportunities. There is a great deal of misery among students in the world and Campus Chest is offering the Chapel Hill students an opportunity to participate in the world university community. But what happens to us at Carolina? We become so preoccupied with our own lives that we lose sight of the fact that we are only one country among many, and one race among many. We can hardly see outside of ourselves, much less out of this country.

After World War II, World University Service helped thousands of students in Europe find homes. WUS also built temporary schools and hospitals. If the situation was reversed, WUS would surely do the same for us. The trouble lies in the fact that we rarely stop to think of the possibility of war, in this country. We have as students become too self-complacent.

There is no reason why Carolina cannot and will not make its goal of $2,000.00. We cannot afford to live on our reputation. We must keep striving to have a better university, which contains individuals who are not afraid to face issues. The value of Campus Chest is its international, united appeal. Here is a way to link our good name of Carolina with other universities throughout the world.

When people say they cannot afford to give, I wonder if these are the people who take for granted our many luxuries of student life at Carolina. A foreign student told me that his biggest shock was the way we (students) spend money on our own pleasure in one week alone.

Give to Campus Chest. If you question its program, educate yourself and you will see that the good outweighs the sacrifice of giving. We need $700 more to meet our goal.

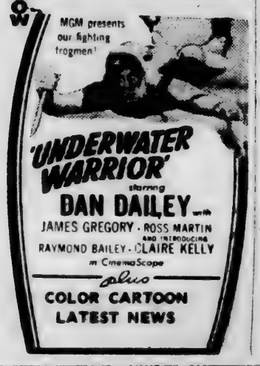
Library Gets Lee Document

An original Robert E. Lee document, recently brought to light for the first time, has been acquired by the Southern Historical Collection of Wilson Library.

The paper, which concerns Lee's endorsement of a railroad through the Shenandoah Valley, is the original draft of the testimonial read by Lee before the Mayor, City Council and a mass meeting of Baltimore citizens on April 22, 1869. This draft was given by Lee to Colonel Edmund Pendleton in Baltimore.

It came to the Southern Historical Collection from the estate of Mrs. Edmund Pendleton Coles of Charlotte, whose husband was the grandson of Colonel Edmund Pendleton.

The document was written and corrected by Robert E. Lee on four legal-sized pages. Its existence was hitherto unknown by scholars and historians. The final draft of this document is now in Robert E. Lee's letter-book at Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Va.



Douglas Southall Freeman, in his biography of Lee, wrote about the composition of the paper and the events leading up to the day on which it was read. The text of the document is printed in the appendix to Freeman's "R. E. Lee."

Sigma Chis Become Pirates

Saturday night the Sigma Chis turned pirate for their annual Pirate Party in the basement of the house. The lower rooms of the house were cleverly transposed to create a nautical atmosphere, one room featuring a captain's quarters, while another gave the illusion of a ship deck. A third room was converted to a south-sea island — complete with sand and a cave.

The Sigma Chis donned head scarves, belts and knives in keeping with the occasion, and each girl was presented a brown, tattered costume embroidered with a skull and crossbones and the Sigma Chi emblem.

ZBTs Celebrate Anniversary

This past weekend the Zeta Beta Taus celebrated their 31st anniversary with a real UNC blast! The festivities began on Friday night with an old fashion ZBT party at the house with Joe Hatchett and his combo from Danville, Va., on hand to liven up the evening.

Saturday the brothers, pledges and their dates attended a fashionable banquet at the Carolina Inn. Following the banquet, they retreated to the ballroom for a formal dance and during the evening the new officers and their dates were presented.

They included: Sharon Offner of New Orleans with Ed Levy of New Orleans, president; Liz Jacobson of Atlanta, Ga., with Jerry Blumenthal of Atlanta, Ga., vice president; Phyllis Kaplan of Miami Beach with Lee Tenenbaum of Atlanta, Ga., secretary; Linda Hagedorn of Birmingham, Ala., with Ben Levy of Petersburg, Va., treasurer; and Brenda Siegel of Norfork, Va., with Eddie Goodman of Portsmouth, Va., historian.

A party at Jack Maultsby's cabin ended the anniversary celebration Saturday night. Joe Hatchett's combo was again on hand to entertain the group.

ON DAMES AND ALL THAT

One thing that delights your sentimental old Intimate Bookshop is the number of nice looking chick-a-biddies we see scratching around our intellectual feed trough.

There's no doubt that a good-looking wench does wonders at perking up the scenery, but it's doubly nice to know that she has brains, too.

Perhaps it is true that marriages are made in Heaven, but we'd like to add that a powerful lot of engagements are made in the old bookshop. Looking back across the years, we remember the couples who first began showing signs of love's weaknesses about this season, and we'd like to lay a fat bet that these pairings have proven more enduring and satisfying than most.

We like to think that when the social tissue of college weaks thin, the common bond of shared books and culture goes on and on and on.

Shux! Our eyes are all red and we haven't sold a single book!

Charles Moore, 27, of High Point entered the plea at his arraignment. The State accepted the plea and Superior Court Judge Frank Armstrong imposed the mandatory sentence.

Moore, 6-4, was charged with raping Mrs. Al DePorter last Dec. 13. He had delivered the DePorter family car to their apartment and Mrs. DePorter was accompanying him back to the station when the attack occurred at knifepoint on a lonely dirt road within the city limits.

A letter was read in court from Mrs. DePorter in which she said it would be detrimental to her health to appear. She has been under the care of a physician since the attack.

Her husband, former star basketball player at Wake Forest, is an assistant coach. He was on a road trip with the team when the attack occurred.

Moore last week was returned from the state mental hospital at Goldsboro after a 60-day period of observation. Doctors pronounced him able to stand trial.

DePorter formerly lived at Paterson, N. J. Mrs. DePorter is from Youngstown, Ohio.

Following the attack, Moore telephoned police and surrendered.

'A Tour In The Wilds Of Creation' Is Theme For YM-YW Conference

"A Tour in the Wilds of Creation" is the theme of this year's YM-YWCA spring conference. The conference, the ninth of its kind, will be held in Bricks, N. C., March 14-16.

Each Spring the YM-YMCA plans a conference in which interested students think through important questions that they themselves raise. This year, through the media of modern art, painting, literature, music and drama, conference participants will look at and study the perplexities of modern man.

Discussion group topics are designed to carry out the theme of the conference, "A Tour in the Wilds of Creation." They include: "Charting the Tours," an introduction to the conference "Artistic Creation in the Wilderness of Doubt," a critical examination of the world through contemporary painting and sculpture; "Who Am I in the Wilds of My Beliefs?" a reading presentation of the novel "Darkness at Noon" by Koestler; "Man's Escape in Creation's Confusion"; "Out of Chaos the Creation of Faith", a dramatic presentation of "Cry the Beloved Country" by Peyton; and "To Find a Home in Ceaseless Creation."

Other outstanding features of the conference will be the presentation of the play, a jazz band and modern dances.

Interested students should register for the conference at the YM-YWCA office as soon as possible. Cost of the conference, which includes transportation, housing and food, is $9.50. A $2 deposit will be required at registration.

Margaret Daughtridge, co-chairman with Richard Love of the conference, has expressed the expectation that "each individual who attends the conference will gain a better understanding of himself and to the problems of his society."

Swimmers Hope To Better 6th Place

Approximately one year ago, Carolina was host to the National Swimming Collegiate Championships here. It was a great two-day event which saw underdog Michigan conquer favored Yale on the final day to win the team championship, 69-61.

Carolina finished sixth in that meet after having ripped through everything in the ACC Championships. This year the story is practically the same going into the national collegiates. The Tar Heels turned the trick again in the ACC, capturing 11 medals in the ACC and going through the season undefeated.

Biggest change is in the coaching staff. Pat Earey has taken up where Ralph Casey left off, winning swimming meets. All-American Charlie Krepp is gone but Earey still has five All-Americans with which to work in preparations for the nationals March 14th and 15th at Annapolis, Md.

Carolina would like to win all the cookies this season and the talent is there. Earey has a tremendous aggregate of swimming talent and the Tar Heels should do very well when they go against the nation's best swimmers at Annapolis.

Tatum Has Ample Supply Of QB's

Jim Tatum is in his second week of practice with the Carolina gridders and sunny Jim is happy with the way things have gone thus far. Tatum feels that his club has more spirit than any team he's had since he's been here.

Tatum probably will be making a few changes in his personnel during the 20-day practice period as he did last year. Some of his "shifts" worked out very well in 1957 and it is reasonable to assume that he'll be switching his boys around again in preparation for the 1958 season.

The Tar Heels should be one of the most colorful teams around next season. A good, clever quarterback can make a ball club really classy and Tatum has a host of good signal callers.

You can bet your sweet life Carolina will have a passing attack. With fellows like Jack Cummings and Nelson Lowe around plus freshman Russ Hollers there'll be a lot of passing going on. Curt Hathaway, still recovering from a broken arm, might be switched to fullback next fall. If not, Tatum will have an excellent clutch at qb. Hathaway has the experience and the ability to direct the club in the toughest of circumstances.

Charlotte Is Good Place For Regionals

Strong Cage Field Set For ACC Tourney

By KEN ALYTA

RALEIGH, March 4 (AP)—The rugged Atlantic Coast Conference, boasting four teams in the nation's top 20 listing, opens its annual basketball championship tournament here Thursday with the four seeded teams taking on the second division clubs they've already manhandled in regular season play.

The "big four" of the last three months have been Duke, No. 6 in the nation; Carolina, No. 13; North Carolina State, ranked 14th, and Maryland, No. 17.

Their overall records are remarkably similar. Maryland has a 17-5 tally for all games. Each of the other three is 17-6.

Of their combined 23 losses, 16 were administered by ACC rivals.

Duke won 11 of 14 to gain first place in the conference over the season and the No. 1 seeded spot.

Carolina Defends

Carolina, defending champion and unbeaten winner of the national title a year ago, tied with North Carolina State for second position at 10-3, but State won the second seeded spot in a draw. Maryland took fourth place on a 9-5 record.

The first of Thursday's four games, set for 2 p.m., matches Carolina and Clemson, No. 6 club on a 4-10 ACC record and 8-15 overall.

Beat Clemson

The Tar Heels were 33 points better than Clemson in two earlier meetings, winning at home 79-55, in their season opener, and 90-81 in a return game at Clemson.

Thursday's 4 o'clock game will find North Carolina State out to beat South Carolina for the third time. The State Wolfpack gained a 44-point margin in the two previous games, winning at South Carolina, 86-73, and at home, 86-55. South Carolina, with a 3-11 conference record and 5-18 overall, had its poorest record in 19 years.

Deacs Play

Wake Forest, 33-11 for league games and 6-16 for all competition, is Duke's 7:30 p.m. opponent Thursday. Three of the Deacon losses were to Duke. The first, 79-75 in overtime, came in the Dixie Classic tournament at Raleigh in December. Duke then won at Wake Forest 70-56 and at home, 71-59.

Maryland Vs. Virginia

Maryland and Virginia complete the first round with a 9:30 contest Thursday night. Maryland clinched its fourth position in the league standings with 87-66 and 69-56 decisions over the Cavaliers. Virginia finished fifth in league play on a 6-8 record and was 10-12 overall.

Semifinal pairings Friday night match Thursday night winners in the first game and the Thursday afternoon winners at 9:30.

The championship game at 8 p.m. Saturday will determine the ACC entry in NCAA regional tournament play, starting Tuesday at New York against Boston College.

Kearns Slumps

Brennan Cops Scoring And Rebounding Title

By BILL KING

Carolina's All-American candidate Pete Brennan had his poorest night of the season against Duke last Friday but the slender senior forward from Brooklyn was still able to coast to the individual scoring title in regular season competition in the Atlantic Conference.

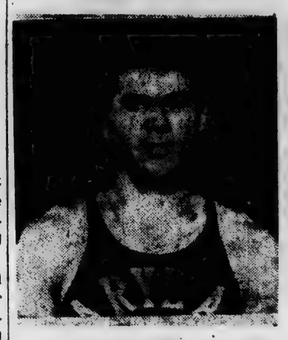
Brennan's 10 points in a losing cause against the Blue Devils cut his average to 20.9 but it was still five points better than his nearest two rivals, Dave Budd of Wake Forest and Herb Busch of Virginia. Budd, outstanding sophomore for the hapless Deacs, nosed out Busch in the last week of the campaign. His average was 15.818 compared to 15.773 for Busch.

Tar Heel Tommy Kearns, with Brennan an All-ACC choice, dropped all the way to fifth spot after holding third place almost all season. Kearn's 15.2 average was only one percentage point behind fourth place finisher Ray (Cookie) Pericola of South Carolina.

Shaffer, Salz Hit

Two Carolina sophs, Lee Shaffer and Harvey Salz also finished the regular season in the double figures. Shaffer had an 11.8 mark and Salz 10.7.

Duke's Paul Schmidt came off with field goal shooting percentage honors with a .540 average. Schmidt hit 95 baskets in 176 attempts .He was followed by State's Bob MacGillivray (.506), Busch (.478) and Budd (.478).



From the free throw line, Bill Metzger of Virginia hit 64 of 76 for an .842 percentage. Busch was second at .809, trailed by Vince Yockel of Clemson at .769 and John Siewers of Virginia at .763. Salz was the top man of Carolina with 57 of 77 for .740. Shaffer had 78 of 106 for .736.

12.3 Rebounds

Brennan averaged slightly more than one rebound per game more than State's John Richter to lead the league in that department. Brennan had 279 in 23 games for a 12.3 average. Richter grabbed 242 in 22 games for 11.0 Busch was third at 9.9 with Duke's Jim Newcome (9.4) and Al Bunge of Maryland (9.1) close behind.

The Tar Heels led the league in offense, averaging 72.4 per game. Virginia was second at 70.7 followed by Duke (70.2), Clemson (69.4), Maryland (68.0), N. C. State (67.4) South Carolina (66.2) and Wake Forest (64.0).

Maryland copped defensive honors giving up but 58.3 per game. State was second with 61.5 Others—Duke (64.7), Carolina (64.9), Wake Forest (68.5), Clemson (72.2), Virginia (72.3) and South Carolina. (78.3).

GOOD MEN—Two of the men who'll be competing in the ACC tourney this weekend are Tom Young (left) of Maryland and Fred Lentz of South Carolina. Both have aided their clubs tremendously this season.

Grapplers Begin Meet

After completing its first winning season in eleven years, the Carolina wrestling team is preparing for Friday's big ACC tournament at College Park, Maryland.

The grapplers soundly whipped Wake Forest in their last outing, 24-8 in Woollen Gym. Their composite slate for the season reads 6-4, the best in many years. The loss to VPI was the worst suffered, a complete shutout. The Duke victory was perhaps the sweetest to the matmen, as it was the first time they had defeated the Blue Devils in several seasons.

The only man whom the team will have to do without at Maryland is Perrin Henderson, a 137-pounder, who is out for the season with a separated collar bone.

Host Maryland is the regular season champion, and Coach Sam Barnes and his charges would like to dethrone the Terps and bring back some trophies to Carolina.

Tickets

RALEIGH, March 4 (AP) — About 300 tickets are available for the championship game Saturday night of the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament, officials said today.

Jim Tatum Is Pleased With Spring Practice

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Spring football practice has been moving along at a rapid clip for the past week, including practice on five days of the week.

The rough weather experienced here in Chapel Hill in the latter stages of February has caused a step-up in action for the varsity gridders, who are allowed only 20 days of practice in 36 calendar days, and will have to hustle to get them all in.

The big Blue-White varsity game, originally scheduled for March 15, has been moved up to the 22nd. The game is always the climax of spring practice when the athletes are in top form.

88 Candidates

Although there are 88 boys now participating in the drills, many are not scholarship men. Coach Jim

JIM TATUM

Tatum is a firm believer in giving everyone a chance to do his stuff before the experienced coaching staff.

The already announced varsity scrimmage games in Kenan Stadium every Saturday afternoon still holds good and the public is invited. Coach Tatum commented yesterday that the spirit shown on the field is the best in the past two years.

The Tar Heels finished last season with a snappy 6-5 record, much better than predicted by most of the experts. The Heels pulled some of the biggest upsets of the season, namely against Navy, Miami, and Duke. Navy and Duke both played in post-season bowls games, and the Middies did not lose another game after going down to defeat in Chapel Hill.

Strong Frosh

Four ends are out with injuries. Freshmen Bob Hogeson, Bob Campbell, and Tom Hunnicut, and varsity end Takey Crist. All have sustained leg injuries, and with the exception of Crist's all were injuries suffered last season. Frosh quarterback Dick Detanna is out with a broken nose.

Captain Buddy Payne, Jim Jones, Paul Pulley, Hap Setzer, Ron Marquette, Giles Gaca and John Haywood are the players who will be lost through graduation.

A strong freshman team and many returning lettermen form the foundation for what could be the strongest Carolina football team since the days of Charlie Justice.

Keep The Ball

LINCOLN, Neb., March 4 (AP) — The jubilant coach of Nebraska's basketball giant-killers said yesterday ball control and constant movement were part of the strategy for knocking off two of the nation's top teams in the last 10 days.

Coach Gerard L. Jerry Bush's Cornhuskers upset nationally top-ranked Kansas State, 55-48, in a Big Eight Conference battle Monday night.

Nine days earlier, Nebraska clipped the wings of Wilt Chamberlain and his Kansas mates, then ranked No. 4, in a 43-41 thriller.

So how did the Huskers do it? "We didn't have the size to cope with gents like Chamberlain 7-0 of Kansas, or with Bob Boozer 6-8 or Wally Frank 6-8 or Jack Barr 6-9 of Kansas State," said Bush, an ex-professional cager.

"So our plan was to use an open post and to control the ball.

"Now that doesn't mean to stand and hold the ball, but to use constant motion ,both with and without the ball."

The strategy worked.

"It was Nebraska's style of play that beat us," acknowledged K-State Coach Tex Winter. 'We tried to prevent them from playing their style but we couldn't do it effectively."

Winter even discounted the absence of Jack Barr, home with the flu.

Sports Jamboree Gets Off To A Good Start

By DAVE WIBLE

The First Annual Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree got off to a good start last night with approximately 400 dormitory and fraternity men on hand to open the show.

After a short explanation period, the colorful 400 spread out and within a short period of time, every nook and cranny of Woollen Gym and the Tin Can was the scene of some sort of tournament. Each team, which is half dorm and half fraternity, sent their specialist to the right place and waited for the results.

The action was primarily round robin tournaments which decided the finalists who will compete for the titles tonight. One event was decided. The foul shooting contest was won by Chi Psi-Law School-2. Craven was the individual champion. The rest of the events will be decided tonight beginning at 7:00. At 8:00 all teams will compete in the relay events.

From all indications the meet thus far has been a wopping success according to the meet officials. Speaking for the Intramural Department, Coach Walter Rabb said, "I believed that everything is going along smoothly. The fraternities and dormitories are working together well, and of course that is the primary purpose of the Jamboree."

John Kerr, speaking for the Order of the Grail said, "I think that the first night went well, but we expect the finals tonight to provide some real thrills, especially in the team Relays. We hope more people will get down to the Gym and support their teams."

Tonight the teams will be going for big steaks, that is the winning teams and individual champions will be treated to a steak supper Monday night.

Round Robin Winners

Below are the winners of last night's round robin play. These teams will play for team championships tonight. The winners listed must report to the Gym at 6:30 tonight.

JOB FACTS FROM DU PONT

DU PONT

LIBERAL EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PROGRAM AT DU PONT INCLUDES INSURANCE, SAVINGS AND STOCK PLANS

WHAT'S YOUR LINE? DU PONT NEEDS ALL KINDS OF ENGINEERS

Du Pont has always needed chemists and chemical engineers, and still does. But today, there's critical need for engineers in almost every other field—civil, mechanical, electrical, instrumental and industrial engineering, to name a few.

Expansion is the major reason. In 1957, for example, sales at Du Pont were nearly two billion dollars. Four new plants were being built. New research programs were being launched. New products were moving into the production and marketing stages. Engineers and scientists of all kinds work in 75 Du Pont plants and 98 laboratories in 26 states. All of this tends to broaden opportunities for the young scientist and engineer at Du Pont.

If you're interested in finding full scope for your ability, and this includes a great many special fields, Du Pont offers you plenty of opportunity to move ahead.

Booklets on jobs at Du Pont are yours for the asking. Subjects covered include: mechanical, civil, metallurgical, chemical, electrical, instrumentation and industrial engineers; atomic energy, technical sales, business administration, research and development. PERSONALIZED TRAINING

by R. G. Alleman, Du Pont Representative

When you join Du Pont as a scientist or engineer, you're given an actual project assignment almost at once and begin to learn your job by doing it. That's the essence of our training philosophy at Du Pont.

Our objective is to give you responsibility at the outset and qualify you quickly for more, because the more we grow, the more we need trained leaders.

Although there is no one training program at Du Pont (each of our many departments runs its own), all have several basic features in common. All are personalized—tailored to the new man's background and interests. All involve close supervision on an informal, day-to-day basis. And all permit periodic evaluation of the new man.

This flexible system helps the new man to move ahead according to his abilities. He gets to know Du Pont and his job quickly. He gets a head-start on future responsibility.

You probably have questions about this program and how you'd fit into it. I'll be glad to try to answer them when I visit your campus. Why not sign up for a Du Pont interview at your placement office now?

Means More Security, Greater Real Income To Young Graduates

Du Pont believes that the employee builds his own job security by the way he does his work, by his contributions to the progress of the Company and by his readiness to accept responsibility.

But Du Pont meets the employee more than halfway with a program of benefits designed to help him as he advances.

Your employee benefits go to work the day you join the Company. They grow and build equity for you as the years go by. Vacations, life insurance, group hospital and surgical coverage, accident and health insurance, pension and bonus plans are all part of the program.

Let's look at a special example, the Thrift Plan. You become eligible for it after one year with the Company. For each dollar you invest in U. S. Savings Bonds, the Company contributes twenty-five cents toward the purchase of Du Pont common stock in your name. Roughly 65 per cent of the Company's 90,000 employees are now participating in the plan.

When you're deciding on a career, security is only one consideration. But it's an important one to you and your family. At Du Pont, security is a bright part of the future awaiting the college graduate.

More than 700 of the some 1100 degree-granting colleges and universities in the U. S. are represented at Du Pont. Of these 700, more than half are the smaller liberal arts colleges.

Debate On Proposed Amendment Postponed Indefinitely

The debate on the proposed amendment to the constitution concerning a joint honor council scheduled for last night, was postponed yesterday afternoon until an indefinite time in the future.

Benny Thomas, president of Graham Memorial Activities Board, said the postponement was necessary "because of late developments in the amendments to the original bill which set up these proposed changes."

Sonny Evans, president of the student body, who would have been a speaker at the discussion seconded Thomas' decision and stated, "Until a decision is made on the final form of the amendments to come before the student body, it seems ridiculous to me to enter into any discussions on the amendments.

Express Opinion

"I am in favor of one Honor Council to try violators of the Honor Code but some decision must be reached on social violations which turn into Honor Code cases prior to any open forums or discussions."

George Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, who would have been the other speaker at last night's scheduled debate, made it clear that he did not favor postponement.

"I wish certain people in student government would make up their minds," Ragsdale commented.

The postponement followed by a day the student legislature's tabling of an amendment to the present Honor Council revision bill. The amendment to the bill was introduced in hopes of clarifying the cases where social rules and the Honor Code are both involved.

Such a case would occur when a coed falsified a sign-out slip, or currently when a male student lies before the Student Council.

There was some doubt last night as to whether clarification of these procedures would involve a constitutional amendment.

Apologizes

Commenting on the postponement Thomas said,' 'Speaking on behalf of the Graham Memorial Activities Board, and specifically of the Forum Committee's of GMAB, I want to sincerely apologize to the student body and all concerned for the postponement of the Forum Committee's discussion which was scheduled in Carroll Hall last night.

"The Forum Committee will certainly plan and carry through a discussion on this issue for the benefit of interested students on campus before the student body is called upon to vote on this vital issue."

State Higher Education Board Answers Charges Made By University Trustees

Appalled At Reference To Red Tape In Groups

RALEIGH, March 5—(AP—The State Board of Higher Education, recently the object of heated criticism by a trustee of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, today defended its action in cutting down the size of a proposed housing development at North Carolina State College.

The board also said it had been "astonished to hear occasional references to red tape and controls placed upon institutions by the board."It said that as a matter of fact "The board feels strongly that institutions should be allowed more flexibility and greater control of operations."

The board, which supervises somewhat all of the state's institutions of higher education, said it "has no quarrel with the trustees of any institution."

Its statement resulted from criticisms voiced at a recent meeting at Greensboro of trustees of the Consolidated University. One trustee, W. G. Harris Jr. of Raleigh, said things may have reached the point where "either we do not need this Board of Trustees or the Board of Higher Education."

He added that "The issue is whether we run the University or somebody else runs it."

Married Housing

The Consolidated University administration had requested permission to build a 500-unit housing development at State College for married students, but the higher education board cut it down to 300 units.

The board said that there is no question "that at the present time the married student housing situation at State College is critically acute." But, it added, the "overriding question" is what will be the situation when the units are completed? It added that by the most optimistic estimate the project could not be completed before the 1959 school year.

So, it said, "No housing authorized now will be available for the vast majority of married students now enrolled at State College."

The board said the critical situation for housing of married students results from the presence of many married veteran undergraduates who receive government help in attending college. And, it said, "The peak of married veteran enrollment at State College has probably been reached, even passed." It pointed out that veterans who entered service after Jan. 31, 1955 are not eligible for federal educational benefits.

For Legislature

A 500-unit housing development at State, the board said, would have been occupied largely by married undergraduate students and "thus raises a major policy decision respecting the housing

35 Named Morehead Scholars

John Motley Morehead yesterday personally awarded $175,000 worth of scholarships to 35 young men for four-year undergraduate careers at Carolina and also declared his intent to "substantially increase and expand" the Morehead Foundation for scholarships to talented students so that the program can be guaranteed in the future.

Morehead, Tar Heel native who is a resident of Rye, N. Y., was a founder of Union Carbide and Carbon Company.

Financial need is not a criteria for selection. Talented seniors are chosen for qualities of scholarship, leadership, courage and other qualities which indicate balanced attitudes and manhood.

The names of the scholars selected, their schools, and hometowns are as follows:

Raleigh: Thomas Willis Haywood Alexander, Woodberry Forest; William Colvin Hubbard, Needham Broughton; John Ward Purrington, Woodberry Forest; Thomas Roberts Cannon, Needham Broughton.

Greensboro: Timothy Brooks Burnett, Episcopal High; Donald Max Snodderly, Jr., Greensboro Senior.

Charlotte: Edwin Lee Chesnutt, E. Mecklenburg; Drew Charles Hunsinger, Gardner-Webb; Michael Geoffrey Shulman, Myers Park High.

Burlington: James Reuben Copland, III, Walter M. Williams; William Graham Harriss, Walter M. Williams; Alvis Marvin Rich, Jr., Walter M. Williams.

Derita: George William Bates, N. Mecklenburg; Tuxedo: Joseph Oscar Bell, III, Christ School; Greenville: Robert Hodges Bilbro, Junius H. Rose; High Point: George Worth Campbell Jr., McCallie School; Bryson City: Carl Phillip Cole, Swain County High.

Rocky Mount: Allen Thomson Cronenberg Jr., Rocky Mount Senior; David Fletcher Harper, Rocky Mount Senior.

Legislative Move On Honor Changes Seen

The Student Legislature will probably take some action on the "confusing" amendment to the Honor Council revision bill tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of New East.

The amendment, introduced Tuesday at a special session, says, "alleged honor violations which shall arise from a case being tried in the Women's Council shall remain in this council."

Gary Greer's (SP) bill setting "the date of the formal 'rushing' period at some convenient time after the end of the fall semester of each year." will face a vote.

'Academic Freedom'

Resolutions introduced by Roger Foushee (SP) to ratify the U. S. National Student Association's "policy on academic freedom" and declaration of the student's rights and responsibility will probably be acted upon.

The "Basic Policy Declaration Student Bill of Responsibilities and Rights" contains a section which Foushee termed, "probably one of the more controversial points."

This section forbids "discriminatory clauses" in campus organizations.

Tar Heel Profits

The Daily Tar Heel will be able to keep its profits rather than returning them to the General Surplus fund, if the Student Legislature passes Fat Adams' (SP) bill.

The Legislature will also take action on Harold O'Tuel's bill to appropriate $650 to the Carolina Quarterly.

The University Party will hold a caucus of its Student Legislators in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial at 6:30 p.m. UP "Floorleader Al Goldsmith "strongly urges" the UP solons to attend the meeting.

The Student Party Legislators will hold their caucus at 7 p.m. in Roland Parker 1 in Graham Memorial. Pat Adams, SP floorleader said yesterday.

Ragsdale Talks At Debate Meet

George Ragsdale, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, last night spoke to a group of 15 people in Carroll Hall who had not been notified of the postponement of the judiciary amendment debate.

Ragsdale said that he had not been notified in time of the postponement of the debate, and said that he felt that the campus had not been notified in time, and hence that it was his duty to speak.

Ragsdale told the group that if two parties make an agreement, both parties should be consulted about the breaking of such an agreement. "I was not conulted," claimed Ragsdale.

Commenting on the fact that the other speakers were not present, he felt he could not give his views, in all fairness to the opposition, but that the he would be glad to answer any questions. No questions were asked, however.

Ragsdale spoke after Benny Thomas apologized for the postponement of the debate. He attributed the postponement to the legislature's tabling a bill which would have clarified the bill with regard to social and honor violation which occur together.

Before Thomas turned the meeting over to Ragsdale, he added there definitely would be a debate before the bill is voted on by the campus.

University Club Meets March 18 To Nominate

The University Club will hold elections of officers Tuesday, March 18.

The date for the elections was announced at a meeting of the club Tuesday night in the Grail Room.

The program for the March 18 meeting will include a discussion of the 1958 budget and nominations for the club's annual service award.

ABC Board Cancels Beer Permit Of Tavern Operator For 120 Days

RALEIGH, March 5. (AP—The State ABC Board today suspended for 120 days the beer permit of a tavern operator whose place was the scene of an alleged "pajama party" by members of a University of North Carolina fraternity.

The board found that John S. "Jack" Hopkins, operator of Jack's Drive-in in Durham County, had allowed whisky to be served in his place on the early morning of Feb. 9.

The Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity was attending a "pajama party" at the tavern when it was raided by ABC Inspector John Buck and two Durham County sheriff's deputies, according to testimony.

At a prior hearing before ABC Hearing Officer Earl Weathersby, Curtis Fields Jr. of Thomasville, president of the fraternity, said someone at the party handed him a cup which contained whisky and a mixer. "I drank it," he said.

Hopkins told the hearing officer that he had no knowledge of whisky being served and he had warned the fraternity against it.

UNC Opens ACC Tournament This Afternoon Against Clemson

By BILL KING

RALEIGH — The Carolina Tar Heels and the Clemson Tigers will kickoff the fifth annual Atlantic Coast Conference Basketball Tournament in Reynolds Coliseum this afternoon at 2 o'clock in the first of a four-game, day-nite program that will see the tourney field cut to four for the semifinals tomorrow night.

In the second game of the afternoon North Carolina State will tackle the South Carolina Gamecocks at four. Tonight at seven, first place Duke will meet last place Wake Forest and the finale between Maryland and Virginia will begin at 9 p.m.

Much Confusion

Speculation of the eventual winner and consequent NCAA representative is broad and widely scattered. Duke, which finished first in regular season play is the slight choice over Carolina's' defending national champs in most books but nobody is overlooking tough N. C. State and Maryland. And to add to the confusion, the bottom four teams, Clemson, South Carolina, Virginia and Wake Forest are all given outside chances of an upset.

Frank McGuire's Tar Heels finished in a tie for second place with State during the regular season, both with 10-4 records. Out of the hat came the opponent for the two schools. The Tar Heels have beaten Clemson twice, 79-55 in Chapel Hill and 90-81 in Clemson. The Tigers finished the season with a 4-10 conference mark and 8-15 overall. Carolina won 17 and lost 6 for the season.

This Is Big One

The next three days are the ones that count for Frank McGuire and company. The seasonal records mean nothing now because everything is riding on the tournament. The Tar Heels ripped through 32 straight last season to capture the national crown. Now they'll have to win the conference meet to even off the ground in defending that title.

Carolina will be counting heavily on its great senior forward from Brooklyn, Pete Brennan. Brennan, top scorer (20.8) and rebounder 12.3 in the conference during the regular season, has been mentioned prominently in All-American speculation and on his shoulders could ride the fortunes of the Tar Heels during this three-day period.

Two More Seniors

Brennan will be aided by his two senior sidekicks Bobby Cunningham (5.3) and Tommy Kearns (15.1). Cunningham, probably the best defensive man in the conference and Kearns also a candidate for All-American mention, were both starters on the National Championship team of 1957-58.

McGuire hasn't decided definitely on his starting lineup but it will come from the three aforementioned boys plus sophomores Lee Shaffer (11.8), Harvey Salz (10.7), and Dick Kepley (4.6). Salz is an almost sure starter. Shaffer, a regular for most of the season was benched in the last few games because of a scoring slump but McGuire stated yesterday that he might go with Shaffer for "psychological" reasons since big Lee has played so well against Clemson this season. Should Shaffer start, either Kepley or Cunningham will be the sixth man.

Maryland Was First

After the Tar Heels had won 32 in a row last year they lost their first game to West Virginia in the Kentucky Invitational. Carolina bounced back to sweep the Dixie Classic title over the Christmas Holidays, but then conference trouble developepd.

After the Classic, the Tar Heels lost to Maryland at College Park (74-61), N. C. State (58-57) in an overtime at Chapel Hill, Notre Dame (69-70) in Chicago and Duke twice, 91-75 and 59-46.

The Tar Heels have had good pre-tournament practices, following the last defeat by Duke which gave the Blue Devils first place during the regular season. "The boys look to be in good shape," says McGuire, "and we are looking forward to the tournament.

A sellout crowd is expected for the entire tournament and attendance records are expected to be shattered.

IFC Committee Report Speaks For Early Rush

The report issued by the Rush Committee of the Interfraternity Council on Wednesday should serve to further delay—if not kill—a bill before the legislature which would postpone rush until the spring semester.

Promising a more complete statement at a later date, the Rush Committee pointed to ill effects on the economic operation of fraternity houses, dirty rushing and pledge training in opposing the proposal for delayed rush.

It will be interesting to note, when the more complete statement is made, just to what extent will be the economic effects on the UNC Greek societies if rushing is delayed until the spring semester. Word has it that it would cost a total of well over $100,000!

The committee raises in its current report the question of whether, in view of existing crowded conditions, dormitories would not become even more crowded if rush were delayed for a four and one-half month period. This should get an affirmative nod, especially since college enrollment is expected to hit a heavy influx in the next several years.

This increasing college enrollment, actually expected before the current year, reflects the climbing birth rates recorded from the late 1930's up through the years of the next decade. It will dump students at our college doors in numbers for which the institutions are not currently prepared.

At the University of North Carolina, this problem could become severely acute in the light of present dormitory construction finance practices which have taxed the student in form of room rent to a point where he can scarcely assume further obligations.

Thus, unless help is soon forthcoming from the legislature in form of direct appropriations for dormitory construction, it appears that existing residences and those which will open next year soon will be inadequate for the overflow of students expected by the early 60's.

These situations could be only worsened by a program which would keep a not insignificant number of students in the dormitories for at least an added semester, and probably more. Generally, pledges are not allowed to move into the houses before they make their grades. Under the proposed plan, they could not move into the houses before the beginning of their sophomore year — at the earliest. And dormitories would remain crowded.

The question of dirty rushing, a less figurable factor than the economic one, and the problem of pledge training also are important ones for the legislature to consider in the debate over the delayed rushing bill. Both of these have been cited by the Rush Committee of the IFC.

Indeed, so broad are the problems of delayed rushing that the legislature should act with less haste on this matter than it has on recent other legislation which it has considered. A little delayed thought on the solons' part probably would show them that delayed rushing is at this time not practical for UNC.

N. C. Press Should Concern Itself With Buck's Charges

We wish that North Carolina's press would get over this "pajama party" kick involving the University of North Carolina and get on to reporting actions of the State ABC Board.

Instead of referring to alleged violations of ABC laws by Jack's Drive-In owner John Buck, they continue to put the local chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha on trial whenever a hearing about the matter is held.

Typical of the reporting appearing in our state's newspapers is this paragraph printed in the papers Wednesday:

"A 'pajama' party' staged by a University of North Carolina fraternity will get another airing today before the State Board of Alcoholic Control."

We are inclined to believe that the so-called 'pajama party' does not concern the ABC Board, except for evidence growing out of it that Buck either did or did not violate provisions of law which the board enforces.

Consequently, it is not the 'pajama party' which is being aired, but rather charges against Buck that he permitted the use of alcoholic beverages on his property—where a North Carolina beer license was displayed.

A state ABC agent already has refuted his own statements about the early morning affair several weeks ago. If he now wants to press charges of ABC violations, then that is his business.

But by so doing he is not placing the Lambda Chi's on trial and the state newspapers should not imply so by their consistent misreporting and disinterest for the meat of the story — whether, in fact, John Buck has violated the ABC laws.

DESTINED TO BE POOR

The Farmers' Plight

The rich and the politicians always have the answers to solve the farmers' problem of keeping production in line with demand so as to provide a reasonable return for the man who plows the fields.

Sometimes, we'd rather go along with the politicians.

Down in El Paso, for example, a South Carolina cotton broker has urged more acreage for cotton production in order that the American textile industry can stay in competition with foreign textiles.

We guess that's a natural plan for a cotton broker. But what happens when acreage is increased, production goes up, prices go down, and more and more of the commodity is produced to fill the revenue gap for the farmer?

Well, first the cotton broker will be eating high on the hog. Then government purchases will soar to absorb the over-production and our storage expenditures will increase above the $1 million per day which the government currently invests for storage.

Finally, our textile industry may experience a temporary stimulus which will keep it in competition with other countries on the world market.

Our farmers, meanwhile, will suffer the loss. And it is doubtful that our patriotic cotton brokers will propose an increase in price for the farmer's commodity to help him keep pace with the economy.

But, then, we guess farmers were born to be poor, while cotton brokers are destined to the finer things in life.

LETTERS TO EDITOR

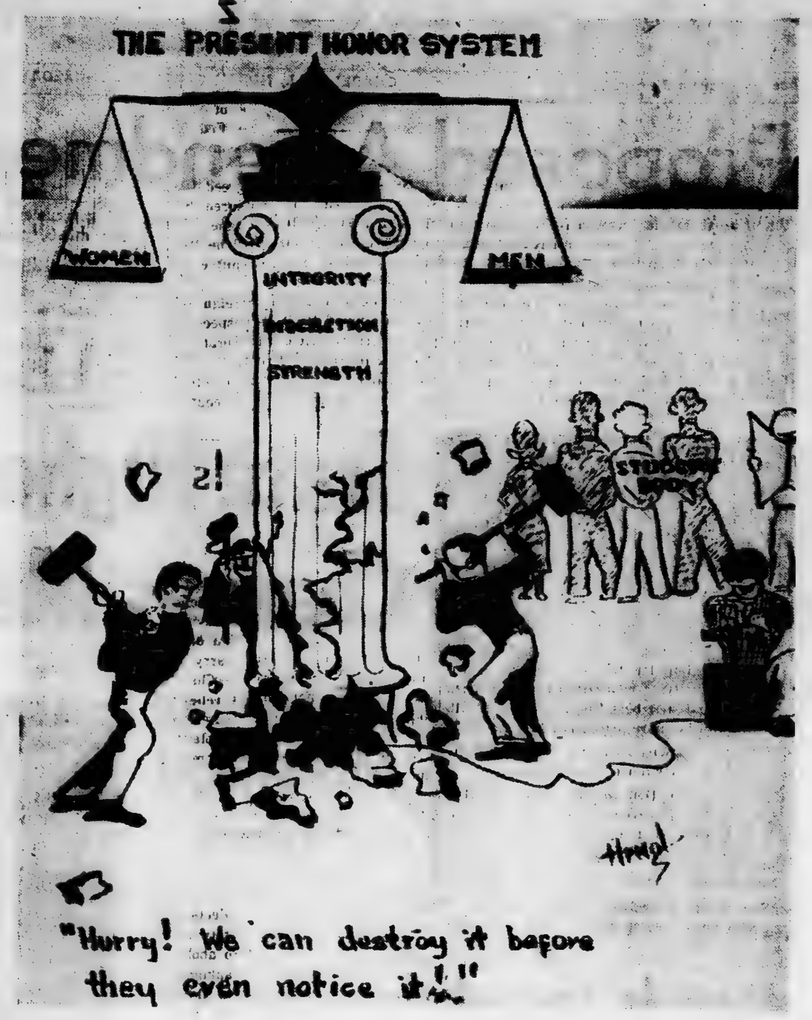
Reader Says He Will Vote For Revision

To the editor:

This is one observer who, after a period of silence, of listening, and of weighing various arguments, would like to go on record as whole-heartedly supporting the proposed honor council revision.

In establishing a judiciary, one of the largest goals is that of creating a court structure that will be consistent and fair in administering justice. The argument against a joint council on campus appears to be to the effect that a male student here is not capable of administering justice in the trial of a co-ed and vice-versa. Am I to infer from this argument that each sex is biologically incapable of differentiating between right and wrong in the case of the opposite sex? How does the sex of a defendant have anything to do with his honor?

As I see it, sex is sex, and honor is honor. I see no instance in which sex has any bearing as to whether or not a student is guilty of cheating, lying, or stealing. If a girl were accused of one of these offenses, I see no just cause in arguing that a male member of a joint council would be biased in his judgement of her.



I see no advantage in dividing a subject as universal as the choice between right and wrong into compartments. If there is any difference between a male students' honor and that of a co-ed, i.e., if separation is justified; why don't we separate dorm men's cases from fraternity men's cases, athlete's cases from non-athlete's cases; why don't we set aside a compartment for judging scholarship and self-help students? If we're going to divide honor into compartments, why pick a basis as irrelevant as sex?

It's as simple as this: if a boy and girl in the same class cheat on a quiz, they should be tried by the same court; this practice is not being followed now and should be enacted.

Rather than speculate about the effectivenes of a joint council, why doesn't anyone who is uncertain talk to people who have served on a joint council. The system of a joint council has worked here and is working elsewhere. If enough thinking people vote next week, we can take a big step in establishing equality in our honor system.

Dulles Reply Augurs Ill For U. S.

By CURTIS GANS

Tuesday, John Foster Dulles issued a negative reply to Russia's notes asking for a summit conference on world issues. The note in reply called the Soviet proposal a "hoax."

The question that should be raised is how long can the U. S. in general or the Secretary of State in particular continue to insult Russia and continue to hope for any peaceful settlement or a temporary end to the cold war that currently confronts the world.

The new Russian proposal gave in to the U. S. on the major point of whether to have a preliminary foreign minister's meeting, although the Russians, did not agree to discuss German unification.

The result of a summit conference will probably not be earth-shaking, and perhaps very little will be accomplished, yet even if nothing real is accomplished there may come out from such a conference a basis for agreement in the future.

The world is confronted now with a situation whereby the world could very well be made uninhabitable within a matter of hours. This may lead to a settlement in the near future in terms of fear, but perhaps a stalemate in terms of fear now will lead to a peaceful understanding in terms of mutual respect.

What Mr. Dulles is doing is to delay the progress of peace. What he is doing to the allies of the U. S. is equally bad.

When the Russians have shown the world that they are willing to compromise for the sake of "peace," the secretary of state has shown to the world that the U. S. is unwilling to budge an inch for peace.

Moreover, the secretary of state ends up by wording a note as crudely as is possible, and it is indeed a probability that the allies of the U. S. are currently feeling that if they make a proposal, they may be answered that such a proposal is just a "hoax."

The path that this type of action leads to is the alienation of all the allies of the U. S.

The necessity for the U. S. to show itself as willing to attain peace is all too evident. However, if action by Mr. Dulles continues in the same vein, the U. S. will not only lose allies and a chance to attain peace, but the future may be such that the U. S. will lose its identity to the Russians.

At this time the prospect for such a thing to happen is dim, however, with the still unpublished Gaither report hanging over the heads of U. S. statesmen, the time is now to change policy.

The future of democracy is at stake. The call for really positive action is in the air. It must be answered.

"Back To Methuselah" Doesn't Merit B'way

ANTHONY WOLFF

George Bernard Shaw, one of the finest critics of modern times, had one grievous failing: he tended to take himself too seriously. When he did, he came very close to being a bore; in such cases, his saving grace was his wit, which can make even the most ridiculous metaphysical theorizing almost bearable.

Shaw is reported to have considered "Back To Methuselah" his finest work. This must be considered a private judgment, for the play in its entirety is unavailable for comparison, either with his other works or with the body of works written for the stage. The printed script is three-hundred pages long; it is a considerable chore to read, and has never been mounted in a single production (at least not in this country). Since a play is by definition written for production on the stage, Shaw cannot be accused of writing a play—even a bad one: if he expected it to be produced in its entirety, and if he thought that an audience could endure it at one sitting, he was even more insane than he has been given credit for being.

In his preface to "Back To Methuselah," Shaw hopefully (poor dreamer!) calls it the "beginning of a Bible for Creative Evolution." As such, it is a practical but impracticable guide for human behavior.

Whatever its merits, either as a play or a philosophy, "Back To Methuselah" evidently appealed to Arnold Moss as a worthwhile venture for the Broadway stage. He cut it down to conventional size, and Shaw undoubtedly suffered in the process. (Shaw was more than competent enough to write a shorter play, if he thought that a shorter play would suffice; he was a magnificent wit, and one of the basic qualities of wit is its timing and its economy.)

So part of the blame for last weekend's fiasco must lie with Shaw's estate, which licensed Mr Moss' adaptation; Shaw is currently without any need for the funds, and it is safe to assume that he would be resting easier in his fiery hot beyond had this current venture been squelched by those who are appointed to act in his behalf post-mortem.

As a playwrite-critic, Shaw clothed his essays in dramatic form; he was skillful enough to make much of his work dramatically interesting as well as intellectually intriguing. By drastically reducing the bulk weight of the play, Arnold Moss also reduced and confused its intellectual thesis, blunted its wit, and transformed it into an illustrated slide-lecture by an amusing crack-pot social philosopher.

The idea of inserting Shaw himself into the play to act as narrator was not only artificial and theatrically disastrous; it also made disconcertingly obvious the fact that the proof of the thesis was far more interesting than the thesis itself—Shaw's diagnosis is perceptive, but his prognosis seems more like fanciful wish-fulfillment than logical forecasting. By forcing Shaw himself into the script, Mr. Moss made the old man's bluff quite transparent (as Shaw himself does in his lengthy preface to the original). Without the author on stage to explain his doctrine and preface his demonstration, the thesis might not have fallen apart so soon.

All that remained of value were moments of witty Shavian dialogue and some revelatory remarks about human frailty: insufficient light to relieve the obscure thinking, the slow pace and flat dialogue of the whole.

The acting, too, was uninspired. Shaw was so unkind to the actors as to require that they spend most of their time sucking their thumbs, gurgling and cooing, and generally disporting themselves like prematurely pubescent infants. To be sure, Shaw viewed his fellow men as precocious children, but to require of full-grown actors that they behave as such in order to make a living is a practical joke more cruel than funny. It was unavoidable, then, that Faye Emerson, as Eve, should bear a striking resemblance to Carol Channing as the Playmate of the Month, and that Tyrone Power, playing Adam, should be so like Tyrone Power playing Adam.

Arthur Treacher was at least allowed to appear at all times fully clothed and no more childish than adults are accustomed to being. Partially as a result of this advantage, but also due to his fine comic sense, his evening was the most successful.

Valerie Bettis was quite engaging as the Serpent, her most important role. Of the major actors, she was the only other who was consistently good.

Shaw's conception of Lilith was a rather arbitrary corruption of her mythological character; she appeared in this adaptation only briefly and at the very end, but she was commandingly played by M'el Dowd.

Faye Emerson and Tyrone Power were both most effective as the matured Adam and Eve in the second scene, but neither was particularly outstanding there or anywhere else. There just wasn't much for them to work with, and so it is impossible to decide whether they could have handled anything better or not.

As the self-supposedly omniscent Mr. Shaw, perpetrator of the whole shebang, Arnold Moss was perfectly competent. It was noble of him, after having the considerable nerve to write in a part for Mr. Shaw, to render himself fully accountable by also playing the part. It is impossible to avoid coming to the conclusion, even in light of Mr. Moss' skillful portrayal, that he was just as pale an imitation of Mr. Shaw as his adaptation was of the original work.

Roger Evan Boxill was the weakest member of the cast, perhaps through little fault of his own; unfortunately, in each of his three roles—Cain, Zozim, and Strephon—he was some variety or other of improbable idiot-child.

As Cain, he might well have shown at least some maturity, but he did not. Granted, Shaw wrote the part to demonstrate through Cain the childish stupidity of modern man; but a man who feels the need of a God and an after-life must be more aware of his predicament than Mr. Boxill's Cain seemed to be. A rather shallow performance.

In his other roles, Mr. Boxill gurgled and cooed as Mr. Shaw very probably intended him to do.

This production is scheduled to open on Broadway later this month.

Unless a miraculous metamorphosis occurs between then and now, it doesn't deserve an opening night; assuming that it passes that landmark safely, closing night may well ensue with alarming alacrity.

of married undergraduate students" for the legislature to decide.

It added that information it has indicates the cost of providing housing for a married student and his family "is from two and one-half to four times the cost of providing housing for a single student."

The board also pointed out that the Federal Home and Housing Finance Authority will "not make a loan to a single institution at a single campus in a single fiscal of more than three million dollars" and if State College exhausted "its full borrowing power on this project, it will be compelled to wait another year before it can hope to finance through HHFA any portion of the 800 beds which have been approved for unmarried students."

Financed Through Loans

The proposed housing at State would be financed through loans from the federal agency with rental used to pay off the costs.

Di Censures Actions Of Bernard Schwartz

By VIRGINIA SANDIDGE

The Dialectic Senate voted unanimously Tuesday night to censure Bernard Schwartz for his actions while council for the House Sub-committee on Legislative Oversight.

A discussion was held about the upcoming Dialectic - Philanthropic debates, and the body strongly asserted its intentions to keep the Robert B. House trophy this year. This trophy is given annually to the winner of the debates.

The background of the bill approved Tuesday night is that Bernard Schwartz, during the time he served on the House Sub-committee, was responsible for many unfounded and degrading accusations which provided much undue embarrassment to several persons of great integrity.

This attack has greatly and unduly lowered the prestige of such vital organizations as the Federal Communications Commission the group said.

The senators of the Di agreed that Schwartz should be censured for his attack on members of the FCC and the copies of their bill be sent to the House Sub-committee on Legislative Oversight.

Next week a bill on foreign aid will be debated, with respect to present congressional considerations. The president, Gary Greer, charged the members to "maintain a higher degree of vigilance in the execution of their duties."

Phi Unanimously Kills Bill Abolishing Greeks

By ED ROWLAND

Proponents of the UNC fraternity system rose up in indignation Tuesday night to defeat the Phi's bill calling for the abolishment of fraternitys and sororities, 11-0. Guests and members voting killed the bill even more convincingly, 27-1.

Persons speaking in favor of the bill abstained in the balloting.

Rep. Don Jacobs, chosen speaker of the evening for his delivery, charged that rules against hazing are not enforced. He cited a friend of his who was forced to eat raw oysters as evidence.

'Bad Points Outweigh Good'

"Fraternities promote snobbishness among their members,' Jacobs said. He said boys living in dorms are downgraded by fraternity men. "The bad points far outweigh the good points in these organizations," he concluded.

Dan Southerland asserted the final evaluation of these organizations lies with those who are members only. He declared that the bill should be defeated, nevertheless, for what he called the "sake of tradition."

Rep. Warren Coolidge, who introduced the bill, asked, "What is the purpose of this University—to get an education or the became socially prominent?" Coolidge charged that, "Dens of evil are creeping up around the fringes of this campus and must be abolished."

'Riotous Living'

He said members of fraternities have more cars than dorm residents, using them for "riotous living." Coolidge added, It has been heard that members of these fraternities drink intoxicating liquors. Perhaps names of some of them should be changed to Phi Kappa Schlitz, or Delta Sigma Budweiser."

Rep. Jim Tolbert commented Coolidge's statements by saying: "Dorm men also run up and down the highway in cars and carry on in places of "hospitality" in Chapel Hill." He said that from a reliable source he discovered fraternity members hold a higher scholastic average than the overall campus mark.

"As for discrimination," Tolbert chraged, "does not even the Constitution of North Carolina discriminate?"

Famous Fraternity Men

Henry Gould named famous members of fraternities and declared that to abolish the fraternity and sorority system would be to abolish the larger fraternity of mankind.

Ben Morgan said rational thinking about the problem has been hard to come by due to recent press statements, both in and out of Chapel Hill.

Bill Lineberry said fraternities come between their members and intellectual pursuits. He said he was told during rush by two ex-fraternity members "not to pledge," because parties and required activities take too much time.

Rep. David Matthews said the issue was being evaded. He added that fraternity membership does not interfere with studies.

"I'm not a member of one, but I don't study in the extra time I have. I waste as much time as anyone on campus. Relaxation is necessary," he added.

President Jess Stribling thanked those present for attending, in spite of what he called "a lessening of interest" in the problem in recent days. Out of 38 persons present, 10 abstained from voting on the question.

KING'S KORNER

DTH Sports Editor

And Now The Fireworks Begin

It's tournament time around the Atlantic Coast Conference again and today begins the event for which the eight schools that comprise the ACC have been preparing since way back at the first of December. This is the climax of the basketball season for all but one fortunate team and for the next three days a vicious battle for that position of fortune will ensue.

Actually only seven of the conference teams are eligible for that golden vacancy. N. C. State is on recruiting probation and can go no further than the finals of this tournament. But the Wolfpack will be in there battling hard to prove itself the best in the conference as will the rest of the teams.

There is no reason why this, the fifth annual tourney, should not be the best ever held. Certainly, the ACC has never been stronger than it is right now. Even the bookies are in a sweat about this one because there simply is no "logical" choice for champion. Any one of the top four teams, Duke, Carolina, State or Maryland could win it, and who can discount the bottom four clubs?

Attendence records for Reynolds Coliseum should go tumbling in the next three days. Three of the Big Four schools are favored to reach the semi-finals and nobody is forgetting about the tournament-toughy, Wake Forest. Even if the finals don't pit two Big Four schools together it should draw a sellout.

Coaches Not Doing Much Predicting

Meanwhile, as the prognosticators predict, the sportswriters analyze and the bookies shudder, the coaches of the eight schools go about lauding their first round opposition, chewing their fingernails and wishing it were July.

You won't find one single coach who'll predict a win for his club. They're all playing this thing one at a time because that's the only way it can be done. An optimistic coach right about now is as hard to find as a tatoo on a bird's leg.

The boys of the coaching lodge are using the proverbial crying towel now, but when Carolina and Clemson start the ball rolling at 2 o'clock this afternoon, thoughts of the season and its hardships will be forgotten and every ounce of energy will be directed at walking off the Coliseum Court with that championship trophy and a ticket to New York for the District game with Boston College Tuesday night.

McGuire Thinks Attitude Is Good

What does Frank McGuire, coach of the defending National Champs, have to say about the tournament? That question was put to McGuire yesterday.

"I think the boys will be up for the tournament," he commented. "I believe they're going into it with the right attitude. Our thoughts have all been directed at Clemson because we don't know who we'll have to play if we get by them," he continued.

McGuire and his boys looked at pictures of their two games with Clemson Tuesday. The Tar Heels won them both but had a tough time in the second half of the first game and all of the second game. "We know they can be very tough," McGuire said. "They played some good ball against us and we're certainly not going to take them lightly."

McGuire figures that if his club can play as it did in winning the Dixie Classic, it will do all right in the ACC. "We played some of our finest ball in the Classic," McGuire said, "and I just hope we can do it again."

All Predictions Weren't Right

McGuire paused a minute to look back over the season. His appraisal was that "It's been a good year for us." The congenial Tar Heel, via Brooklyn, recalled that he had stated before the season that he expected the worst after last year's fantastic feat.

Right after he said that Joe Quigg broke his leg and freshman ace York Larese was declared out for the season because of a knee operation. "I wasn't really shocked," McGuire recalls ,"because I had anticipated some bad luck. Joe's loss has been obvious throughout the season but the boys have played some very fine ball and I'm proud of them."

One of McGuire's pre-season predictions didn't materialize and he admits it with a hearty grin. "They didn't go into a tailspin at the last of the season as I thought they would," he said. "Yes," concluded McGuire, "all things considered we've had a good year."

AP Honors Brennan, Kearns

Pete Brennan received second-string honors and Tommy Kearns third string on the AP's All-American team released yesterday.

The first team was unique in two respects. First, four of the five are Negroes and secondly, there is only one senior on the team. The four Negroes are Oscar Robinson of Cincinnati, Elgin Baylor of Seattle, Guy Rodgers of Temple and Wilt Chamberlain of Kansas. Pitt's great 5-8½ guard Don Hennon is the fifth man. Rodgers is the only senior.

The AP All-American selections are generally conceded the best, however there are still many A-A teams left to come in. There is a very good chance that Brennan might make the first team on another selection and that Kearns might move up a notch. Brennan's 20.8 scoring average did not help him. Although it was tops in the conference, it was far below some of the amazing averages that the bigger boys compiled.

In our opinion, there was not one A-A selection that played consistently in the tough company that Brennan faced in the ACC. Pete was not on the first team, but we're laying odds he can hold his own and maybe even better anything the first five can do.

AP All-American Selects Brennan On Second Team; Kearns On Third Team

NEW YORK, March 5. (AP)—Negroes for the first time dominated the All-America basketball team selected for the Associated Press by 316 sports writers and sports broadcasters representing all sections of the nation.

There are four on the first team announced today—Wilt Chamberlain of Kansas, Oscar Robertson of Cincinnati, Elgin Baylor of Seattle, and Guy Rodgers of Temple.

The fifth man is Don Hennon, Pitt's little 5-8½ star.

Negroes have made the first team in the past but never more than two. The rise of Negroes to prominence in college basketball follows similar stardom in baseball, boxing, football and track.

Chamberlain, a junior named to the A-A for the second straight year, led the voting with 1,592 points and 297 first team votes on the basis of five for a first team vote and two for a second team placing.

Stars For Cincy

Robertson, a sophomore who put Cincinnati back on the basketball map, was second with 1,330 and 256 firsts. Baylor was third with 1,327 and 249 first. Rodgers had 975 and 172 first and Hennon 717 and 109 firsts. No one else came near getting 100 firsts.

Bob Boozer, Kansas State's Negro star, was named on a second team along with Archie Dees, Indiana star; Bailey Howell of Mississippi State; Lloyd Sharrar of West Virginia and Pete Brennan of Carolina.

Jerry West, West Virginia sophomore; Tommy Kearns, Carolina; Mike Farmer, San Francisco; Johnny Green, Michigan State and Tom Hawkins, Notre Dame comprise a third team.

These top 15 players each will receive a certificate from the Associated Press.

Additional Honors

Headed by Barney Cable of Bradley; Hub Reed, Oklahoma City; Jack Parr, Kansas State, Red Murrell, Drake and Jack Kubiszyn, Alabama, 21 additional players received honorable mention.

While the 7-ft. Chamberlain showed tremendous overall improvement over his sophomore year, the greatest praise went to Robertson.

A newcomer on the national scene, Oscar fulfilled all advance notices in leading Cincinnati to the championship of the Missouri Valley Conference and in being one of the top scorers of the year.

"His reflexes are wonderful," beamed his coach, George Smith. "He throws baskets with either hand, pivots and reverses with tremendous speed. He can be assisting a teammate and still cover his own man. He can do about anything on the court."

Only One Senior

"He is the greatest player I ever coached" Smith added with pardonable pride.

Similar "greatest" labels were pinned on Baylor, Chamberlain and Rodgers by their coaches and the athletes made the comment stand up by their superlative performances.

Chi Psi-Law School-2 Wins Grail Mural

By DAVE WIBLE

The First Annual Grail Mural Sports Jamboree came to a close last night with Chi Psi-Law School-2 emerging as the team champion.

Four tournaments were won by the combination Chi Psi's and lawyers to give them the title and the right to a steak dinner at Watts next Monday night. Zeta Psi-Cobb-2 followed close behind for second with PiKA- Alexander coming in third.

The Jamboree was termed as a success by Coach Walter Rabb head of the intramural department. "I believe that every one had a good time, and I sincerely believe that the Jamboree was worth while and will be an affair to look foreward to next year." Coach Rabb Said.

Last night's action rounded out the round robin tournaments that were started Tuesday night. The meet came to a climax with the running of the relays in which all teams participated. The overall point totals were so close that the winner was decided in the relays which were designed to make the teams work for a first.

The banquet Monday night will be in honor of the winning team, and trophies will be presented to the individual winners in each event.

Wrestling Meet Begins Tomorrow

Carolina has never won an ACC wrestling championship, but the Tar Heels are the only team in the conference which has sent a complete entry to the tournament every year since the formation of the ACC.

The fourth annual conference show-of-strength is slated to be held on the University of Maryland campus at College Park tomorrow and Saturday. The Tar Heels will once again enter a grappler in each of the ten weight divisions.

Maryland Favored

Maryland, the terror of the loop,

will once again be the odds on favorite to repeat as tourney champ, but if there is any strength in numbers, the Tar Heels can't be counted out of the running.

The Carolina wrestlers finished this season with a 6-4 overall record and their first winning season in eleven years. In ACC competition the Tar Heels compiled a 3-2 record by whipping all their Big Four opponents while losing to Virginia and Maryland.

Although Perrin Henderson is out of the meet because of a shoulder injury, Coach Sam Barnes has several top entries who have proved themselves against conference competition this year. By juggling his lineup for the tourney, Barnes hopes to better the fourth place finish that the team made last year.

Atkinson At 157

David Atkinson is one of the Tar Heels who will bear watching in the upcoming event. The Asheville Junior, who recorded a 7-3 bout record this season, will wrestle in 157 pound class rather than the 177 division where he performed during the regular season.

J. W. Welborn will drop one class and take Henderson's spot in the 137 division. A sophomore from Boone, Welborn surprised Barnes this year by winning 10 times in nine trips to the mat. Henry Rhyne a winner in his last two bouts, is scheduled to represent the Tar Heels in the 130 pound class.

The rest of the lineup will be composed of David Wall at 115, Curt Champlin at 123, and Ronnie Purdy at 145 followed by Ray Russell, Kenny Hoke, Rob Boyette ,and Larry Hayes in the four heaviest wegiht classes.

Golf Qualifying

Golf coach Chuck Erickson has announced that freshman and varsity golf candidates will begin qualifying on Monday, March 10 at Finley. The season opens against N. C. State on March 25.

ON DAMES AND ALL THAT

One thing that delights your sentimental old Intimate Bookshop is the number of nice looking chick-a-biddies we see scratching around our intellectual feed trough.

There's no doubt that a good-looking wench does wonders at perking up the scenery, but it's doubly nice to know that she has brains, too.

Perhaps it is true that marriages are made in Heaven, but we'd like to add that a powerful lot of engagements are made in the old bookshop. Looking back across the years, we remember the couples who first began showing signs of love's wooziness about this season, and we'd like to lay a fat bet that those pairings have proven more enduring and satisfying than most.

We like to think that when the social tinsel of college wears thin, the common bond of shared books and culture goes on and on and on.

Shux! Our eyes are all red and we haven't sold a single book!
